Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I was going to say that this case is not equivalent to the loss of both legs or both arms.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Nor does the bill propose to give him such a pension as a person would be entitled to who had lost both arms.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMELINE L. FITCH.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I desire unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7869) granting a pension to Emeline L. Fitch.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Emeline L. Fitch, widow of John T. Fitch, late of Company D, Seventh Indiana Volunteers, subject to the conditions and restrictions of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID COMPROPST.

Mr. FUNSTON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 4766) granting a pension to David Compropst.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David Compropst, late a sergeant of Company E, One hundred and seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the report in that case, if it is not read, should be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

We find that claimant enlisted August 11, 1862, and was discharged June 21, 1865. He made application for pension March 31, 1871, which was rejected July 23, 1872, on the ground of "no record, and inability to furnish evidence showing treatment in service," &c. Claimant alleges inflammatory rheumatism contracted at Glasgow, Ky., May, 1863; says he was treated in hospital at same place in May and June, 1863, and in hospital at Wilmington, N. C., in April and May, 1865. Adjutant-General's report shows sick at Glasgow, Ky., June 23, 1863. John Carrell, John A. Lefever, and Thomas Albert testify that claimant was a sound, healthy man at enlistment, that he became disabled with inflammatory rheumatism at Glasgow, Ky., in May, 1863, from exposure while on picket duty.

Lieut. Griffin N. Bruffet, of the same company, testifies fully and explicitly as to the incurrence of the disability in service, and that he was treated in two hospitals for the disease, and that he was often off duty during the rest of his service on account of said disability, and that claimant has never since discharge been able to do hard work. Surgeon Wright, of same regiment, says claimant was sound at enlistment; that he was sick and under his treatment in the service; but that he can not say when, where, or for what disease. R. H. Dillehart testifies that he knew claimant as a sound, healthy man at enlistment; saw him soon after discharge, and he was suffering from rheumatism. "I have lived near him ever since, and know that he has suffered from inflammatory rheumatism ever since."

Other witnesses testify to continuance to present time. The evidence on this point is very abundant and conclusive. Dr. James E. Roberts, whom claimant says treated him from time of discharge to 1870, is dead, having died about 1873 or 1874. Two witnesses testify that they know that Dr. Roberts treated him during the time claimed.

Your committee regard this case as an unusually strong one, and are unable to understand why it was not allowed in the Pension Office. They recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that this is one of the strongest cases that I have ever seen, and it is a wonder that the Pension Office did not grant the pension.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN C. CLARK.

Mr. PETERS. I call up the bill (H. R. 3052) for the relief of John C. Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to pay to John C. Clark, as arrears of pension, a sum of money equal to $4 per month from January 1, 1863, to July 1, 1882.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out in line 4 the word "as."

Strike out in lines 4 and 5 the words "a sum of money equal to $4 per month" and insert after the words "eighty-two," in line 7, the words "the rating to be determined by the Pension Department from the evidence of disability on file."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Let the bill be read as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk reported the bill as proposed to be amended.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think my friend had better not press that bill to-night.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to make a brief statement in relation to it, which I think will be satisfactory.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PETERS. This is a case, Mr. Chairman, in which the application was made prior to the taking effect of the law cutting off arrears. The evidence showing that the application was made and that a receipt for the application had been sent by the Department is, I think, overwhelming. A comrade who sent his application at the same time received his receipt at the same time and received his pension, which of course gave him arrears. The application in this case was sent to the Pension Department, and there, by reason of some delay in consequence apparently of the loss on the part of the Pension Department of the papers for the application, which could not be found when the evidence was sent in, this man was deprived of his pension until too late to entitle him to arrears. And after the man had prepared his testimony he was informed by the Pension Department his application was not on file; and that of course cut him out of arrears.

Now there were the two cases exactly in point; the applications both filed at the same time. In one of them the papers were lost by the Pension Department; in the other the papers were retained and the man obtained the arrears of pension.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman why were not the lost papers substituted?

Mr. PETERS. Because the Pension Department under its rules would not do that.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Does the Pension Bureau hold that a lost paper can not be substituted?

Mr. PETERS. That is what they hold; that a lost paper can not be substituted.

A new application was made. The party did not find out his papers were lost till nearly a year afterward, and he had to make a new application. His pension was obtained, but he could only draw from the date of the new application.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. It is a right hard matter when a man files his application just a day or an hour after the statute runs. Men of that kind think it is very hard for them to be cut out of their back pay.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama, as showing the reluctance with which this House has granted arrears under any circumstances, that this kind of a case was presented: The party lived in this city. The husband, disabled in the line of duty, died from the effects of wounds received in the service. Before his death he sent for an officer employed in the Government service to come and take his affidavit to his application. He died supposing his application was on file, but the attorney had failed to file it till a few days after his death. And in that case no arrears were allowed by the Pension Office, and the arrears were refused.

This was as strong a case as can be put. The rule adopted by this House has been that where it grants help to an individual in a special case it will not grant arrears; and to grant the application made here by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] is to override what has been the uniform practice of the House.

Mr. PETERS. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the distinction between his case and mine. In his case the fault was that of the attorney, and that in law would be the fault of the principal. But in this case it was not the fault of the attorney.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will present another case where it was not the fault of the attorney. Another application was made to this House where the papers forwarded in time did not, through some defect in the mails, arrive before the expiration of the arrears act; and this House refused to grant the arrears in that case, although it was shown there was no fault on the part of the applicant.

Mr. PETERS. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that these papers were received by the Pension Department before the limitations of the law took effect; but they were lost by the Pension Department. In the case the gentleman speaks of, through some defect in the mail, the papers did not arrive in time; but here they did arrive in time and were lost by the Department through the negligence of its officers.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Was any application made to substitute the lost papers?

Mr. PETERS. I think not; because the rule of the Department was that they would not consider any such application.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not see why a mandamus from the court would not lie to compel an executive officer to allow the substitution of papers in such a case.

Mr. PETERS. But a man making this application is not likely to have money enough to carry that out as against the Government.

Mr. MATSON. There are precedents for this case. The case referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], who served in the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the Forty-seventh Congress, is perhaps correctly stated. I remember very distinctly the case of Meredith, which I reported myself in the Forty-seventh Congress, where the report of the committee was precisely the other way; where it was shown clearly that the application was lost in passing through the mails, and arrears were granted. The form of the bill, however, was somewhat different from the form proposed here, but the effect was the same.

In the case of Dobson, another case reported in the Forty-seventh Congress, when the gentleman from Tennessee and I were both members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, it was shown the original formal declaration was sent to Dobson's member of Congress, but instead of filing it with the Commissioner of Pensions, as he was directed by the letter to do, he filed it with the committee, and the formal declaration was found on the files of this House. There the Forty-seventh Congress directed the Commissioner of Pensions to readjudicate Dobson's claim as if he had filed it on the 1st day of July, 1880.

There was another case, the case of Cullen, reported in the same Congress, where it was shown very clearly and distinctly that the application had been lost in the mails. That is this case, as I remember it. In this case the proof shows that the application, after having been mailed by the claimant, was lost in the mails.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will allow me to correct him, I will remind him that the proof is that the case was actually received in the Department before the 1st of July, 1880. The Department acknowledged the receipt of it. Two men swear that they saw that acknowledgment and that it was dated in that way.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman is correct; I now remember that fact. So that this is really a stronger case than the others. I ought to say further that this bill was not reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions until after they had made a most thorough examination of it, until after the case had been considered and reconsidered, and the committee felt fully satisfied that the testimony of the witnesses could be relied upon. We were extremely careful about it, and it was not until we had examined it in this thorough manner that we were willing to take action on such a case as this. We followed in the line of the precedents set by prior Congresses. Let me say further that I believe this is the only case reported by the present Committee on Invalid Pensions recommending the passage of a bill to grant arrears, and in this case we do it upon the distinct ground that the claimant had done everything that he could do to entitle himself to the benefit of the arrears act.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to add one thing further. The last case that came under the old law, as I understand it, was No. 407856. The case that was sent to the Department at the same time this application was sent received the number 378269; so that a large number of cases were received after that and prior to the time when the law repealing the arrears went into effect.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I want to remind the committee of another precedent, which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] will remember. Last Friday evening the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] called up a case, and the bill was passed, in which arrears were allowed to a widow on the ground that the Commissioner of Pensions, prior to July 1, 1880, had decided that she was not entitled to a pension. She had never made a formal application——

Mr. MATSON. That case did not come from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MORRILL. No; but from the Committee on Pensions. The lady had applied to the Commissioner, and he had decided that her husband was not an enlisted man. Subsequently the Attorney-General decided that he was an enlisted man and was entitled to a pension. The Commissioner of Pensions recommended that arrears should be granted, and this House on last Friday evening passed the bill. In this case the evidence is that the man complied strictly with the law. He filed his application before the 1st of July, 1880, and is entitled to arrears just as much as any one of the 407,856 other applicants for arrears.

Mr. McMILLIN. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that the case presented by the gentleman is stronger than any of the others that have been presented; but, in order that this may not be taken as a precedent for the granting of arrears, I desire to state again that it has been the uniform custom of this House not to grant them. Where such bills have gone through they have generally slipped through without receiving the attention that is ordinarily given to such matters, and I presume it will be so hereafter. In this case, however, it seems that the application was actually sent to the Department and received there in time.

Mr. MORRILL. And actually acknowledged by the Department.

Mr. McMILLIN. And acknowledged by the Department. Therefore no injury can result from this case as a precedent; but I do not admit that the House is committed to a policy that goes beyond this; on the contrary, I hold that it is not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a single remark, or rather to put a single query, and that is, how it is possible for the Pension Office upon such a state of facts to decline to grant the arrears?

Mr. MORRILL. They say they have no papers upon which to grant them.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then all I have to say is that there is a very great infirmity in the regulations of that office.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I shall not insist upon a vote by a quorum in this case, because I think it is one in which the Commissioner of Pensions ought to have allowed the pension and the arrears. I wish, however, to remind my friend from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] that the case from the Committee on Pensions which came up last Friday night was a very unfortunate one, in which the committee, I think, should not have reported favorably. The gentleman will remember that, although the bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions, I opposed it and voted against it.

Mr. MORRILL. Does not the gentleman consider this a much stronger case than that?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Infinitely so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to offer a substitute which I think will be for the benefit of the claimant, and within the line of bills of this kind heretofore passed. I will read my proposed substitute for the information of the Committee of the Whole:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to readjudicate the pension claim of John C. Clark, late of Company ——, —— Regiment —— Volunteers, as if the same had been filed in the Pension Office prior to the 1st day of July, 1880.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is that the amendment which the gentleman proposes?

Mr. MATSON. Yes, sir; I understand that this man has obtained a pension since.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Ought not the proposed amendment to show that the application was received in the office prior to that time?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. That would not properly be any part of the bill.

Mr. MATSON. The report will show that. This is the form used heretofore in cases of this kind.

Mr. PETERS. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to read his substitute again.

Mr. MATSON again read the proposed substitute.

Mr. PETERS. I see no objection to that.

The question being taken on the subsitute of Mr. MATSON, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH R. DODDS.

Mr. WEAVER. I call up the bill (H. R. 7769) to grant a pension to Joseph R. Dodds.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph R. Dodds, late a private in Company K, Seventh Regiment of Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7769) to grant a pension to Joseph R. Dodds, submit the following report:

Your committee find that claimant enlisted August 29, 1862, in Company K, Seventh Regiment Iowa Cavalry; that he was discharged August 28, 1865, and that he filed declaration for pension December 15, 1879, alleging "kidney disease, resulting from being alkalied at Bijou Hills, Dak., October, 1863."

Lieut. John C. Rutan, of same company and regiment, testifies:

"I knew J. R. Dodds at the time of his joining said company; that he was physically sound and in good health; that on the line of march from Fort Randall to Fort Sully he was so badly affected by alkali as to be entirely unfit for service."

Dr. Louis Waldter testifies:

"I served in the same command with J. R. Dodds, formerly of Company K, Seventh Iowa Regiment; that we were together at Vigo Lake, Dakota, when the said J. R. Dodds became alkalied by being compelled to use the water from said lake. I found by examination of other points of the lake and surrounding country any amount of crystallized alkali—no other kind of water for miles around to be had; that previous to said time of being alkalied he was physically sound and free from disease of any kind; that since that time he has been and still is totally unable to perform manual labor or follow his former avocation, and that in my practice in the treatment of chronic diseases I have been consulted, and that I believe his kidneys to be so affected by reason of said alkali as to render a cure impossible."

Charles T. Taylor says, under oath:

"I have personally known J. R. Dobbs, formerly of Company K, Seventh Iowa Cavalry; that he was treated by Dr. J. Noel for kidney disease and urinary trouble; that I have conversed with the doctor in reference to his case, and he said the alkali had so thoroughly impregnated his system that no remedy could be used known to the medical profession but what would have a tendency to resolve the case into Bright's disease of the kidneys; that said Dr. J. Noel died in June, 1882."

Claimant gives a full account of the circumstances under which he drank the water, and adds:

"At this time and previous to drinking this alkali water I weighed one hundred and eighty-six pounds; that thereafter my kidneys became affected; my urinary organs became deranged; * * * my hair came out and some of my toe-nails came off; that I was reduced to a mere skeleton of my former self, so that I weighed but one hundred and twenty pounds; that I was totally incapacitated from doing military duty or to follow my usual avocation since discharge; that I have been treated since my discharge from the service by Dr. Jesse Noel; that he is now dead; * * * that I was treated while in the service at Fort Sully by the post surgeon, E. J. Farr, regimental surgeon of the Thirtieth Wisconsin Volunteers; that while I was under his care during the winter I was not required to remain at the hospital, but merely to report to him in person mornings, and was allowed to do such light duty as I chose to do; that in the fall of 1864 I was taken to Sioux City, Iowa, and given the privilege of receiving my discharge for disability or remaining a clerk in the ordnance department; that I remained as such clerk until the expiration of my term of service."

The hospital records prior to 1866 are not on file, so no evidence can be obtained from that quarter. The examining surgeon at Phelps, Mo., August 23, 1881, reported his disability total. At a subsequent examination at Beatrice, Nebr., the board report that "we think this man's trouble is due to enlargement of the prostate, and not disease of the kidneys." Upon the strength of this report the Pension Office rejected the case in this language: "Disability due to enlargement of the prostate gland incident to old age." Claimant was 22 years of age at the time of his enlistment and contracted the disease from which he has ever since suffered one year later. The Pension Office decides that the enlargement of the prostate gland was due to old age. The evidence shows that he contracted the disease while in the line of duty; that he has suffered from it ever since, and it surely makes very little difference in his suffering whether the disease is called by one name or another.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELBERT HEWITT.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I call up the bill (H. R. 7672) granting an increase of pension to Elbert Hewitt.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to increase the pension heretofore allowed to Elbert Hewitt, late a private in Company C, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, from $24 to $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire) was as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 7672, having considered the same, make the following report:

Elbert Hewitt, late a private in Company C, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteers, now pensioned at $24 per month, wants an increase to $50 per month. He was disabled by a gunshot wound in the face, received in battle September 19, 1864. Dr. James E. Morse, pension surgeon, gives the following description of the injury:

"Lower jaw fractured in three points; upper front teeth carried away and most of all the lower ones gone; nose greatly injured and great deformity of the face; mastication greatly impaired, and he is suffering with dyspepsia in consequence. Has discharges from his nose and throat of a bloody, purulent matter, which is very offensive to himself and those around him."

The pensioner is also very much debilitated, and able to perform but little labor. Dr. Davis, examining surgeon, in 1873, reports the loss of twelve teeth, chronic ulcer of the malar bone, and bad disfigurement of the face, in addition to his other ailments. The examining board at White River Junction, October 27, 1884, also report, additional to the above, that it is impossible for his teeth to meet by reason of the narrowing of the lower jaw. The pensioner is poor, and able to perform but very little labor.

Your committee think his case a deserving one, and recommend the passage of the bill (H. R. 7672) granting him an increase, amending the same by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting "forty," in line 6.

The amendment reported by the committee to strike out "$50" and insert "$40" was read and agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think some reason should be given why this bill should pass.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. This soldier was shot through the face and his teeth knocked out. He is suffering from the loss of his teeth and the breaking of his jaw. He has a chronic ulcer of the malar bone. He is also suffering from dyspepsia on account of inability to masticate properly his food.

This is a case in which, it seems to me, the increase of pension ought properly to have been granted by the Pension Office; but the soldier has been allowed only $24 a month. He is a poor man and unable to work. The committee, although not in favor of allowing $50 a month, have recommended unanimously the allowance of $40.

Mr. BAGLEY. The man is very badly disfigured.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. Yes, sir. His photograph was before the committee, and he is one of the worst disfigured men I ever saw.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CLARK G. MAINE.

Mr. PARKER. I call up the bill (H. R. 7000) for the relief of Clark G. Maine.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Clark G. Maine, late a private in Battery E, First New York Light Artillery.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar had had under consideration, pursuant to order, sundry bills on the Private Calendar reported by the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with various recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 6948) granting a pension to George Eagles;
A bill (H. R. 8133) granting a pension to Thomas McGill;
A bill (H. R. 3901) granting a pension to Mrs. Olive W. Parker;
A bill (H. R. 7524) granting a pension to Lavisa Heth;
A bill (H. R. 7602) granting a pension to Harriet M. Bailey;
A bill (H. R. 7822) granting a pension to Mark Spencer Van Loan;
A bill (H. R. 7803) granting a pension to L. W. Pitts;
A bill (H. R. 8132) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Rachel A. Queen;
A bill (H. R. 8104) granting increase of pension to George S. Hawley;
A bill (H. R. 3185) granting a pension to David Peterson;
A bill (H. R. 5929) for the relief of Abigail Honey;
A bill (H. R. 252) granting a pension to Peter N. Hagler;
A bill (H. R. 8033) granting increase of pension to George W. Clark;

A bill (H. R. 7869) granting a pension to Emeline L. Fitch;
A bill (H. R. 4766) granting a pension to David Compropst;
A bill (H. R. 7769) granting a pension to Joseph R. Dodds; and
A bill (H. R. 7000) for the relief of Clark G. Maine.

Amendments to bills of the following titles were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 7386) granting a pension to Eliza M. Byers;
A bill (H. R. 6653) granting a pension to Mary C. Axline;
A bill (H. R. 8038) granting a pension to Harriet A. B. Corts;
A bill (H. R. 2540) granting a pension to Priscilla J. Small;
A bill (H. R. 7722) granting a pension to Elmira K. Parker;
A bill (H. R. 7724) granting a pension to Lydia Wetherbee;
A bill (H. R. 7836) for the relief of Mrs. Ida P. Belcher;
A bill (H. R. 7805) granting a pension to Capt. Vincent Phelps;
A bill (H. R. 3052) for the relief of John C. Clark;
A bill (H. R. 7672) granting an increase of pension to Elbert Hewitt; and
A bill (H. R. 4216) granting a pension to David Bryan; the title of which was amended to read: "A bill granting a pension to David N. Bryan."
A bill (H. R. 1091) granting an increase of pension to Sophia A. Morgan, widow of the late Charles H. Morgan, a brevet brigadier-general in the United States Army.

The title was amended to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Sophia A. Morgan, widow of the late Charles H. Morgan, a brevet brigadier-general in the United States Army and brigadier-general of volunteers."

Senate bills of the following titles were severally ordered to a third reading; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 1111) granting an increase of pension to Sally Rodman, widow of General Isaac P. Rodman; and
A bill (S. 468) granting increased pension to Mrs. Mary K. S. Eaton.

JOHN A. VANDERHOFF.

The amendment to the bill (H. R. 7256) granting a pension to John A. Vanderhoff was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the agreement, the previous question will be considered as ordered on the passage of the bill.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the several votes; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to; and then, on motion of Mr. MATSON (at 10 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAYNE: Remonstrance of Dilworth, Porter & Co., McCandless, Jameson & Co., William Shannon & Son, McCard & Co., and 120 others, merchants and manufacturers, representing all branches of business in Pittsburgh, Pa., against the enactment of another bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Petition of Widow J. B. Planché, of Natchitoches Parish, Louisiana, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Ida M. Wells and others, of the Parish of Rapides, Louisiana, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the same committee.

By Mr. J. H. BREWER: Petition of H. T. Knox, of Burlington, N. J., for increase of pension, arrears, &c.—to Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. W. W. BROWN: Memorial of Clarence W. De Knight, praying for payment due him as page of the House of Representatives during a portion of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Detroit, asking that the United States acquire title to the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Companies' ship-canals and make the same free of tolls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. EVERHART: Resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, recommending passage of foreign-contract-labor bill—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, recommending the repeal of act of July 22, 1876, by which the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar was abrogated—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, resolution of the National Board of Trade, favoring the Senate bankrupt bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FOLLETT: Petition of soldiers of North Baltimore and Perrysburg, Ohio, for passage of bill giving land to honorably discharged soldiers of the late war—to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

By Mr. FOLLETT: Petition of John A. Coan, for compensation for two horses and bridles taken from him in 1864 by United States officers—to the Committee on War Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 31, 1885.

The House met at 12 m., and was called to order by the Clerk.

The CLERK. In the absence of the Speaker it is the duty of the Clerk to call the House to order.

ELECTION OF MR. BLACKBURN AS SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following resolution as a question of privilege.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, be, and he is hereby, elected Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to; and Mr. BLACKBURN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by Rev. Dr. FULLERTON, of Georgetown.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JOHN M. LOBBAN.

Mr. POST, of Wyoming, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8143) for the relief of John M. Lobban; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SUITS FOR DAMAGES WHERE DEATH RESULTS.

On motion of Mr. POLAND, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia was taken from the Speaker's table, and the following amendment of the Senate was read:

Strike out the following:

"That when the death of a person is caused in the District of Columbia by the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured to maintain an action and recover damages in respect thereof, the person or corporation liable to such action if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages notwithstanding the death of the person injured, and although the death is caused under such circumstances as amount in law to a felony.

"SEC. 2. That such action shall be brought in the name of the personal representative of such deceased person, and commence within two years from the decease of such person; and the court or jury before whom the issue is tried may give such damages as are just, with reference to the pecuniary injury resulting from such death to the wife and next of kin, but not to exceed $10,000; and the amount recovered shall be for the benefit of such wife and next of kin, who shall receive the same proportions as in the distribution of the personal estate of persons dying intestate."

And in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That whenever, within the limits of the District of Columbia, the death of a person shall be caused by the wrongful act, neglect, or default of any person or corporation, and the act, neglect, or default is such as would, if death had not ensued, have entitled the party injured, or, if the person injured be a married woman, have entitled her husband, either separately or by joining with the wife, to maintain an action and recover damages, the person who or corporation which would have been liable if death had not ensued shall be liable to an action for damages, notwithstanding the death of the person injured, even though the death shall have been caused under circumstances which constitute a felony: Provided, That in no case shall the recovery exceed the sum of $10,000.

"SEC. 2. That every such action shall be brought by and in the name of the personal representative of such deceased person, and within two years after the death of the party injured.

"SEC. 3. That the damages recovered in such action shall not be appropriated to the payment of the debts or liabilities of such deceased person, but shall inure to the benefit of his or her family, and be distributed according to the provisions of the statute of distributions in force in said District of Columbia."

Mr. POLAND moved that the amendment be disagreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND moved that the House ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. POLAND, Mr. TUCKER, and Mr. DORSHEIMER.

WICKLIFFE COOPER.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 2278, correcting the military record of Wickliffe Cooper, deceased, late major Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel, United States Army, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct so much of the record of the War Department as states that the late Maj. Wickliffe Cooper, Seventh Cavalry, committed suicide on the 8th of June, 1867, and to substitute therefor the following words: "Died by hand of person or persons unknown, while in the line of his duty as an officer of the Army."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if this has been considered by the Military Committee of the House?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not know that it has been considered by the committee of the House; but it passed the Senate at the last session of this Congress and is now on the Speaker's table.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to object to the passage of the bill; but I think such measures should be considered by the committees of the House before action is taken by the House upon them.

Mr. ROBERTSON. This, I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, only corrects the war record of this officer. He is recorded in the office as having committed suicide, whereas proof, which has been subsequently placed before the Department, shows that he was killed in the line of duty. This is to correct the record.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBERTSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I ask leave to call up from the Speaker's table a House bill for present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana demands the regular order.

Before proceeding with the regular order the Chair asks unanimous consent of the House to submit certain executive communications now on the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

CORRECTION.

Mr. DUNHAM. Before that I desire to make a correction. I supposed that I was paired on yesterday when a yea-and-nay vote was taken in the House, and it was so understood; but the RECORD contains no announcement of such a pair. I desire to state that had I not supposed I was paired I should have voted "ay" on the Bigley bill.

ARMY AND NAVY HOSPITAL, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation to complete the Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING FOR THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a letter from the chief-justice of the Court of Claims, asking an appropriation for printing for the court for the current and next fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR CERTAIN PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a letter from the Supervising Architect, and recommending additional appropriations for the public buildings at Kansas City, Mo., Cleveland, Ohio, and Boston, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JEFFERSON, MO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect, asking an increase in the limit of cost of the public building at Jefferson City, Mo.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INFANTRY SERVICE, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing a communication from the infantry officers of the Army, relative to the passage of Senate bill 2442 to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MILITIA FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting an abstract of the militia forces of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

GLOUCESTER HARBOR, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing reports from the Chief of Engineers of the survey and preliminary examination of Gloucester Harbor, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business has been demanded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, for the present I will withdraw the demand for the regular order.

HUGH AND BYRD DOUGLAS, DECEASED.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8034) for the relief of the estates of Hugh and Byrd Douglas, deceased, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of Hugh and Byrd Douglas, deceased, late of Nashville, Tenn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,299.33, for rent of and damages to their property in Nashville by officers of the Army of the United States during the late war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Before consent is given I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia if this is a unanimous report from the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. It is unanimously reported.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If it is unanimously reported from the committee I have no objection to the request of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Virginia to call up for consideration this bill, which he states is unanimously reported from the Committee on War Claims.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EULOGIES ON HON. WILLIAM A. DUNCAN.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 323) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late William A. Duncan; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows.

Resolved, &c., That there be printed of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late William A. Duncan, a Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, 12,500 copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 9,500 for the use of the House of Representatives. And the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of the said William A. Duncan to accompany said eulogies; and for the purpose of engraving or printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ERMENTROUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRIETTA LOEB.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8144) granting a pension to Henrietta Loeb, dependent mother of Louis Loeb, late a private in Company I, Sixth New Jersey Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF BURDENS ON MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to have a short bill taken up from the House Calendar and put upon its passage. It is the bill (H. R. 8037) to amend the tenth section of the act to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, &c. It was reported by my friend from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] from the Select Committee on Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests. The people for whose benefit this act is intended are now waiting for the action of Congress.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of the tenth section of the act approved June 26, 1884, entitled "An act to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes," be so amended as to strike out the words "but to no other person or corporation" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Or in liquidation of any just debt for board or clothing he may have contracted prior to engagement, not exceeding one month's pay for board and one month's pay for clothing; and no allotment shall be payable except to his wife, mother, or other relative, or to the original creditor for board or clothing."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. I object.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask permission to say just a word. There are many vessels waiting for this measure before shipping their crews. This bill has been introduced at the request of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, the shipping commissioner, and various commercial bodies throughout the country. It is a short amendment, which will so modify the present law that business can go on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. I object.

MRS. HARRIET CLIFFORD.

Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8145) to increase the pension of Mrs. Harriet Clifford, widow of Capt. Walter Clifford, deceased, late of the Seventh United States Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN G. LAMB.

Mr. CONNOLLY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to continue in the service of the House of Representatives John J. Lamb, a laborer employed under the janitor of the House, and authorized by resolution of July 2, 1884, to be paid at the rate of $720 per annum; and that the Committee on Appropriations be requested to provide for the payment of the same in some of the general appropriation bills, payment to extend from March 4, 1885, to June 30, 1886.

REMOVAL OF BURDENS ON MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina to withdraw his objection.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the tenth section of the act which this bill proposes to amend will be read in connection with the proposed amendment.

Mr. SLOCUM. I think I can explain the change which is made in a very few words. The section as it is now allows no allotment of pay except to immediate relatives. As amended it allows a man to allot one month of his pay for board and one month for clothing. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. COX, of New York. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, after the word "clothing," insert "for which;" so that it will read: "Or in liquidation of any just debt for board or clothing for which he may have contracted prior to engagement," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TERMS OF COURT IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7324) providing for holding a term of the circuit court in Minneapolis, Minn.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is so much confusion in the Hall that I am not able to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asks gentlemen to suspend conversation in the Hall.

Mr. WASHBURN. This bill has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary; and it is unanimously recommended by the delegation from my State.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is no necessity for appointing an additional clerk.

Mr. WASHBURN. The gentleman from Indiana has suggested an amendment, to put in the word "deputy" before the word "clerk;" so that it will read:

That the circuit judge of said eighth judicial district shall appoint a deputy clerk, &c.

To this I have no objection.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask the gentleman from Minnesota at how many points in the State are Federal courts held now?

Mr. WASHBURN. At two points.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the second section will be read again as it is proposed to be amended.

Mr. WASHBURN. I have acceded to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, to insert the word "deputy" before "clerk," in the second line of the second section.

Mr. MCMILLIN. How far from Minneapolis is the nearest court?

Mr. WASHBURN. I will state that the court in that section of our State is now held at Saint Paul.

Mr. MCMILLIN. How far from Minneapolis?

Mr. WASHBURN. Ten miles. There are two terms of the court held there at present. The business has accumulated to such an extent that the additional term provided for by this bill is required, and it is proposed the next term of the court shall be held at Minneapolis, where there is a larger population than at Saint Paul. The only question is whether there shall be three terms held at Saint Paul or two at Saint Paul and one at Minneapolis.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] whether there is a United States building at Minneapolis at which the court can be held?

Mr. WASHBURN. There is a United States building in course of construction there in which provision will be made for the court.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill had better go over at present. I do not believe it is sound policy to put these courts within ten miles of each other all over the country. There are already more of them than are needed.

Mr. WASHBURN. There is no new court created by this bill. It simply provides for an additional term of the court, without any additional expense.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the House that there is an increased appropriation now demanded for that public building, and if we pass this bill one of the reasons given for that additional appropriation will be that there is a Federal court to be held there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] object? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object, but I wanted to give the gentleman from Tennessee an opportunity to state the ground of his opposition to the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

A MEMBER. Is a call for the regular order an objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If it is not, I object and also call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made to the present consideration of this bill, and the regular order is called for. The regular order is the question upon the passage of the bill to which the previous question was applied at last night's session, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. My point is that unfinished business on the Private Calendar should go over to the next day which is set apart for the consideration of such business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the House last night applied the previous question to this bill, and before the bill was disposed of the House adjourned. Therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, this bill is the regular order this morning.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the Chair is wrong about that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] of a precedent, the Fitz-John Porter case, in which a similar ruling was made.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the Fitz-John Porter case was a special order, which continued from day to day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in his premises as to the order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I remember that that bill was a special order, which continued from day to day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that this bill is the first business in order this morning when the regular order is called for. The Clerk will report the bill by its title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7256) granting a pension to John A. Vanderhoff.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time I ask unanimous consent to set aside the order for the yeas and nays, and let us have a viva voce vote upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the House did not order a yea-and-nay vote, but only the previous question. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask for the reading of the report in this case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, the report will be read.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, can that be done without unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated that if no objection was made the report would be read.

Mr. KEIFER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made to the reading of the report. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. I believe I am entitled to the floor under the order of the House last night.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. KEIFER. Is debate in order, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent at the session last night this bill was allowed to be reported to the House, with the understanding that when it came up there was not only to be a quorum present, but that I was to have leave to state my objections to the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can only state that it is not advised, either by the Journal or the RECORD, of any such order of the House. The gentleman from West Virginia can proceed to debate this bill only by unanimous consent.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. My point is that the confusion in the Hall is so great that it is utterly impossible to know what is going on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes that point of order as well taken. The House will be in order.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not indulge the gentleman; it is not in the power of the Chair.

Mr. GIBSON. I think this raises a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not so regard it. It is not in the power of the Chair without unanimous consent to indulge any gentleman in debate on a bill upon which the previous question is operating.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to put a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON. When the records of the proceedings of the House yesterday show that unanimous consent was given to me to state this morning my objections to this bill, I want to know whether objection can now be made to my proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman whether the RECORD shows such an agreement by the House.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir; it does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read that portion of the RECORD relating to this subject.

Mr. GIBSON. Without such an agreement it would have been impossible to get the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state to the gentleman that he is entirely in error. The RECORD shows the Committee of the Whole House agreed that the gentleman might state his objections to the bill; but that is simply an agreement of a committee of this House, and in no wise binds the House. The Clerk will read what the RECORD shows.

The Clerk read as follows:

The amendment to the bill (H. R. 7256) granting a pension to John Vanderhoff was agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the agreement the previous question will be considered as ordered on the passage of the bill.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no power to indulge debate on this question except by unanimous consent, and objection has been made.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order; but it is not debatable.

Mr. KEIFER. That motion is only in order after we reach the question upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is precisely the stage which this bill has now reached. It has been engrossed and read a third time, and the question is on its passage. The gentleman from West Virginia has the right under the rules to move to recommit either before or after the ordering of the previous question upon the passage of the bill. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the morning hour for the call of committees be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, my object being to call up the river and harbor appropriation bill. Pending that motion I move that when the Committee of the Whole next resumes the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill all general debate be limited to three hours.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask my friend to allow a longer time than that for general debate on this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. What time would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. BAYNE. As I understand, the list of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole embraces at least six or eight names.

Mr. WILLIS. My understanding is that most of those gentlemen propose to speak only fifteen or twenty minutes each. If the gentleman will indicate what limit will be satisfactory to him, I think we can agree.

Mr. THOMAS. Say four hours.

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not think it wise to fix any time at present. There are gentlemen who desire to be heard quite fully on this bill. The measure embraces some very extraordinary features; and there is no reason why ample time should not be given for discussion upon it.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky by striking out "three" and inserting "four."

Mr. WILLIS. I accept that amendment. I think it will allow ample time.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to amend so as to fix four and one-half hours as the limit. There is a half hour, I think, belonging to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and there will be only three and one-half hours in addition if the debate be limited to four hours.

Mr. WILLIS. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to amend the motion as modified, so as to allow six hours for general debate.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to amend so as to make the time one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that all general debate in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the river and harbor bill be limited to four and one-half hours. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] moves to amend the motion so as to limit general debate to six hours.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to ask the Chair whether that motion includes the time already reserved by those who have occupied the floor?

Mr. BAYNE. That was the inquiry I was about to make.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, of course, that time would be included.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand, then, that time will be included.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. DIBBLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIBBLE. How much time is now reserved by the speakers who have already spoken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not informed, and can not inform the gentleman. That time belongs to the committee, and the Chair has no right to know it.

Mr. DIBBLE. I refer to the time which members stated upon the floor they had reserved.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that the time be limited to three hours.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] to fix the time at six hours. Under the rule the question on the longest time is taken first.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. If this time be limited to three hours, or to six hours, is there any arrangement by which that time is to be controlled by any individual, or has it already been given out?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Illinois that that matter belongs to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Chair has no control over it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to know whether that time has already all been divided up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a matter over which the Chair has no control.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is a matter of some consequence, Mr. Speaker, to the House, or will be to the committee, if a list has been made up and gentlemen are to be recognized by that list. It may so happen that those who are upon that list, and who will occupy the whole time, are on one side of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman desires the Chair to repeat his statement recently made the Chair will do so with pleasure, and inform the gentleman from New York that the Chair has no information of any list made up or any reservation of time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is well understood that the entire six hours is already subscribed for, so to speak. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no information of that fact. The question before the House is the motion to close debate, and the question suggested by the gentleman from Maine is not a matter before the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest whatever time is agreed upon be equally divided.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Is this debate in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is trying to have some understanding reached.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object.

Mr. THOMAS. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize no one until order is restored in the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take no vote until the House observes such order as will enable the vote to be taken intelligently.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first occurs on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, limiting debate to six hours.

Mr. WASHBURN. Two hours of the time of the gentlemen who have already spoken have been reserved, so that under the six hours' limit there will be only four hours left for those who have not yet been heard. I submit, therefore, whether for a bill of this importance that time is not sufficiently short.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not understand any time has been reserved as coming within this limitation.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I desire to know if the time now occupied in the discussion of this question is to be taken out of the four and one-half hours?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact stated by the gentleman from Minnesota that there is already reserved by those gentlemen who have already spoken two hours of time. I would state also, as a matter within our knowledge, a list has been already made up of members, which will more than occupy the other four hours. If then the House limits the committee to the period suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota it is time already taken up, and gentlemen who have not their names down will have no opportunity to address the House. Now, this bill, of immense importance, involving a great many new principles and enormous expenditure of the public money, ought not to be rushed through without full expression of sentiment on the part of members of the House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to know if this debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not proceeding by unanimous consent, but is regularly in order on motion to limit debate.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am sorry the gentleman from Louisiana, a member of the committee, should see fit to interrupt me.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Did I understand the Chair to state this was proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated expressly it was not proceeding by unanimous consent, but in regular order on the motion to limit debate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I misunderstood the Chair.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Maine has an hour if he wishes to occupy it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is a bill, Mr. Speaker, which interests the whole country, and members of the House generally have not been allowed to express themselves before the tribunal which has decided this matter so far as it has been decided; no audience has been given to any member of this House before the committee which has fixed the items of this enormous bill, except to members of the committee themselves, and the result of that seems to be quite perceptible on the surface of the transaction. It is, therefore, all the more important that the members of this House should have full and free opportunity to discuss the items of this bill. Hence, I hope that we shall not limit ourselves to-day in regard to this matter, but that we shall go on and discuss it and close the debate when we have got reasonably through.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine how long he desires the general discussion of the bill to continue?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will answer the gentleman from Arkansas that, in my judgment, we should go on to-day, and perhaps the next day when we take the bill up for consideration we will be able to judge how much more time will be needed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have no desire to cut off the opportunity for full and free discussion of the bill. I wish the most unlimited desire for discussion to prevail; and as far as I am individually concerned I have no wish to fix any arbitrary limit to the discussion. On the contrary, I think there should be a thorough discussion of the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Why not accept the proposition of the gentleman from Maine to have no limitation fixed to-day?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Or limit it to the adjournment to-day.

Mr. WASHBURN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE was recognized.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BAYNE. I think the House will make a mistake if it puts a limitation upon the debate on this bill. It is a bill embracing a large number of new provisions.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COBB. I desire to ask whether or not a motion to limit debate is debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair answers that it is.

Mr. COBB. Then I presume, of course, that we can go on indefinitely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair knows of but one remedy which the House can apply to cut off debate, and that is the previous question.

Mr. BAYNE. I was about to say that this bill involves a great many new features and embodies certain new principles.

Mr. KING. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. BAYNE. The bill involves a number of radical changes upon the system of making appropriations for rivers and harbors. It involves changes of such a nature that they demand close scrutiny by Congress and a close investigation, and unless they are subjected to that radical scrutiny and to a close analysis Congress is likely to make most serious mistakes. I ask the chairman of this committee, therefore, in the interest of fair play and in the interest of a fair and honest river and harbor bill, not to put any proposition before this House that will gag the House or prevent fair, candid, and open debate.

The bill should be subjected, as I have said, to the closest analysis, because it contains provisions that are inimical, in my judgment, to an honest expenditure of the money of this Government for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country. In the consideration of a bill of such magnitude and importance the gag rule should not be applied. Let us go on and discuss it to-day, and after we get through to-day, after the features of the bill have been sufficiently explained and understood, after a full, free, and open discussion in the House, if then it be the will of the House to place some limitation upon debate we can do so understandingly. But not now; because many of the features of the bill are new, and all of the speeches that have been made upon the bill so far, except the brief one made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], have been in favor of it. When there are gentlemen here who desire to antagonize it in its present form, and expose, as far as they can, what they regard as wrong and what they regard as unwise in its preparation, it certainly does not seem to be altogether right to cut them off from that opportunity.

Mr. WASHBURN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, owing to the shortness of the session and the number of projects to be investigated by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, it was seen in the early part of the session that it would be utterly impossible for the committee to listen to either members or delegations with reference to the different improvements throughout the country in which they were interested. We thought and still think that it was safe to trust a preliminary examination of this question to a committee made up of representatives from many of the different sections of the country. I can say for myself, and I think I can safely say for the committee, that I have never known a more unprejudiced, more conscientious investigation of the different items of a bill than has been made at this session of Congress in the preparation of this bill.

There has been already one day's debate upon the bill. Six hours more, as is proposed and I think is acceptable to the committee, will consume the greater part if not the whole of this day. There are but a few more days of this session in which to consider the bill in the House and Senate, and if the friends of the river and harbor improvements expect to have a bill passed at this session it behooves them to look well to the limitation of debate in the House, and proceed as rapidly as possible with the practical consideration of the bill. Within six hours all of the mooted questions in the bill can be properly considered and understood by every member in the House. The bill is printed and in the hands of the members of this House. They are all supposed to be able to read. They are all supposed to be able to understand what they do read; and if they look at the printed bill and read it they can vote intelligently upon it, and all the talk about the great need for long discussion goes for naught when you look at it intelligently.

In this connection it is proper for me to say that there are provisions which do not meet my approval, and I propose to resist them with such power as I can when we come to the discussion of the bill; and I suppose, as a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I would be given an opportunity to express my approval of certain sections and disapproval of others. It is not an extraordinary bill by any means when taken as a whole, while, as I have said, there are certain provisions in the bill which do not meet my approval and upon which I have asked to be heard.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It will place the rest of us at rather a disadvantage if the members of the committee who framed the bill are to have all the time—not only before the committee, but in the House.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors who prepared this bill can afford to be very patriotic and liberal as long as they have all the time for the discussion that is to be given in this House. But I desire to say that there are other members of the House as much interested as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and who are just as friendly to the improvement of the rivers and harbors as the members of the committee. Such members ought to have and desire to have a full opportunity for expressing their opinion of this most extraordinary bill; and that they may be given that opportunity I have asked that the limitation of debate be extended so that they can express their views on the most extraordinary and strange features embodied in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] allow me to ask him a question? I believe it was on that gentleman's motion that it was proposed to limit the debate to six hours. I agree to that proposition entirely. It is satisfactory to me, and I have said I thought it would be agreeable to the committee if the debate could be limited to that time.

Mr. LONG. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONG. Is a motion in order to move to postpone indefinitely the motion to limit debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair knows no precedent for such a motion.

Mr. LONG. I move to postpone indefinitely the motion limiting debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated that he knows of no precedent for any such motion. But under the rule any question that is under debate is subject to a series of motions, and in the opinion of the Chair the rule would give the House the opportunity to postpone the consideration of the motion. Has the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] yielded the floor?

Mr. WASHBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. LONG. To make the motion I have indicated?

Mr. WASHBURN. Not for that purpose.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There is no member of this House who is not well aware that there is no measure coming before the Congress of the United States which the people of this country are more jealously scrutinizing than the river and harbor bill. As has been already said this bill involves enormous expenditures, some of them of a novel and unprecedented character. Already the question has been raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin as to the advisability of the continuance of a great system of river improvements which have been carried on at enormous expense and for which an appropriation of large amount is made in this bill. I refer to the Mississippi River levee system. I find in the newspapers of this morning, in the associated press report, a dispatch to which I wish to call the attention of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask if all this is in order? Is it in order to debate the bill at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already ruled that the motion to limit debate is debatable.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I trust this will not be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] makes the point of order the Chair will have to insist that the gentleman from Maine shall confine himself to the motion which is pending.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am confining myself to that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Which is a motion to limit debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am aware that the pending motion is a motion to limit debate. And I am endeavoring to show that this bill involves questions of so much magnitude and questions so much the subject of controversy and difference of opinion among business and scientific men that it ought to be carefully discussed. I read a telegraphic dispatch that appears in this morning's papers:

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER LEVEES.

NEW ORLEANS, January 30.

A dispatch to the Picayune from Vicksburg, Miss., says: The United States steamer Vidalia arrived this morning with Capt. Clinton R. Sears, the United States engineer in charge of this district, on board. He made the trip from Memphis to inspect the levees now being constructed under his orders by the Government. He reports Long Lake levee, seventeen miles below Helena, as being in a most dangerous condition. The water is going through it at a rapid rate in two places, the break extending about two hundred and fifty yards, and the water being from one and a half to two feet deep. The water has backed up behind the levee, and it is impossible to secure the earth to continue the work on it. Fork Levee, which extends from Arkansas City to Ames's Ridge, is now the most important levee work on the west side of the river, and the situation there is extremely critical, as the water is passing through several breaks, aggregating in width about five hundred yards, the water averaging two feet in depth. The back water also prevents work on this levee.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that facts like these should suggest to this House that before we enter upon appropriations such as are called for by this bill a decent respect for public opinion and our responsibilities as legislators require us to give this subject careful consideration here.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the consideration of the motion to limit debate be postponed till next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the motion; but under the rule the question will first be on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] to amend the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. REED, of Maine. The motion of the gentleman from Minnesota is to postpone the consideration of the motion to limit debate.

Mr. WILLIS. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has not the floor. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] took the floor in his own right and was entitled to hold it for one hour, and he has never yielded it. The Chair, however, will hear the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I suggest to the Chair that the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota is that the entire subject under discussion be postponed until Tuesday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair knows that, and he will suggest to the gentleman from Maine that if he consults the rule he will find that the various motions must take precedence as they are laid down in the rules, and the motion to amend is voted on before the motion to postpone indefinitely.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the Chair will permit me, I desire to state that the order of motions given in the fourth section of Rule XVI is "to postpone to a day certain," "to refer or amend," which gives precedence to this motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Minnesota move to postpone to a day certain?

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] to move to postpone indefinitely.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a suggestion to the House, which may, perhaps, bring about a harmonious result. I suggest that the general debate be continued on this bill till 5 o'clock, that the House then take a recess until 8 o'clock, and that the general debate be continued from 8 o'clock till such hour as the House may adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. There will be nobody here to-night to hear it.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moved that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and pending that motion he has moved that all debate upon what is known as the river and harbor bill, when such bill shall be reached, shall be limited to four hours and a half. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] has moved as an amendment that that debate be limited to six hours. The motion now pending is to postpone until Tuesday next the further consideration of this motion, and upon that motion the gentleman from Minnesota asks the previous question.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay this whole subject on the table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I offer as a substitute the suggestion that has been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. I think it is in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks it is a substitute. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] moves to lay this subject on the table.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not debatable.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are too many gentlemen rising to questions of order for the Chair to hear any particular one. Gentlemen will be seated, and the Chair will then hear their parliamentary inquiries and points of order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] will now please state his point of order.

Mr. THOMAS. My point of order is that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is not in order after the previous question has been demanded on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks differently. The previous question has not been ordered. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to lay this subject upon the table.

Mr. BROADHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I desire to ask the Chair whether if this motion to lay on the table shall prevail it will not carry the bill with it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the bill is not before the House; it is in Committee of the Whole House, and this motion if it prevails will have no effect upon the bill.

The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to lay this subject upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 71.

So the motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay this subject upon the table has been agreed to; and the question now recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. This subject being now laid upon the table, I desire to ask the Chair whether a motion to limit debate is not now in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it is.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement, which will not occupy more than two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to trespass upon the courtesy of the House further than to occupy two or three minutes in replying to what has been said here in regard to the committee which reported this bill and of which I have the honor to be chairman.

The House will bear in mind that when this bill came up for discussion the day before yesterday, in obedience to the instructions of the committee I asked what time would be agreed upon for the discussion of the bill. Thereupon the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], as the utmost time that was asked for in the discussion, requested that at 4 o'clock yesterday general debate should be ended; and the matter was not further pressed. This morning, after the debate had run for a day, in order to arrive at the sense of the House I again made a motion, by way of suggestion, as to the general debate, as is the custom in regard to all general bills, and I asked the opinion of those who oppose the bill. One gentleman thereupon suggested that instead of three hours the time should be three hours and a half. I accepted that. Another gentleman proposed to extend the time to four hours, and another to four hours and a half. I accepted that suggestion. Thereupon the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] moved to make it six hours. Now, that is the whole history of this effort to limit or "gag" debate. Speaking for the committee I desire to say that, subject to the limitations necessarily imposed upon us by the shortness of this session, neither I nor any member of that committee has had any desire to exclude any gentleman from the expression of his views upon the pending bill; but we recognize the fact that there are only twenty-eight days of legislative life left, and that there are other appropriation bills pressing for consideration; and subject to the limitations imposed by these facts we desire the fullest debate on this bill.

With reference to the suggestion as to members not being permitted to go before the committee, I desire to state, what is known to the House, that there were thousands of items to be passed upon by this committee. In the last session, which was the long session, we invited every member, whether he desired to come before the committee or not, and all the delegations, because we had ample time to hear them. But at this session, being limited by the law to ninety days, we could not have the advantage of the personal presence of all the members of this House and the thirty or forty delegations from different parts of the country that desired to be heard. Nothing was done for the purpose of excluding information. On the contrary, when any member of the House informed a member of the committee that he desired to be personally heard, we told him the rule that we were compelled to adopt, and requested him to put in writing the suggestions he had to make; and that was done by all the gentlemen who desired to present anything to the committee, including the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. I feel bound to make this statement in justice to the committee.

I desire to say further that we of the committee are willing to let this debate run as long as any member on the floor who is friendly to the bill desires; but we believe that in the interest of the bill there should be some limit fixed this morning. If the House agrees to that, desiring myself to have the fullest debate that can be had, I state to the House for its information that, as one member of the committee, I shall surrender to other gentlemen all the time allowed to me. I ask that by general consent the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota that the general debate be limited to six hours be accepted; and I now demand the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. My point is that the House has just laid on the table the whole subject of limiting debate on this bill, and that it is not in order at this stage to renew the motion to limit debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desired to make the same point of order. I suppose we can reach our object by voting down the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. If we now lay this subject on the table again, can this process be repeated from time to time all day? I move to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope this side of the House will agree to what I regard as a very reasonable proposition made by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This debate is proceeding only by unanimous consent.

Several members objected and called for the regular order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER to lay on the table the motion of Mr. WILLIS, there were—ayes 99, noes 73.

Mr. WILLIS. I will not consume the time of the House by pressing further this matter. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table is agreed to. The regular order is the question upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIS that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is entitled to the floor for twenty-five minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, ten years ago the country dependent on the Mississippi River for transportation of its products to market was in the same condition that the country is which is dependent on Galveston Bay and that much larger scope of country lying north and northwest of that bay must be in the future. That large section of country lying along the waters of the Mississippi and its tributaries in the West is the principal grain and provision producing part of our Union, and its markets are in New and Old England. Ten years ago, and before that, it was common to hear persons speak about the worthlessness of agricultural products there. However prolific was the yield of all the necessaries of life, the obstructions between the producer and the consumer were so great that the value of their products was almost consumed in the costs of transportation. We were often told that corn was being consumed for fuel when Eastern populations were hungering for bread.

I heard some gentleman say here the other day that Mr. Eads had said some years ago that the improvement of the Mississippi River would cost $100,000,000. I know not what Mr. Eads may have said, but, sir, if these walls could have been hung with phonographs, registering and preserving the utterances of the human voice, and they could be brought before us now, they would tell of hundreds of utterances in these Halls that the people of the West would have the Mississippi River open if it cost $100,000,000. All her Representatives said it. The people of the West were conscious of their power, and they were determined to expend their treasure to open a way for their products to the markets of the world. Why, sir, that river had been under the work and management of the United States engineers for forty years. The Government had expended for its improvement during that time more than $2,000,000 at its mouth alone. Nothing had been accomplished. Congress had appointed committees to investigate the difficulties in the way of transportation routes to the seaboard. They had labored patiently and made large reports of their investigations. But the problem remained unsolved. Agricultural labor was paralyzed. Stagnation and rot and decay were everywhere in their midst. In 1875, when the contract was made with Eads, after all the large expenditure made by our engineers, there was but eight feet of water on the bar at the mouth of the river, as I am informed.

This was all that was to show for all that money, and science, and skill, and learning, which was so highly eulogized by my friend from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON]. Eads had recently accomplished that great wonder of the world, the spanning of the Father of Waters at Saint Louis with a great bridge which will remain as long as architecture endures the admiration of mankind. The representatives of the people had confidence in him. They came to Congress and brought him here, and he submitted a proposition, which was accepted, for $5,250,000 to give thirty feet of water at the mouth of the river. That thirty feet of water has been obtained, and a free way to market has been made for the wheat, and corn, and pork, and provisions of that great granary and storehouse of the country.

What, sir, has been the result of that work? The stagnation and decay that characterized every inch of that country before now passed away, and the hum of active and prosperous industry meets you everywhere. And New Orleans, your city, my friend [to Mr. HUNT], that had death at her doors, with silence in her streets, with her levees untenanted, once more revived with business activity, and to-day, like the eagle, she renews her youth and becomes once more the great cotton-exporting city of the Union. Now, sir, I want to read you some extracts from the report made by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics about the cost of transportation of wheat before that work was accomplished and what it was after it was finished. Some of these statements are given on the authority of Mr. Morgan, who was secretary of the Merchants' Exchange at Saint Louis.

Mr. Nimmo, in his report, says:

Mr. Morgan also states that upon the opening of navigation in the month of March, 1881, and for some time thereafter, the through rate from Saint Louis to Liverpool was as high as 26½ cents per bushel on wheat, while the rate by rail via New York and thence by steamer to Liverpool was about 35 cents. He states, however, that since the first rush ended freights have gradually declined, until on the 31st of May the rate from Saint Louis to Liverpool via the Mississippi River was only 18½ cents per bushel on wheat, whereas at the same time by the rail route via Atlantic seaports it was about 30 cents per bushel, a difference of 11½ cents per bushel in favor of the river route.

Mr. John King, jr., late first vice-president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, in his report to the joint executive committee of east-and-west trunk lines, under date of April 27, 1881, states that on the 20th of March last the total charges for transporting grain from Saint Louis to Liverpool via New Orleans, including river rates, ocean rates, insurance, and transfer charges at New Orleans, amounted to 46.74 cents per 100 pounds, or 28 cents per bushel, and that at the same time the total charges for transporting grain from Saint Louis to Liverpool via New York, including rail and ocean rates and all incidental charges, amounted to 60.44 cents per 100 pounds, or 36½ cents per bushel. This shows the charges on the route via New Orleans to be less than the rates via Atlantic seaports by 8½ cents per bushel.

At the time this statement was made by Mr. King the river rate was 8½ cents per bushel from Saint Louis to New Orleans. It is believed, however, by well-informed persons, that grain can thus be transported in barges at a profit for 4 cents per bushel.

The result of the maintenance for a long period of so wide a difference between the rates by the river route via New Orleans and the rail route via Atlantic seaports has, of course, been to deflect to the Mississippi River route almost all grain at Saint Louis intended for exportation to foreign countries.

Hence the bitter and almost malignant opposition to the improvement of our water ways in the South and West which always comes from the East. New York city has shown her political power in this House constantly under one pretext and another with both political parties against every attempt that seeks to release us from the dominion of her trade.

Mr. DUNHAM. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MILLS. Certainly.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to inquire when these rates you speak of were made from New York to Liverpool?

Mr. MILLS. What I have read has been quoted from Mr. Nimmo's report.

Mr. DUNHAM. But at what time were these rates made?

Mr. MILLS. As I have already stated, they were made in 1881.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the people of New York and of the Eastern States, who have had the great channel of commerce flowing across the continent into their laps, almost took the hydrophobia a few years ago when we were passing a river and harbor bill. It was denounced all over the country, and members of Congress fell under that denunciation, and even grave Senators, strong in their popularity at home, barely saved themselves because they had voted in favor of removing some of the obstructions to the navigation of the Mississippi and other rivers in other States of the Union.

And that great journal the New York Herald, that was so potent a factor in striking down the members of Congress who voted for the improvement of those rivers and harbors, now very anxiously, very persistently, very laboriously, and very ably presses upon the Congress of the United States the necessity of ratifying the Spanish treaty, that takes out of the coffers of the Government $25,000,000 of money on sugar without reducing the price of sugar one farthing to the 55,000,000 of consumers.

I am not at all astonished to find that city still opposing every effort that is made by the people of the Western States to get to market cheaply. It is not in the constitution of human nature to give up these vast advantages which have been flowing into their pockets. They will not willingly consent to relinquish them, but will exhaust every element of their political power to compel both Democrats and Republicans to bow in obedience to their command. Now, Mr. Chairman, what has been the result of the work of the United States engineers at Galveston? We are told they are men of great learning; that they have been educated at West Point by the Government; that they are learned and skillful and all that. Their success has been precisely the same at Galveston that it was at the mouth of the Mississippi River, and precisely the same at Brownsville that it was at Galveston and at the mouth of the Mississippi River, and that is their success is expressed by the word "failure."

In 1874 they began the work of the improvement of Galveston Harbor by the "gabionnade" system. The engineers all expressed confidence that this system was a success. They never faltered in their devotion to it, and never wavered in their confidence of procuring what they undertook to get, that is, eighteen feet of water on the bar. But in 1879 the gabionnade system was abandoned, swept away, and it has gone "where the woodbine twineth." It has gone out into the wide, wide sea, and the $527,000 expended by the Government to make a channel by the gabionnade has been sunk in the depths of the sea. In 1879 the mattress system was adopted. A jetty four and one-quarter miles in length was constructed at a cost of $975,000, including $100,000 contributed by the city of Galveston. The total amount expended up to the present is $1,578,000. That single jetty was to perform wonders, and it did perform wonders. There is something strange about it to one who does not comprehend fully the science of engineering. It deepened the water. There is no doubt about that, for the engineers tell us so in their report. But it deepened it on the wrong side of the jetty.

It was the design of the engineers that the channel should be on the north side of the jetty, but the water refused, and cut the channel on the south side. The engineers designed that the south side should be shoaled, but the water determined to shoal the north side, and they cut a channel from four to eight feet deep on the south side. The water was twelve feet deep on the bar when the work began in 1874. In September, 1875, a heavy storm came and ploughed out a channel nine inches deep. Now they have thirteen feet of water, and there are three inches of that thirteen feet involved in a contest between the engineers and the clerk of the weather as to who is entitled to claim it. In addition to the grand success of getting a channel on the wrong side of the jetty, they have turned the current of the Gulf along the shore of the island, which is cutting it away and threatening the permanent destruction of that part of the island and the submerging of houses along with the jetty in the waters of the Gulf. Such have been the achievements of our engineers. The people of Texas have no confidence in obtaining deep water under their plans, and they look for success only by the adoption of the plans of Eads at the mouth of the Mississippi, and that is by raised jetties, confining the outflow to the channel and making it do the dredging.

To obtain the result so much needed and so much desired not only by Texas but by the whole of that vast section between the Mississippi River and the Pacific Ocean and between the Gulf of Mexico and the British Possessions, we come to Congress, and ask you to adopt measures that will open our way to market, and open it as soon as possible.

Why do I say that this vast area of country is tributary to Galveston? Because it is nearer to the Gulf than it is to the Atlantic. It is nearer Dakota than New York is, and it is nearer to all the people along the Mississippi River on its west side than New York is. Not only that, but all the people along the farther borders of the Territories of the United States must inevitably come to the Gulf of Mexico for their markets. They now have three ways open to them by which they may reach the consumers of their products. They may go east to the Atlantic, or south to the Gulf, or west to the Pacific.

Washington, Oregon, and California can go to the Pacific. But you must remember that their customers are not at Honolulu, but in New England and Europe. Their products find their markets in eastern countries. In order to reach them they can not sail across the isthmus, for it has mountains and not water. They must go clear around the cape and make a three months voyage to reach England. That will not do. Or they must go clear across the continent to New York, and that will not do. Or they must go to Galveston. It is a very simple question to determine. We all know that they will take the shortest and quickest and cheapest route, because in trade shortness of time and distance are material elements of value. Time and money saved in transportation are so much saved to the producers, for the producer has to bear all the charges of reaching an open market. I mean a market governed by the laws of demand and supply. I do not mean markets governed by acts of Congress, but markets where prices are governed by the amount of articles to be sold and the amount of demand there is for their purchase. When the producer reaches the market he must sell at the market price, and all the cost of getting his products to market must be borne by him. As the people of the Northwest have to sell their agricultural products in the open markets of the world, they have to bear all the heavy charges of transportation. The territory tributary to Galveston contains 2,000,000 square miles. It has more than 10,000,000 of people—only five to the square mile. It is populating rapidly.

I have some figures to show how fast it is growing. Idaho increased in the last ten years 117 per cent.; Wyoming increased 127 per cent.; Kansas, 178 per cent.; Washington, 213 per cent.; Arizona, 217 per cent.; Nebraska, 267 per cent.; Colorado, 387 per cent.; and Dakota, 853 per cent.

This shows you the rapid rate at which the West is increasing. It is capable of sustaining a population as thick as that of New York; and that State I believe has 110 or 115 of population to the square mile, almost one-half of what Massachusetts and Rhode Island have, and about one-fourth of what Great Britain has; and all these people have got to go to market to the Gulf of Mexico if they are going to market their products where they will receive the largest amount of benefit for them.

Now let me show you the distances of some of the young cities of the West from Galveston. Kansas City, which is the center of this great grain-growing country, is 600 miles nearer to Galveston than it is to New York; Denver is 730 miles nearer; Salt Lake City is 750 miles nearer; Cheyenne is 650 miles nearer; Santa Fé, 1,000 miles nearer; Yankton, 300 miles nearer; Lincoln, 275 miles nearer; Topeka, 550 miles; Omaha, 375 miles; San Francisco, 900 miles, and Los Angeles, 1,100.

Why, then, should they go farther across the continent by rail when they will save these distances by striking salt water at Galveston? They will all go to Galveston, and of course their trade will be lost to the cities on the Atlantic coast; and of course they will resist under every pretext possible every improvement of these water ways that makes it possible to take that trade away from them.

Now let me show you how in doing this thing they are acting against the interests of the great body of their people. The railroad interest, the vast capital invested in the trunk lines running west from New York, are doing all in their power to keep this business. But the interest of the great body of the Eastern people who live by the bread and meat they get from the Western States requires that they shall have these obstructions removed, so that they may get the necessaries of life cheaper. Looking at the last report of the Agricultural Department for December, 1884, I find the price of a bushel of corn in Maine is 75 cents; in New Hampshire, 76 cents; in Vermont, 65 cents; in Massachusetts, 72 cents; in Rhode Island, 78 cents; in Connecticut, 65 cents. The average price of a bushel of corn in the six New England States is 72 cents. Then look to Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, the great corn-producing regions of the West, and you find the bushel of corn in Iowa is worth 23 cents; in Missouri, 26 cents; in Kansas, 22 cents; in Nebraska, 18 cents. The average price of a bushel of corn in those four States is 22 cents, while the average price of a bushel of corn in the New England States is 72 cents; a difference of only 50 cents in the average price of a bushel of corn in those four States and in the six New England States!

What I have just been remarking applies also to wheat. There is a similar difference, although not precisely the same, in the prices of wheat, hay, and other articles that the New England States want and our people raise in excess. The prices of these articles are very much higher in the East than in the West; and it is for the interest of the poorer people in New England that they should buy them cheaper. Remove, then, all the obstructions intervening between them and the producers of these articles which are the necessaries of life to them! The Representatives of New England should aid us in removing these obstructions as far as it is possible to remove them, and thus help their people to cheaper food. Suppose it costs six or seven million dollars to do it, what of that? Why, sir, if the price of transportation of a bushel of wheat should be reduced eight and a quarter cents by opening the mouth of the Mississippi River, what is the saving to the wheat-growing regions on 100,000,000 bushels? It will represent a sum large enough, even on the first crop of wheat, to save the whole expense of that work. If you open the port of Galveston, the State of Kansas, as my colleague [Mr. REAGAN] said the other day, will save on her corn crop alone enough to pay for the work.

Why, then, should it not be opened? Why should we not have these obstructions removed? But some gentlemen say that we ought to leave this thing to the engineers of the United States; that they can do it, and that we reflect upon them when we intrust the work to Mr. Eads. Why, sir, have we cast reflection on the great Corps of Engineers? Did the United States cast reflections upon them when it put in the hands of Mr. Eads the great work at the mouth of the Mississippi River? Why did the owners put in his hands the construction of the great bridge at Saint Louis over the Mississippi River? Why was one general after another during the war removed from the command of your Army? Why did you put General Grant there? Was it any reflection on the other distinguished generals that stood around him that had marched at the head of your armies and fought with him, or because Grant had great military abilities transcending those of his fellows? Was that necessarily a reflection on the others? They had been tried and had failed. He had been tried and succeeded. Why should the Government be deprived of the services of a commander who knew how to succeed?

Here is a great engineer. We recognize him as standing at the head of all the engineers in the United States, and he is regarded to-day as the greatest in the world. Why, only the other day he made an examination of certain works at Rio Janeiro, for which the Emperor of Brazil paid him $25,000; and I understand that he was paid $15,000 by the Parliament of Great Britain for his opinion on a work involving the clearing out of obstructions from some of the waters of Great Britain.

Mr. MILLS. I wish I had five minutes more.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the gentleman ten minutes of my time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] be allowed five minutes more, by unanimous consent.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, to any arrangement that may be made of that kind; but I suggest that it be with the understanding that the same courtesy shall be extended to the other side.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES] has taken the floor and yielded my colleague ten minutes of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The difficulty about that is that the Chair has already recognized another member of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] proceeding for five minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I believe I am entitled to recognition after the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS], and if he will give five minutes of his time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will proceed. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] yields him five minutes of his time.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, during the short time that has been allowed me (for which I feel very thankful to the gentleman) I want to discuss another objection that is raised to this improvement—the objection that there is a wharf company at Galveston which charges exorbitant rates upon the commerce coming and going through that port. There is a wharf company at Galveston. I suppose there are wharf companies in all cities on the seaboard—at least there are certain regulations about wharves in all such cities. Wharves have to be built, and it takes a great deal of money to build a wharf which runs out such a distance that vessels drawing ten, fifteen, or twenty-five feet of water can lie alongside. I am speaking now only my own individual opinion upon this subject; but I have no doubt that there are wharf companies in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Chicago, New Orleans, San Francisco, and many other places. I do not know anything about the rates charged by the Galveston Wharf Company, but I do know that the constitution of my State has confided to the Legislature full power over all wharf companies and other companies in the State to fix and regulate their charges. I will read the provision of our constitution upon that subject:

SEC. 3. The right to authorize and regulate freights, tolls, wharfage, or fares levied and collected, or proposed to be levied and collected, by individuals, companies, or corporations, for the use of highways, landings, wharves, bridges, and ferries devoted to public use, has never been and shall never be relinquished or abandoned by the State, but shall always be under legislative control and depend upon legislative authority.

SEC. 4. The first Legislature assembled after the adoption of this constitution shall provide a mode of procedure by the attorney-general and district or county attorneys, in the name and behalf of the State, to prevent and punish the demanding and receiving or collection of any and all charges as freight, wharfage, fares, or tolls, for the use of property devoted to the public, unless the same shall have been specially authorized by law.

SEC. 5. All laws granting the right to demand and collect freights, fares, tolls, or wharfage shall at all times be subject to amendment, modification, or repeal by the Legislature.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] whether the legislation authorized by that constitution has ever been entered upon?

Mr. MILLS. I will say to the gentleman that the Legislature of my State is now in session; and I see by the public prints that their minds have been directed to this very matter, and that they are preparing to revise and look into the wharf charges at Galveston.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. When was that constitution adopted?

Mr. MILLS. Ten years ago.

Mr. REAGAN. If my colleague [Mr. MILLS] will permit me, I will state that I have seen a comparison of the wharf charges there with those in other cities, showing that the charges in Galveston are lower than in other cities.

Mr. MILLS. And I am informed by mercantile gentlemen who live in Galveston, and have to deal with this wharf company, that the charges are lower than elsewhere. I have here a paper in which the charges are published. I do not know how long they are kept standing, but I find them spread broadcast before the world in this newspaper. I will not occupy time by reading them, but I will make the statement a part of my remarks:

RATES AND REGULATIONS OF WHARFAGE OF THE GALVESTON WHARF COMPANY, APRIL 1, 1881.

All vessels and their owners landing goods on the wharves thereby contract to pay, and are responsible for, the wharfage on the same, according to the following rates, to be collected from the vessels or their agents:

	Cents.
Anchors and chains, per 100 pounds	5

Goods not in above list will be charged in proportion, say: Less than forty pounds to the cubic foot will be classed as measurement and charged 1 cent per foot; forty pounds and over to the cubic foot will be classed as weight, and charged 5 cents per hundred pounds.

All goods and articles of every kind landed or received upon any of the wharves are thereafter at the risk of the owners, and not of the company, and must be removed the same day, or, at furthest, the next day. After which time, any of said goods and articles remaining on the wharves, the owners and consignees thereof will be responsible for, and will be charged an additional wharfage of one-third the rates specified in the preceding schedule for every day they so remain, and may be removed by the wharf company without further notice (at the risk and expense of the goods and the owners and consignees thereof) to any part of the premises, continuing the charge for additional wharfage each day they remain on said premises. Or the wharf company may have the same removed and stored elsewhere than on its own premises without further notice (at the risk and expense of the goods and the owners and consignees thereof), and the same will be held until all charges are paid. Same wharfage to be charged on all goods or articles delivered from one vessel to another, provided either of such vessels is fast to the wharf or to any vessel fast to the wharf.

The company hereby gives notice that they will not be liable for losses if caused by excessive and unusual weights, or by piling up heavy articles, such as salt, more than four sacks high, and railroad iron more than three tiers high, on the wharves. Or by landing articles of extraordinary weight, such as locomotives, without special permission (in writing) from the company's agent; but that it will hold all persons liable for such damages as may be occasioned by overloading the wharves, without special permission.

On all shipments from the interior which are to be delivered to a vessel or agent, whether on through bill of lading or not, the carrier placing or landing produce, goods, &c., on the wharf, also the owner thereof and the shipper, are each and all responsible for the wharfage.

The owners and consignees of all goods delivered on a wharf or levee of the company thereby become bound to the company for the wharfage thereon.

All wharfage is contracted to be paid, and is due and payable to the company, at its office in Galveston.

The company also gives notice that it does not undertake storage, and will not be responsible for losses or damage, from any cause, to goods or articles landed or received on its wharves.

All vessels of fifty tons and over not engaged in receiving or discharging cargo, or seized by legal process, and lying at the wharf after such seizure, will be charged wharfage at the rate of 5 cents per registered ton for each day or part of a day.

Vessels of less than fifty tons will be charged wharfage at the rate of $2 per day or part of a day.

JOS. AIKEN, Secretary.

I notice that the wharfage charge for cotton is 10 cents per bale and for flour 5 cents a barrel. I do not know anything about wharf charges myself; this is the only wharf I know anything at all about; but it seems to me that these are not exorbitant charges. However, if they are, the people of my State through their representatives have full power under the constitution to regulate them, and they are now proceeding to do it. In conclusion I want to appeal to this House in behalf of the vast body of population that is now living, and that is hereafter to swarm, in the immense territory northwest of the Mississippi River, to open up to us the only safe gate by which we can get to market with the products of our labor. If you will remove the obstructions and let us deliver to our people in the East at a less cost of transportation you will buy your corn and wheat and provisions cheaper, we will sell them higher in the West, and the people in both sections will be benefited by the removal.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, as I had occasion to observe in my remarks this morning, this is in the main a fair and meritorious bill. The committee, early after it met for the first time at this session, remembering the shortness of the session and observing the rule laid down in other Congresses at short sessions, determined to make the present river and harbor bill as reasonably small as it could be made so that the works now in progress should not suffer for want of proper appropriations. I have not given myself the trouble to make a comparison of the appropriations proposed from a sectional standpoint; and I am glad to be able to testify that from the beginning to the end of the sittings of our committee there was not the slightest shadow of sectionalism suggested, nor was there the slightest shade of partisanship shown, but each measure was taken up and considered fairly, dispassionately, and conscientiously, and such appropriations were made for the several projects as a majority of the committee determined were right and proper.

There are some provisions of the bill which did not meet my approval at the time they were adopted, nor do they now. Looking along the southern coast of the United States, we found that from the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay to the Mexican line there was but one port where an ordinary second-class man-of-war or merchant vessel could enter, and that was at the mouth of the Mississippi River. We found that no modern first-class vessel could enter at Charleston; at Savannah, at the mouth of the Saint John's, at Pensacola, at Sabine Pass, at Galveston, at Aransas Pass, or any other point down to the Mexican line.

It struck us as something strange indeed that after the vast expenditures made by the United States Government under its engineers this state of affairs should exist; that after all the work that had been done on the harbor of Charleston, for instance, and the money expended there, it yet remained a fact that a first-class ship of war or vessel of the merchant marine could not enter its harbor.

When we looked at Savannah, with its commercial interests, the vast territory depending upon it as an entrepôt for articles from other sections of the Union and from foreign countries, and as a seaport for the products not only of Georgia, but of a large section of the Southern States, and remembering also the vast amount of money which had been expended there, I say we were seriously disappointed and were greatly surprised to find that there was not water enough there for a vessel drawing twenty feet to enter its harbor.

Remembering the growth of Florida, the commerce of the Saint John's River, the frequency with which that sunny land is visited by travelers and health-seekers, and the vast amount of production that must be shipped out and in over the bar, we were surprised to find that no first-class man-of-war or merchant vessel could pass over it. We looked at once to see whether we could divine the cause of all this, whether we could ascertain why it was that good, sufficient, and substantial work had not been done under the appropriations given for these points. We found that the Engineer Corps of the Army, men above suspicion and supposed to have been educated in one of the best schools in this country, or in the world, were pursuing a line of policy and employing methods which the hydraulic engineers of the world have long since condemned, and which have never yet yielded success in a single instance.

So the committee, believing that something substantial ought to be done, that some reasonable and practical plan ought to be adopted for the improvement of the harbors of Charleston, Savannah, and the mouth of the Saint John's, as well as Sabine Pass and the other Gulf ports, have proposed that there shall be organized a harbor board, to be composed of two officers of the Engineer Corps, one officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and four engineers from civil life, all of whom shall be distinguished for their education and ability as engineers.

It is directed by this bill that this harbor board shall make an examination of the principal ports along the southern border and lay before Congress at its next session a report as to a proper plan for the improvement of these points. They are to review the work which has been done there and to take into account the amount of plant and material on hand. They are to observe whether success or failure has followed the efforts of the engineers in charge, are to study the present plans, and are to furnish to this House full and complete information not only as to the plan but as to the cost of the several improvements.

It may be urged here, and doubtless will be, that the Engineer Corps of the Army are an educated, cultivated, honest class of men. That is admitted. It does not follow, however, because a man is intelligent, honest, and high-minded that he is a hydraulic engineer, that he understands the principles which should govern the improvement of a great seacoast harbor.

The amount of money involved in the employment of this short-lived commission, for it is to last but one year, is a mere bagatelle when compared with the amount of useful information which it will be able to lay before the House; and I hope most earnestly that this provision of the bill for the appointment of this harbor commission will be adopted by the House in the interest of economy and common sense.

During the time of the sitting of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I could see no reason why an exception should be made in favor of Galveston Harbor over Sabine Pass and over the mouth of the Saint John's, over Charleston and Savannah. I believed then, and I believe now, it will be infinitely better for the country to await the action of this harbor board provided for before making any large appropriation for the improvement of Galveston Harbor.

We are reminded of the fact, sir, that Galveston is the only feasible seaport for a vast extent of territory. Our attention is called to the plains of Kansas with their teeming fields of corn, wheat, and other productions, and Colorado with its mountains of ore and its other immense products are brought to mind as arguments in favor of Galveston; the widespreading plains of New Mexico are laid open before us; Texas with its almost limitless square miles is held up before our eyes as reasons why this great improvement should be made. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that Kansas, Nebraska, California, and even New Mexico were made to do duty as arguments in favor of the improvement of the Mississippi River; to the fact that the great agricultural products of Kansas and Nebraska were cited time and again as reasons why the Mississippi River should be improved and a market by water furnished for these productions. I grant you that the arguments offered then and the reasons given were good and sufficient; but shall we employ these same hackneyed arguments and again traverse the fields of Kansas, Nebraska, California, and New Mexico for arguments in favor of the improvement of Galveston Harbor? I question its propriety most seriously.

Any one acquainted with the harbor of Galveston knows that out toward the Gulf it is a shoal, sloping coast, that it is a long distance to deep water, and that it is very questionable indeed whether ever a good and sufficiently deep entrance can be made to that harbor, and whether it can be maintained if made. Every one knows it rests upon the shifting, unstable quicksands that can be found all along the borders of the southern coast.

But, recognizing the necessity, however, for some harbor along that coast, I was willing that this harbor board provided for in the bill should consider the matter—should look into it carefully and furnish this House at the next session with a plan and the cost required.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has there been a comparison made between Galveston and the mouth of the Brazos?

Mr. THOMAS. There can be no comparison; they are wholly different; they are not parallel cases at all. I think the gentleman has in mind the mouth of the Sabine River or Sabine Pass. I am able to speak somewhat intelligently of these two harbors, having at one time made a personal investigation of them. The bottom of the Sabine River and its entrance into the Gulf is made up of blue clay and oyster reefs, which are comparatively permanent, which if dredged out or washed out or worked out in any way will furnish a substantial and lasting harbor; I have no doubt of it. It has been my opinion from the first, after I made a personal examination a few years ago, that Sabine Pass was the only point along the southern coast of Texas where a good and lasting harbor could be made. But I bowed to the better judgment of other men; others who thought they knew more about it, and who doubtless were correct in their opinion, as my conclusion had been based on only a superficial examination.

The work at Galveston Harbor by the engineer in charge has not been satisfactory—has furnished very poor water indeed; and I am not surprised that the Representatives and the people of Texas demand that better improvements should be made there. There is no doubt, sir, that something ought to be done, but I can see no reason why we should take this harbor out of the general class to which it belongs, why we should make an exception of this over Charleston or Savannah. As I said a while ago, I believe the true policy would be to await the report of the harbor board before making any very considerable appropriation for that harbor.

It was urged, sir, that the work at Galveston was so unsatisfactory that we ought to stop it at once; that we ought to make no further appropriation until a proper plan had been formulated and adopted for the improvement of that harbor.

The same statement was made and urged with reference to Savannah, and also with reference to the mouth of the Saint John's River. But the committee yielded to the arguments that possibly it was mistaken in the matter, and that possibly the work under the Engineer Corps of the Army would prove satisfactory and productive of substantial results in the end.

Our attention was called to the fact that only meager appropriations had been made from time to time for these projects, and that the engineers had not been able to press forward as earnestly in the prosecution of the work as they might otherwise have done on that account; and, as I have said, we thought that our fears might be unfounded, and that it would not be good policy to strike out the items for the different places mentioned.

It has been said, Mr. Chairman, in an undertone, that the life of the bill might have been endangered if the appropriations for Savannah and Charleston and the mouth of the Saint John's had been left out; that there would have been no "pork in the bill," to use the slang phrase of the day, for men living upon the Southern borders, and, as a consequence, that they would be likely to vote against the bill. I am happy to say, sir, that no such consideration actuated the committee in the course it took. We stand ready at any and at all times to defend the bill in its main features, whether we have provided "pork" or appropriations for any member or not.

We looked alone to the interests of the harbor under consideration, and were guided in our preparation of the bill solely by that consideration.

There has been a good deal said about Galveston Harbor. There have been some serious charges made against that point and those engaged in promoting what is known as the present Eads scheme; and as illustrating that I call the attention of the committee to, and ask the Clerk now to read, an extract from a Dallas paper, one of the leading journals of that State.

The Clerk read as follows:

GALVESTON HARBOR IMPROVEMENT—A SYNDICATE PUSHING THE EADS SCHEME FOR AN APPROPRIATION OF $7,750,000.

DALLAS, January 22.

A leading business man of Galveston, whose name has been furnished your correspondent in confidence, and who is thoroughly informed on the Galveston Harbor improvement, in a column communication to the Dallas Herald exposes the Eads scheme for an appropriation of $7,750,000 with which to secure deep water, and also defends the plan and operations of Colonel Mansfield, in charge of the Government works at Galveston. The salient points of his article are as follows:

"The plan adopted by the Government comprehended two jetty walls running parallel, or nearly so, and designated respectively as the north and south jetties. When the work was begun it was problematical as to which jetty it would be best to construct first. Colonel Mansfield concluded to construct the north jetty first, it being the shortest; but this idea met with such strong opposition from the leading financial men of the city, who evidently had little faith in the ultimate success of the work, and who therefore preferred to have the longest jetty constructed first, so that the more money might in the mean time be spent here, that the original idea was surrendered to the influence exerted against it, and the south jetty was constructed first. Mark the result. A survey made by the city engineer showed that on the south side of the south jetty a depth of twenty feet had been obtained along the entire length of the jetty, except in one or two places where the wall had not been completed to the full length. Have you ever heard that twenty feet of water had been obtained on the Galveston bar? Probably not. Why? Because the information was too important to be given to the public, and straightway a syndicate was formed to sell it to the people.

"The unexpected discovery of deep water on the wrong side of the jetty proved that Colonel Mansfield's plan was feasible and its success assured if the north jetty should be constructed by him. The first thought of the syndicate was how to take advantage of the discovery. The regular appropriation was nearly or quite exhausted, and so the first step was to prevent another appropriation by Congress, and thus stop Colonel Mansfield's work. The Eads plan had meanwhile been brought forward with a great hurrah, and from that time to this has been strongly advocated by every influence that the syndicate could bring to bear in favor of it. It was absolutely necessary to procure the influence of the Galveston News, that journal having been an advocate of the Mansfield plan, and one of the principal proprietors was admitted into the syndicate. It is unnecessary to state that the News has been an earnest advocate of the Eads plan ever since that time. The Eads bill is said to be based upon the principle, no water, no pay. But it will be found that with the additional depth of a few feet the bulk of the appropriation will have been secured. The syndicate also knew that this result could be accomplished by the expenditure of the comparatively small sum required to build the north jetty, and that a larger sum would remain for division.

"Colonel Mansfield has hitherto complained that his work ought not to be condemned before completion; but the powerful influence of the press was brought to bear upon him, and his ability as an engineer has even been questioned. If the Government allows Colonel Mansfield to complete the work it will cost, say, from $500,000 to $750,000 If Eads does the work it will probably cost the syndicate less, but the people will have to pay ten times as much. This is the case in a nutshell. The city of Galveston appropriated $2,500 to the use of the deep-water committee now in Washington and an additional fund of $25,000 was raised by subscription. If they succeed in getting the Eads bill passed they know that they can well afford to be laughed at, on the principle that 'they laugh best who laugh last.'"

In no place in his article does the Galveston man accuse Captain Eads directly of being cognizant of the alleged swindle intended by the syndicate, but he leaves that sort of an implication, and declares it to be the purpose of the syndicate to divide from six to seven million dollars between them if the appropriation asked by the Eads bill is allowed.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield for a question; not for a speech.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not desire to make a speech. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois if he desires by reading that paper to be understood by the committee as asserting that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors recommend the adoption of the Eads plan.

Mr. THOMAS. I will make that perfectly plain before I get through.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask another question: Does the gentleman by reading an anonymous letter propose to make himself responsible for the statement that a syndicate has been sent here with $25,000 or $2,500 or any other sum to influence legislation by this Congress?

Mr. THOMAS. I will make that perfectly plain in the course of my remarks.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman can say whether he does or does not.

Mr. THOMAS. I will answer in my own way.

I know nothing of the responsibility or the irresponsibility of the writer of this article, or the editor of the paper in which the extract appeared. I only know that it does appear as an article in one of the Dallas papers—the Dallas Herald; it is a paper published in Dallas, Tex. I am in no way responsible for the charge made there, that there was a syndicate formed and that money had been expended to influence legislation either properly or improperly. I give it simply as an expression of opinion coming from one of the important newspapers of the State of Texas, and let it stand on its own bottom.

The bill introduced in the Senate, which was subsequently brought to the attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, involved, if the project of Captain Eads, urged by the delegation from Texas was adopted, the expenditure of about $8,750,000, of which $7,750,000 was for the construction of the works, and $1,000,000 subsequently for their maintenance for ten years. The committee rejected that proposition; and yet it rejected it only indirectly, for it will be seen that it has indirectly adopted it. I say this because this bill makes an appropriation of $750,000 for the purpose of improving Galveston Harbor "according to the plans and estimates to be submitted by James B. Eads," and so, indirectly, the proposition of the expenditure of $8,750,000 for this harbor under the direction and according to the plans of Captain Eads is indorsed by the committee.

The engineer in charge says that by building what is known as the north jetty and raising above the water the south jetty, at a cost of about $3,000,000, all the water needed for a first-class vessel will be furnished in that harbor. That was the reason, sir, I opposed the adoption of this plan. I thought we had better go slow when the Engineer Corps estimated on the one hand that an expenditure of $3,000,000 would complete the work, while on the other hand eight and three-quarter millions would be required under the Eads plan. I say, I thought we had better wait until the harbor board, provided for in another part of this bill, should investigate the whole matter and furnish sufficient estimates of the cost as a basis for intelligent action and appropriations in the future. I thought it better that we should hold on and that it was not statesmanlike to make an appropriation in this form. I believe now that it is imprudent to make such an appropriation in this bill, taking the plan of Captain Eads, at a cost of eight and three-quarter million of dollars, when, as I have said, the engineers report that the same facilities for that harbor can be furnished for $3,000,000. Admitting that we are not much encouraged by their promises in view of their failures in days gone by, have we come now to a point where we are ready to say that there are no other engineers in this country except Capt. James B. Eads who are able to submit plans and estimates for the improvement of our harbors? For myself I think not.

No one holds Captain Eads in higher estimation than I do. I have had the good fortune to know him for a number of years intimately and well. I know his grand achievements as an engineer. I remember he built the Saint Louis bridge. But what has the building of a bridge to do with the improvement of a harbor? The learning and talent that may be required for the one may be comparatively useless in the other. A man may be a splendid bridge-building engineer, while he may know nothing of improving rivers and harbors.

If it is determined to take this work out of the hands of the Engineer Corps of the Army, I say it is but fair to the whole country and the other engineers of this country that the doors be thrown open, and that they be allowed each in his own right to furnish plans, specifications, and estimates of cost for the improvement of this harbor. If you are not willing to do that, then I say in Heaven's name wait until this harbor board have furnished plans and estimates for its improvement. There is no reason why this extraordinary appropriation should be made for Galveston anyhow.

Charleston is a great port, and yet we gave it but 25 per cent. of the estimate; Savannah is a great port, and yet we gave it but 25 per cent. of the estimate. The mouth of the Saint John's is a great port, and we gave it but 25 per cent. of the estimate. Why should an exception be made in favor of Galveston? Do we give it an appropriation based upon any reasonable estimate? I say, no. In the first place, neither Captain Eads nor his associates have furnished a plan for the improvement of Galveston Harbor. They have not told us how long the jetties are to be, how high they are to be, how broad they are to be, what materials they are to be built of, how they are to be constructed, where the materials are to be obtained, what it will cost, nor anything about it. But this appropriation of $750,000 is based upon an entirely speculative estimate. The Chief Engineer of the Army has asked for $500,000 as the whole amount of the estimate. One-fourth of that, as we gave to Charleston, to Savannah, to the mouth of the Saint John's, would have made a very much smaller sum than $750,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD. When the engineer in his estimate said that he wanted $500,000, was not that for the expenditure in one year and not for the completion of the project?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; and you have provided in this bill for $750,000 for one year on a plan which involves $8,750,000. Mansfield asks for $500,000 in one year on a plan involving an expenditure of $3,000,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask the gentleman if the estimates submitted by the engineers now in charge are not predicated on a plan or theory which the committee utterly rejects as impracticable?

Mr. THOMAS. I think they are. That plan is predicated on the theory of submerged jetties. I have gone, however, on the view that the Engineer Corps of the Army could learn as other men do, and would take warning from failures in other places, and would learn lessons of wisdom from success under other systems; and that they would adopt a plan which would secure success at one-half the cost proposed in this bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the gentleman to say that no plan in detail has been submitted for this work?

Mr. THOMAS. Not one scrap, not one line, not one word, not one figure has been submitted in detail.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understood the gentleman to say that no estimates had been submitted. I draw the distinction between estimates and plans.

Mr. THOMAS. There has been neither plan nor estimate except the rough estimate that the work would be done for $8,750,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is that in writing?

Mr. THOMAS. No, sir; not even that is in writing.

Mr. HISCOCK. It depends on declarations made orally before the committee?

Mr. THOMAS. Exactly so.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I think that is somewhat unfair.

Mr. THOMAS. In what respect?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. The plan and estimates are to be submitted to the Secretary of War.

Mr. THOMAS. I will answer my colleague on that point.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My colleague says the estimate is $8,750,000. He includes the amount contemplated for ten years' maintenance, which makes $1,000,000 in excess. Does my colleague know we have got all the plans and all the estimates and all the guarantees in this case that we had in the improvement in the South Pass of the Mississippi River?

Mr. THOMAS. That is granted. It is granted and admitted that we have all the guarantees and all the plans, except that in the case of the Mississippi River the committee was fully informed as to the plan proposed.

The South Pass of the Mississippi River was to be jettied with willows and piling and strengthened by rubble-stone and concrete; but there is nothing here to show that that sort of material is to be used. In fact, there is really a provision in this bill that the material shall not be the same, for it is known that willows and piling are subject to destruction by the teredo, and this bill provides that this work shall be built of material that is not subject to the ravages of the teredo. Hence it follows that some other material must be used. It is suggested by my colleague on my right [Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois] that my statement places the matter in an unfair light. Let us see.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] to yield to me for a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield presently, after I have answered another question. My colleague, General HENDERSON, suggests that I have not put the matter fairly in reference to the plans and estimates.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I dislike exceedingly to interrupt my colleague; but if he will allow me I will state the point to which I desire to direct his attention.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall be very glad to answer any question my colleague may ask.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. What I intended to object to in the gentleman's statement was this: He said that there was a proposition to do this work for about eight millions and a half.

Mr. THOMAS. Eight millions and three-quarters.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Chairman, there was no such plan accepted by the committee, and they never proposed to accept any such plan. The committee determined that if this work was done it should not be done by Captain Eads, but should be done by the War Department, the same as all other public works.

The plans and estimates were to be made by Captain Eads and submitted to the Secretary of War, but it was stated by the chairman of the committee, and I think my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] concurred, that it would not take any such sum as he has stated to do the work—that $4,000,000 would probably cover the entire cost.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the only estimate or shadow of an estimate upon which the committee acted or could act was a proposition of James B. Eads to do this work for $7,750,000, with another million dollars to maintain it for ten years. I say, therefore, that while we did not directly adopt that estimate, it was indirectly adopted by the committee and is proposed in this bill. This bill proposes to make improvements according to plans, specifications, and estimates to be submitted by James B. Eads. Now, what is the difference?

Mr. RAY, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. RAY, of New York. I understood the gentleman [Mr. THOMAS] to say that this bill would not compel the performance of the work by Captain Eads. I will ask him, does not this bill provide in terms that the Secretary of War shall engage the services of Captain Eads?

Mr. THOMAS. The bill provides that this improvement shall be made by the Secretary of War according to the plans and estimates of James B. Eads, who is to be employed for the purpose of furnishing the plans and superintending the work. It is further provided that he shall receive a salary of $5,000, and $3,000 for each additional foot of water secured. Now, if the work is not to be done according to the plans of Captain Eads, I want to know whose plans it is to be done by? And if we are to determine what those plans are to cost, how are we to arrive at a conclusion about it unless we take what Captain Eads says? And he says that it will cost $8,750,000. So I have not put the case unfairly, and I am borne out by the facts when I say that the Secretary of War is compelled to do this work not according to the plan by which it can be done cheapest, but according to the plans of James B. Eads, and James B. Eads says it will cost $7,750,000 to construct the work, and $1,000,000 more to maintain it for ten years—or at least he agrees to take the contract for that sum.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; for a question.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] if Captain Eads has been before the committee to explain all this.

Mr. THOMAS. He has not.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then how has the committee arrived at this information?

Mr. THOMAS. There was a subcommittee appointed, which had an interview with Captain Eads.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then they had time to interview Captain Eads, but they did not have time to hear members of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS. I suppose that some members of the subcommittee interviewed him. In fact I have heard that they did, and I saw them in conversation with him. I was a member of the subcommittee myself, but I had no interview with Captain Eads on this subject.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if Captain Eads did not address the committee during the last session of Congress, and make an elaborate explanation of his plans for the improvement of Galveston Harbor.

Mr. THOMAS. I have understood that Captain Eads did, though I was not present at the time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, that argument is printed, and there are plenty of copies of it to supply every member of the House.

Mr. OCHILTREE. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. For a question.

Mr. OCHILTREE. I wish to ask the gentleman if he, as a member of the subcommittee, did not meet the Texas delegation, with Captain Eads, in the room of the Committee on Commerce; if he did not then and there advise the delegation to accept the modification of the Galveston item suggested by the committee; and if he did not agree to support the measure in the House if they would agree to the modification?

Mr. THOMAS. I will answer the gentleman. I did not go there to see Captain Eads, and I did not see him, and the amount suggested by me was not adopted by the committee, and I did not pledge myself to support this bill. I did go at the solicitation of my friend to meet the Texas delegation, but that was with reference to quite another measure; it was with reference to the question whether we would adopt the bill that was first brought before us. This present measure was not discussed at all, but was the fruit of subsequent work of the committee, and of several interviews with Captain Eads, as I understand

Mr. OCHILTREE. The only change was in the amount. The original amount was $500,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said all the time that I was willing to make any proper appropriation for Galveston. I was willing that we should put it exactly on a footing with other harbors. I have always been ready to admit and to bear testimony that the work down there under the plans of the Engineer Corps was not satisfactory, but I thought it was enough to appoint a harbor board to examine into the matter and report at the next session of Congress some plan for this work, instead of rushing headlong into a scheme which is to involve us in the expenditure, if we may judge from the estimates, of eight and three-quarter million dollars. I find no fault with Captain Eads. I believe him to be a high-minded, honorable man, of irreproachable character. I believe him to be one of the greatest engineers that the world has ever produced. But I do not think it follows that because he is such a man, and because he is my personal friend, and because I have such admiration for his great achievements, I should therefore involve this Government in the expenditure of what appears to me to be an extravagant sum of money.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the scheme proposed includes the proposition to expend $100,000 a year through all the future to maintain the work, because it is understood that it takes a million dollars for ten years?

Mr. THOMAS. That was the plan under the old bill, which was rejected. So that is not involved in this.

Objection is found by several members of the committee to the progress of the work on the Mississippi River under the Mississippi River Commission. It is believed that the commission have not adhered to the plan originally adopted for the improvement of the Mississippi River; that they have been engaged in the expenditure of money upon questionable projects, upon schemes which, instead of furnishing deep water and improving the navigation of that river, have resulted in the expenditure of money and that alone.

I had occasion to investigate the plan of the Mississippi River Commission as it was originally adopted by Congress. After a most thorough investigation I gave it my hearty approval; and I believe to-day that if the Mississippi River Commission had adhered to their original plan, and had gone on with the improvement of the river upon that plan, we would have had very different results from those which confront us to-day. Take, for instance, the work done at Horse-Tail Bar, twenty miles below Saint Louis. At that point, before the improvement, the depth of the river at low water was five feet. The plan of the Mississippi River Commission as originally adopted has been adhered to in reference to this work, and we find over that whole stretch of twenty miles from fifteen to seventeen feet of water.

Take Plum Point reach, extending forty-two miles on the Mississippi River, where before this work there were but six feet of water. Now, through its whole extent there is a depth of fifteen to sixteen feet. Take Providence reach, thirty miles long, which at low water had an average depth of but six or eight feet. There the plan originally adopted by the commission has been adhered to, and we find from sixteen to eighteen feet of water throughout the whole length. The original plan of the commission, wherever adhered to, has resulted most happily. It is where the commission have fallen into the practice of speculative improvements, have laid revetment here and revetment there in an insecure manner, that money has been expended without corresponding beneficial results.

Therefore, Captain Eads being, as will be admitted by all acquainted with the facts, the author of the original plan of the Mississippi River Commission, the committee thought it would be well to recommend him for appointment on that commission, so that he might bring them back to the original plan and that we might secure the results desired.

The statement has been made that upon the plan of the Mississippi River Commission the cost of the work would be $100,000,000. Any one who has looked into the facts knows that there is nothing at all to justify such a statement. The Mississippi River Commission and the engineers who have investigated the subject have stated that it would cost from $17,000,000 to $20,000,000 to complete the work so that a vessel drawing twenty feet of water could come to Cairo.

Mr. HUNT. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what are the "speculative improvements" in which the Mississippi River Commission has indulged and what amount of money they involved?

Mr. THOMAS. I will refer my friend from Louisiana to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], a member of the committee, who has made this point a special study, and who will present it to the committee. I wish to say that I concur most thoroughly in his conclusions. He will be able to make this question as plain as it can be, for he has given it special attention.

There is another project embraced in this bill which strikes me as decidedly questionable; and that is the project for the establishment of a great national harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Massachusetts. The engineers who were sent to that point to make an examination disapprove of the work and say that it is not needed. Yet the committee has put it in; and I must say that at the time, under the influence of the eloquent tongue of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE], I voted for the appropriation. After looking further into it, however, I have found I was wrong, and I now say that since this project involves the expenditure of $4,000,000 to furnish a single harbor of refuge I object to it, believing that it is not needed.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did I understand the gentleman to say the commission has estimated that the proposed improvement of the Mississippi, when completed, will cost $17,000,000?

Mr. THOMAS. Seventeen to twenty millions.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman tell me where they have said that?

Mr. THOMAS. I will, with pleasure. If the gentleman will look at the report of the special committee of the Forty-seventh Congress, of which Hon. J. C. Burrows, of Michigan, was chairman, he will find the testimony of the commission on that point.

Mr. HEPBURN. Did not the commission report to the House on that subject as follows——

Mr. THOMAS. I can not yield for the gentleman to read. I have but a minute or two remaining.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have here the estimate of the commission, placing the sum at $33,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. There was a difference of opinion, I remember, among the members of the commission as to the amount it would cost; and I recollect that their evidence was taken individually. The average estimated cost was from seventeen to twenty million dollars.

Mr. HEPBURN. One of them places it at $66,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. I remember that, too.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Including the five minutes yielded by the gentleman from Louisiana the gentleman has nine minutes left.

Mr. THOMAS. In the nine minutes left me I can but touch this point, and I do not know but that I shall ask, at the end of the time that I may be allowed, a few minutes further in which to discuss this question. I should like, for instance, to discuss further the project of making this national harbor at Sandy Bay. The project involves an expenditure, as I have stated, of $4,000,000, and is intended to furnish a harbor of refuge for the ocean-going and coastwise trade of New England. It is admitted there have been a great many vessels lost along that coast for the want of a good, safe harbor of refuge; but it is admitted at the same time that there are other places where harbors to meet all the requirements of commerce could be established for a much less cost.

Another point to which I wish to call the attention of the committee is that of reservoirs on the headwaters of the Mississippi. There is a small appropriation put into this bill to complete one of these reservoirs. I will call the attention of the committee to the language of the Chief of Engineers on this subject, as it is contained in a few words. The Chief of Engineers says, on page 1614 of his report:

> The object of the reservoirs is to collect surplus water, principally from the precipitation of winter, spring, and early summer, to be systematically released so as to benefit navigation upon the reaches of the several streams below the dams and also that of the Mississippi below Saint Paul. Alleviation of floods in localities near the proposed reservoirs expected to obtain to some extent, but control of extended floods or freshets covering long reaches not expected. It seems proper to note here that this office is not responsible for the extravagant statements made by friends of the system and appearing in newspapers and other publications from time to time as to the extended benefits to be derived from the reservoirs under consideration.
> In order that navigation may be benefited upon the Mississippi above the mouth of the Saint Croix, upon the Saint Croix, the Chippewa, and the navigable reaches of the Wisconsin, the system of dams proposed for each must be carried out, and no benefit of consequence to the Mississippi below Lake Pepin can be predicated unless the entire system is built.

Believing the committee anxious to stop this work if no satisfactory results were to follow, I concluded, after the expenditure of so large a sum of money as the Government had already invested, it was better to make the small appropriation necessary to complete one system to see whether it would work out as was predicted by its friends. The engineer states unless the whole system is completed that no satisfactory results will follow; that the waters of the Mississippi will neither be restrained nor increased in volume unless the whole system is completed.

Mr. WASHBURN. Is not that below Lake Pepin?

Mr. THOMAS. How much of the river above Lake Pepin is affected by this?

Mr. WASHBURN. One hundred miles between Lake Pepin and Saint Paul and three hundred miles above; about four hundred miles are affected by this system of reservoirs on the Upper Mississippi.

Mr. THOMAS. It was stated there was that stretch of river to be affected directly by the construction of this one set of reservoirs, and for that reason the appropriation was put in. Therefore I mention it to justify the committee in the amount put in, while I must say I should question the propriety of completing the whole project, the whole system of reservoirs, unless this system when completed will show the navigation of the river can be improved in low water, that the floods can be restrained by these reservoirs in time of freshet.

How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that by a mistake of the Chair he has already had more time than he is entitled to.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask by unanimous consent that I may be allowed ten minutes further.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask the Chair to call my attention when five minutes have elapsed, as I have agreed to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

Mr. Chairman, fault will doubtless be found with me for the position I have taken in opposition to the improvement of the Galveston Harbor. I want to say that while I am a friend to the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country, I think we ought to proceed with these works as a safe and conscientious business man would proceed with his private business, and that we should not allow considerations either political, social, or otherwise to control us, except those which point out to our judgments the most beneficial commercial results from any improvement we make.

I want again to say that if this appropriation for Galveston had been limited, had been put upon an equal footing with other harbors of the same character and of the same importance, I should probably have restrained myself and abstained from finding fault with the proposition; but when the committee have seen fit to put its foot upon the estimates of the engineer—have seen fit to go on without estimates satisfactory to the committee or to the House and put in three quarters of a million for one year on this harbor, I must protest against it.

I think we had better call a halt. I think we had better wait until the harbor board provided for in the bill has examined and reported. That, I think, would be a safe plan. It does no harm to Galveston. It treats that harbor and its improvements precisely as it treats other points, and I can see no justice in making an exception in favor of Galveston.

I admit that by improving the Mississippi River the grain products of the great West have found a market abroad much more easily and cheaper than in former years. I am aware of the fact that saving in transportation alone in one year, since the completion of the jetties at the head of the passes, reached more than $11,000,000, which amount was saved to the grain producers of the Mississippi Valley.

I am aware also that during the last year nearly $28,000,000 was saved in freight and in insurance to the grain producers of the Mississippi Valley by the improvement of the Mississippi River and the improvements at the heads of the passes.

I have no sympathy with that sectionalism which places the appropriations of one section against those of another. New England gets her bread cheaper if the farmers of Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas can get it to the sea cheaper; and so, instead of their suffering by these improvements, or by these appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors, their poor and laboring classes are benefited by the reduction in the cost of transportation and the consequent reduction in the price of their food.

If Galveston or the State of Texas in a smaller degree, with all her cattle, woolen, and other interests, can be benefited even in a proportionate degree, I should be willing indeed to make any proper appropriation for that State. But if we can get the expenditure down to $3,000,000, why pay eight and three-quarter million of dollars to accomplish the same result? If you can get it down to four millions, why pay more? If Captain Eads says he can do it for eight and three quarter millions of dollars and maintain it for ten years, and the engineers say they can do it for $3,000,000, would it not be safer and more statesmanlike to take the plans of all the engineers of the country and see who can do it best and cheapest?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota for the five minutes yielded by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Chairman, I will not occupy now the time yielded to me by the gentleman from Illinois unless I can have unanimous consent to occupy also the additional time that has been assigned to me by other members of the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will have to object to that.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I shall not occupy the time now.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, looking at the House in its present condition, seeing so many empty seats, I must express my regret that the question before the House seems to have lost much of its interest in the minds of the members as an important public measure, notwithstanding the fact that the House this morning refused to entertain a motion to limit debate upon the bill.

Sir, this bill as reported to this House by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is the result of more than six weeks of the most industrious and indefatigable effort on the part of the committee. The labors of the members of the committee have been so great in the preparation of this bill that they have been practically excluded from participating in what has been going on in the House. For weeks that committee, in order to prepare and report this bill to the House, have had to meet every day at from half past 10 o'clock to 11, and remain in session until 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon. As agents of the House, given a particular duty to perform, intrusted with the preparation of an important bill, we have, after painstaking investigation, presented here the results of our agency in the measure now pending for your consideration. Mr. Chairman, I am not here to contend that every single feature contained in this bill meets my approbation. At the same time I am not here to fight any of the features of the bill, bowing as I do in a spirit of concession to the wisdom of the majority of the committee with reference to the measures which do not meet the approbation of my judgment.

The features of this bill which have attracted the greatest opposition are, first, the improvement of Galveston Harbor; next, the improvement of the Lower Mississippi; third, the appropriation made for a national harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay; and, fourth, the appropriation made to commence the construction of the Hennepin Canal. Now, sir, in three at least of these great measures I am in accord with the majority of the committee. I do not think there is a single fair-minded, unprejudiced gentleman on this floor who will take the pains to investigate what is known as the project for the improvement of Galveston Harbor but will come to the conclusion that no more meritorious measure has been presented to this House involving an appropriation than this one. Now, Mr. Chairman, when I first began the investigation of this project for the improvement of Galveston my mind was not made up one way or the other in respect to it; but when I had looked into it carefully, so impressed was I with the merits of the measure that I gave to it the approbation of my judgment.

I ask gentlemen to listen to me while I briefly state the case of Galveston. There is behind Galveston, which is the chief commercial city of Texas, a vast State; and not only one State, but a number of States and Territories. But if we take the State of Texas alone, there are within the borders of that State more than two millions of people; and so great is the immigration which has poured and is now pouring into the State that within one single decade its representation in Congress increased nearly double. That State is to-day the leading cotton-growing State of the Union. It is to-day the leading cattle-growing State of the Union. And it is to-day the leading wool-growing State of the Union. It is a State having a length of seacoast of between eight hundred and nine hundred miles, and there is not a single harbor or port upon that long line of seacoast where a man-of-war or a merchant vessel drawing eighteen feet of water can enter.

Now, north of Texas is the Indian Territory, which would naturally seek an outlet to the sea at Galveston. There are the States of Kansas, Colorado, and California; there are parts of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico; there is the western part of Missouri, Arkansas, and Louisiana to be benefited by the opening of the harbor at Galveston.

Mr. Chairman, Galveston is to-day the second cotton port in the United States. The annual receipts of cotton at Galveston aggregate about 800,000 bales, and it is only second to New Orleans in respect to the quantity of cotton received there.

Mr. HISCOCK. How many tons would that be?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman can make the calculation for himself upon the basis of 500 pounds lint cotton to the bale.

Now, as regards the cattle raised in Texas, by an act of Congress passed recently (not during this session) those cattle are practically excluded from crossing other States in the Union to find a market. And yet with the enormous number of cattle they have there they have not a sufficient seaport to which they can drive them for transportation to the markets of the world. The city of Galveston, with all of these immense resources back of her, has to-day upon her outer bar only about fourteen feet of water.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman permit me to say, although it may not be of much importance, that the statistics show Savannah is the second cotton port of the Union, and not Galveston?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will ask my friend from Georgia if he has the figures relating to Savannah?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have seen them as to last year's crop.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I know the figures are close between Savannah and Galveston. One year Galveston is ahead, and another, perhaps, Savannah is.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when James B. Eads undertook the deepening of the water at the mouth of the Mississippi River, Congress assigned to him the least available of the three outlets of the Mississippi—that was the South Pass—and it is a fact that at the South Pass, where he was directed by Congress to commence his work, in order not to interfere with the commerce which came through the other passes, there were but eight feet of water, and the largest vessel which could enter the port of New Orleans through the deeper passes could not draw more than seventeen or eighteen feet of water. To-day, and since the completion of the jetties, the largest vessels drawing the greatest draught of water can enter the port of New Orleans without detention, and in consequence of this great improvement at the mouth of the river New Orleans has risen to the position of the second exporting city in the Union, ranking next to New York in that regard. And by reason of the fact that she now has a deep-water entrance, her foreign commerce within a few years has more than doubled.

These are the magnificent results of the work accomplished under the supervision of James B. Eads. I am surprised, Mr. Chairman, that the name of James B. Eads in this bill, to some members, seems like the red flag flaunted in the face of the infuriated bovine. Because it is proposed to deepen Galveston Bay, and because it is proposed to give Mr. Eads a salary for that purpose, and because it is proposed to have him the advisory engineer of the Mississippi River Commission at a very small salary, gentlemen on this floor seem to take alarm. Let us look one moment at the record which Eads has made. Not only has he deepened the mouth of the Mississippi, as I have stated; not only has he successfully treated the most difficult portion of that river, but looking back upon his record as an engineer we find that he was the first to construct, in an incredibly short space of time, a number of gunboats during the late civil war which were enabled to pass Vicksburg and Port Hudson and do so much damage to the southern portion of the confederacy. Then, later on, he was the architect of the Saint Louis bridge, which, considering the difficulties of its environment, is considered by engineers as one of the most difficult feats of engineering accomplished in this or any other country.

Mr. Chairman, I am no more of a hero-worshiper than any other gentleman on this floor, but I am here to do justice to James B. Eads. The fame of this man is not confined to the limits of his own country, as is shown by the fact that, when temporarily in England a couple of years ago, the Parliament of Great Britain employed him to make an examination and give an opinion as to the feasibility of the proposed canal between Manchester and Liverpool, and for an investigation which could not have occupied him but a few days, and for an argument which occupied him but about two hours, Parliament voted him the very handsome compensation of $15,000. And not only that, sir, but the society of arts in England conferred a most distinguished honor upon Captain Eads in token of their recognition of his eminence in the engineering world—an honor never before bestowed upon an American. They voted him the Albert medal for eminent merit and proficiency in the arts and sciences, and when he visited England the second time that medal was presented to him by the Prince of Wales in person.

Again—and I will ask gentlemen to pay attention to this—so widely extended is the fame of this great engineer that the Emperor of Brazil but recently, as I am informed (not by Eads), has been seeking to employ him to make an examination of the mouth of the Rio Janeiro with the view of submitting plans for its improvement; and in order to induce him to accept such employment, the Brazilian Government sent him what might be considered a carte blanche so far as compensation is concerned. But, on account of his engagements in this country and in Mexico in connection with the construction of his ship-railway, he has not accepted that employment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is these works, this record, and the fame which Mr. Eads has won, not only for himself but for his country, as the leading engineer of this epoch, that has led the committee to think it wise and proper to utilize the talent and skill of this great American engineer in our own country rather than let it go abroad into the employment of foreign potentates. I for one, Mr. Chairman, am not here to cast any reflection on the Engineer Corps of the Army of the United States, but I do not believe, sir, all the engineering talent of the country is to be found within the corps; and I call the attention of gentlemen present to the fact that the Government of the United States is perhaps the only great government in the world that does not go outside of its corps of Army engineers to engage the best engineering talent that can be found in the construction of great public works. Whenever England, France, or Germany, or any of the prominent European countries, have a great engineering feat to be accomplished they do not confine themselves to the engineer corps of their armies, but they look about and abroad and employ the best talent to be found; and I say, Mr. Chairman, that that is an example that we will do well to follow.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Have we not done so?

Mr. BLANCHARD. We have done so, sir, but in a very few instances, one of which was the contract awarded to Mr. Eads to deepen the mouth of the Mississippi River. And now when he has accomplished that great work so successfully, and when he has assured your committee that he can obtain a depth of thirty feet in Galveston Harbor as he has done at the mouth of the Mississippi, when he has said that he is willing to stake his reputation as an engineer upon it and almost his life, I say we should heed the words of this man who has already accomplished so much.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman to explain, now or hereafter, the plan upon which Captain Eads proposes to do this work. I have listened faithfully to what has been said upon the subject, but so far I have not heard a word of explanation that I have been able to understand.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In answer to my friend from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] I will state that Captain Eads was before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for more than two hours at the last session of this Congress in explanation of his project for the improvement of the Galveston Harbor, and I hold in my hand a printed copy of his remarks and explanations made on that occasion. The time accorded me prevents me going into a detailed explanation of the work proposed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my other friend from Illinois and colleague on the committee [Mr. THOMAS] was mistaken when he said that this measure had not been explained to the committee. As I have said, Captain Eads himself has explained his plans, and his explanation is in print and accessible to any member of the House who applies for it.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. With pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. My attention was distracted for an instant, and I did not hear distinctly what the gentleman said; but I understood him to say that I was mistaken about this plan not having been explained to the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I said that you were mistaken in saying that the project had not been explained to the committee.

Mr. THOMAS. What I said was that at this session of Congress it had not been explained to the committee either by Captain Eads or anybody else.

Mr. REAGAN. The question was not whether it has been explained at this session, but whether it had ever been explained.

Mr. THOMAS. If my colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], will allow me——

Mr. BLANCHARD. I decline to yield any more just now.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to ask the gentleman one more question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I can not yield further at present.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I wish to state to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], going back to the remark of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BUCHANAN], that the port of Galveston is one-third larger as regards receipts of cotton than the port of Savannah, and I have the statistics here to show it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hope my friend from Georgia who sits near me [Mr. BUCHANAN] has heard the remark of the gentleman from Arkansas just uttered.

Now, gentlemen say that no plans are furnished for this work at Galveston. When Mr. Eads proposed to make a contract with the Government of the United States for the deepening of the water at the mouth of the Mississippi River did he submit any plans? No. A commission of engineers had been appointed by the Government to make an examination of the mouth of the Mississippi and ascertain what it would cost to improve the channel so as to give a depth of twenty-six or twenty-eight feet. That commission consisted of Generals Wright, Alexander, and Comstock, of the Engineer Corps; Professor Henry Mitchell, of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey; T. E. Sickles, W. Minor Roberts, and H. D. Whitcomb, distinguished civil engineers. They reported that the cost to the Government to deepen the channel as much as twenty-six or twenty-eight feet would be $5,342,110. Yet, when Mr. Eads offered to contract with the Government, he said he would do the work and achieve the depth of thirty feet for a sum of $90,000 less than this commission of engineers said it would cost.

It is a fact that the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River, as erected by Mr. Eads, are only one-third the length of those which will be required to deepen the channel at Galveston thirty feet. The jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River, owing to the peculiar conditions existing there, could be and were constructed of willow mattresses. We have not that destructive marine insect the teredo at the mouth of the Mississippi, but it is found in untold millions at Galveston and all along that coast; hence, the jetties required to be built at Galveston can not be built of wood or willow mattresses or any material of that kind because of the teredo. They must be constructed of stone or concrete, and must be three times as long as the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My friend will find that Captain Eads in his printed testimony before our committee speaks of the probable use of willows in the construction of the Galveston jetties, without defining the extent to which they could be employed. But he has stated to me that he never expected he could project that character of work more than one-fifth or one-sixth of the entire extent of the jetties; and he has told me since that further reflection has convinced him he would not be able to use them at all. As his evidence before the committee has appeared in print, I desired to make this statement.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend from Arkansas for the statement. When we consider that the work at the mouth of the Mississippi River is only one-third the length of that required at Galveston; when we consider that at the mouth of the Mississippi jetties could be built of willow mattresses while at Galveston they must be built of stone and concrete; when we consider that we paid Captain Eads $5,250,000 for the work done at the mouth of the Mississippi, will any member rise here in his place and say on his responsibility that $7,000,000 is too great a sum to be expended at Galveston Harbor?

How much money has been already expended at Galveston by the Army engineers in charge of that work, and what results have they achieved? I have the figures here. They have already expended at Galveston nearly $1,600,000, with the result of not deepening that harbor more than three inches, according to the reports. Furthermore, there are two members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors who, during last fall, made a personal investigation of the works of the Government at Galveston, and I have the authority of one of them at least for saying that those works have well-nigh disappeared; that though they were first built up to mean low tide, they are now six feet below mean low tide. In other words, the teredo and the storms have swept them away, and there is now but little, if anything, to show at Galveston Harbor for this expenditure of $1,600,000.

At the mouth of the Mississippi River, before Mr. Eads took charge of the work, there had been expended by the Army engineers the very large sum of $2,300,000; and with what result? When those jetties were commenced a ship drawing seventeen feet of water could barely enter the port at New Orleans. Yet, after an expenditure of $5,250,000 under the direction of Captain Eads, New Orleans ranks to-day as the second best seaport in the Union, being only equaled in its facilities of harbor approach by the Golden Gate at San Francisco.

Now, when this great engineer comes here and tells your committee, who are but your agents, that, notwithstanding the failure of the Army engineers, he can deepen that harbor to thirty feet at a cost not exceeding $7,000,000, is that too large a sum to be expended upon so great a work? Would the people of the United States be willing to-day for a billion of dollars to part with the results achieved by Eads at the mouth of the Mississippi? I opine not. If by an expenditure of six or seven million dollars Galveston Harbor can be improved so as to afford thirty feet depth of water, will not the people of the United States sanction the expenditure? Why, sir, when we consider what is done by other countries in respect to the improvement of rivers and harbors, what we do in the same direction is but a miserable pittance. I have here the figures to show that upon a single harbor, that of Cherbourg, France has expended in its improvement more than $100,000,000.

Again, sir, here now while we are talking over this Galveston project, our neighbor Mexico, notwithstanding the fact that her pecuniary resources are a mere bagatelle compared with ours, has appropriated $10,000,000 for the improvement of the harbor at Vera Cruz, and that to be accomplished under a plan submitted by Mr. Eads.

I desire briefly to call the attention of this House to the very remarkable statement of what has been done by the little country of Holland, in Europe, and what I read is taken from a speech of mine during the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress:

The greater part of the Netherlands has been formed of deposits of rivers in the same manner as the Egyptian delta is formed by the Nile or the delta of the Mississippi by that great river. The principal rivers which have so formed it are the Rhine, including its different branches, the Meuse and its branches and confluents, and the Scheldt.

To establish a firm footing amid so many rivers the inhabitants have kept them as far as possible within prescribed channels by embankments and have formed innumerable canals to receive the superfluous waters and to serve as means of internal communication. "The system of drainage," says a writer in the Encyclopedia Britannica, "of what would otherwise have been an immense mud-bank, well deserves to be ranked among the wonders of the world. The land thus rescued from the rivers is nowhere much elevated above the sea, and in many places is even below the sea-level, so as to require still more wonderful defenses against the ocean. These defenses are in part supplied by the operation of nature casting up sand-hills along great part of the coast; but where these have not been formed their place is supplied by dikes of vast extent, built in the course of ages, partly of huge blocks of granite brought from Norway and partly of bundles formed of young trees reared expressly for the purpose. These dikes stretch for hundreds of miles along the coast, and with those which line the rivers and canals, and with the requisite sluices, drawbridge, and hydraulic works of every kind, are estimated to have cost not less than £300,000,000" (equivalent to about $1,500,000,000). "They form in so small a country a most astonishing monument of human industry. Yet they are not greater than the situation requires. They are barely sufficient to preserve the country from the dominion of the waters. The motto on the arms of one of the provinces, 'Luctor et Emergo,' still describes the struggles of the invincible Hollanders requisite for maintaining the ground they stand upon." The highways or roads often run for miles in a straight line along the summits of these dikes, and are thus at once dry and elevated, commanding extensive views.

Not only have the Hollanders done this, but they have also drained and reclaimed Lake Haarlem, containing 42,000 acres. As early as A. D. 1643, a proposition to endike and drain the lake was made; and similar schemes, notably in 1742 and 1821, were brought forward from time to time. But it was not until 1836, when one furious hurricane, on the 9th of November, drove the waters as far as the gates of Amsterdam, and another on the 25th of December sent them in the opposite direction to submerge the streets of Leyden, that the mind of the nation was turned seriously to the matter. In August, 1837, the King appointed a royal commission of inquiry; the scheme proposed by the commission received the sanction of the second chamber in March, 1839, and in the following May the necessary law was passed and the work commenced. The lake covered an area of about seventy square miles, and had an average depth of more than thirteen feet. As it had no natural outfall, it was calculated that probably one thousand million tons of water would have to be raised by mechanical means.

Pumping commenced in 1848, and the lake was dry by the 1st of July, 1852. The cost of reclaiming this 42,000 acres was £1,080,000, or about $5,400,000. The government, however, sold lands to the amount of £780,000, so that the actual cost to the nation was only £300,000, or $1,500,000.

At the time when Holland undertook the accomplishment of these gigantic works of internal improvement her resources and her population were insignificant compared with ours. Let us glance a moment at them.

According to the census of that country of 1853, the eleven provinces constituting Holland contained a population of only 3,203,232; and according to the budget of receipts and expenditures of the national revenue for 1856 the total revenue from all sources of the Government was £6,099,255, or about $30,500,000.

Mr. Chairman, when we consider the small number of inhabitants of that country, and the small revenue of the government at the time of the completion of these works, we do not wonder that what they have performed in the way of protection against the mad waters should excite the marvel and admiration of mankind. In the language of another, "the inhabitants of this little storm-beaten republic, with matchless courage and constancy, have literally raised their country from the bed of the ocean, through centuries of toil, and advanced it to the foremost position in Europe, in commerce, agriculture, manufactures, opulence, and arts. All this has been done amid the storms of a frozen ocean by a handful of people through the instrumentality of their government."

To this what says this great Republic, with its 55,000,000 of people and its annual revenues of more than $300,000,000? Does it begrudge the ten or twelve millions this bill carries? I do not believe it.

Sir, this is but one showing of what other countries have done in advance of us in great works of internal improvement. I hold there is more than one clause in the Constitution which justifies large appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. And, sir, I for one, within the just limits of the Constitution, am in favor of internal improvements.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, my time is so limited I can not further discuss this proposed improvement at Galveston. I wish now to notice the remarks of my colleague of the committee, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], in reference to his criticism on the appropriation made in this bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf. My friend stated, among other things, that according to the plans proposed by Captain Eads for the river it would cost $100,000,000 to improve the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to Cairo. That swift-winged messenger the telegraph flashed throughout the country that extravagant assertion of my friend, and it overtook Captain Eads on his way to Mexico in the interest of his ship-railroad at the city of Dallas, Tex., and I hold in my hand a telegram received this morning from him, which I will read:

DALLAS, TEX., January 30, 1885.

Mr. BLANCHARD, of Louisiana,
(Care House of Representatives, Washington):

Please correct, or ask Mr. GIBSON to retract, statement of yesterday. I have never stated cost of improving Lower Mississippi at $100,000,000. The plan reported by commission in 1880 was my plan, and if adhered to and judiciously executed will not cost $30,000,000.

JAS. B. EADS.

Now, Mr. Chairman, against the assertion of the gentleman from West Virginia I place the words of Captain Eads himself. He uttered that assertion when he was attacking that feature of the Mississippi River appropriation, which places Eads in the position of advisory engineer to the Mississippi River Commission at a salary of $3,500 per year.

I desire to say right here, this salary of $3,500 which is proposed to be paid to Captain Eads, in order to get the benefit of his great services as an advisory engineer to the commission, is something he cares little or nothing about, for it is a well-known fact that he is a comparatively wealthy man.

I will stop right here to say that he declined to enter into the employment of the Government of the United States for the improvement of the Galveston Harbor at the price of $5,000 a year and $3,000 contingent on each foot of depth attained. He said that that compensation was nothing like what was offered to him by foreign governments.

But notwithstanding that, Mr. Chairman, the committee did not change those figures, and they did not for the reason that they had confidence and the assurance that the liberality of the people of Galveston themselves would meet the emergency of the case and make up to Captain Eads whatever of compensation he lacked or demanded which the Government refused to give. In other words, we believed that while his services are in demand at large sums by other countries, he will not refuse this work for the Government of the United States at Galveston, the people there making up to him if necessary a sum sufficient to induce his acceptance of the proposition.

I cite this in behalf of Galveston to show the earnestness of the people there. It is no scheme of any wharf company, as has been stated here. I could, if I had time, as a contrast to the paragraph read from the Clerk's desk by my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS], have a counter-statement read from the leading newspaper of Texas relating to the improvement of Galveston Harbor, and refuting the statement that the project is urged in the interest of any wharf company. The charge that the contemplated improvement of the harbor is in the interest of a wharf company is the invention of the enemies of the improvement, and wielded by them for the destruction of the measure.

Not only have the people of Galveston shown their earnestness and liberality in this matter by offering that if Congress will pass this bill and give them the depth of water their commerce demands they will, in order to secure the undertaking of the work, satisfy Captain Eads themselves in the matter of compensation, but they have heretofore shown even greater liberality and spirit of enterprise in matters pertaining to the improvement of their harbor. The last session of the Forty-seventh Congress failed to pass a river and harbor bill, and by reason of that failure there was no money to prosecute Major Mansfield's work at Galveston. In this emergency the city of Galveston raised $100,000 for the purpose of carrying on those works, and thus the deficit which had been brought about by the failure of Congress to pass the river and harbor appropriation bill of that year was met.

Again, as I am informed, prior to that time these same people raised and expended another hundred thousand dollars in aid of the works of the Government looking to the improvement of their harbor. Now when I tell this House this I think they will agree with me that the Galveston appropriation in this bill is put there to meet the great demands of that city and section for a deep-water harbor. I think they will agree that it is no scheme, no job of any sort whatever; and in proof of that I point to what those people have done and are proposing to do themselves toward the attainment of that end.

Now, sir, coming back to the remarks of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], who I regret to see is not now near me, I desire to answer his argument that the clause of the Mississippi River appropriation which places Mr. Eads in the capacity of advisory engineer to the commission "is unconstitutional and unprecedented." He stated that he could not vote for such a proposition for the reason that it was unparalleled in the history of our country and was not sanctioned by the Constitution. Why? Because, as he insisted, it attempted to take from the Executive of the Republic the power of appointment conferred upon him by the Constitution. I will state right here in this connection what this clause of the bill is, so that gentlemen may judge for themselves.

It is that the work to be done on the Mississippi shall be done under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, recommendations, and estimates of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved or amended by the advisory engineer, which office is hereby created at a salary of $3,500 per year, and it is recommended to the President to appoint to that position James B. Eads.

There is no appointment in the bill of anybody to any office, and in that particular no part of the bill, certainly, is amenable to the criticisms passed upon it by the gentleman. I desire to say further that he is mistaken when he states that there is no precedent in the legislation of this country for such a provision.

Mr. LONG. Let me ask the gentleman, would you have recommended the appointment of an advisory engineer if the committee had supposed that anybody else was to be appointed than Captain Eads?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state, in answer to the question of my friend from Massachusetts, that this bill does not appoint anybody.

Mr. LONG. But I ask the question in good faith, would you have recommended the creation of such an office if the committee had believed that anybody else was to be appointed than Captain Eads?

Mr. BLANCHARD. And I answer the gentleman from Massachusetts in equally good faith that in my own opinion we would not. But it is certainly within the constitutional power of the President in making such appointment to disregard the recommendation of Congress. He could appoint Captain Eads under that provision, or anybody else. But further than that, I wish to say that there are plenty of precedents for the action proposed to be taken.

If I recall aright the legislative history of our country, it occurs to me, without having looked it up at all, that during the administration of the elder Adams, and when it was thought the country was about to be involved in a war with France, the Congress of the United States passed a bill recommending that General Washington, then in retirement, be appointed commander-in-chief of the armies and navies of the United States, and it was done. But coming down to a later period—and as I see the gentleman from West Virginia before me now I desire to call his attention to a measure which passed Congress in 1860. I refer to the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1861," approved June 25, 1860, by President Buchanan. In that act appears the following clause:

For the completion of the Washington Aqueduct, $500,000, to be expended according to the plans and estimates of Captain Meigs, and under his superintendence.

This is not only the making of an appropriation, but the designation of an officer under whose direction it should be expended.

Mr. HISCOCK. Did you say that Buchanan signed it?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I repeat, this was not only an act of Congress making an appropriation of half a million dollars—quite a large sum at that time—but actually appointing a man under whose superintendence that money was to be expended.

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Not now.

Mr. GIBSON. Will not the gentleman allow me a moment, since I submitted to his interruption during my remarks?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I can not yield now.

There, I say, is the provision of the law, and it meets the very case the gentleman denied existed; and apropos to that I will read from the message of President Buchanan transmitting to Congress his approval of the act and the reasons he gave for signing the bill. I will not read it all, but will refer to a clause relating to the appropriation for the construction of the Washington Aqueduct:

It has been alleged—

Said the President—

I think, without sufficient cause, that this clause is unconstitutional—

That is to say, the clause appointing Captain Meigs—

because it has created a new office and has appointed Captain Meigs to perform its duties. If it had done this it would have been a clear question, because Congress has no right to appoint to any office, this being especially conferred upon the President and the Senate. It is evident that Congress intended nothing more by this clause than to express a decided opinion that Captain Meigs should be continued in the employment to which he had been assigned by competent authority.

Now, Mr. Chairman, Congress in this bill, if this bill becomes a law, does nothing more than to designate to the President in the way of a recommendation Captain Eads for the position of advisory engineer of the commission.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GIBSON. I want to ask the gentleman from Louisiana if Captain Meigs was not at that time an officer of the United States Army serving his Government, if he had not been already assigned by the Government to carry on a special work, and if this was not an appropriation to carry out specifications which he had made in his report to the Government previously; and I want to ask him if there is any analogy between that case and that of employing James B. Eads to overlook the officers of the Government.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Answering the last question of the gentleman first, I will say if he can not see the relevancy of this citation to the case at bar, then I can not make it any clearer to him.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Answering the first question the gentleman put to me, I will state that Captain Meigs was an Army engineer. I will state further, just as Mr. Buchanan does, that he had been previously, by competent authority, assigned to that work. But, Mr. Chairman, the President the very next day could have ordered, by virtue of his position as Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, that officer of the Army away from that work; and for fear he would do it the Congress of the United States, in making at that time a very large appropriation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for ten minutes more.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope if the extension of time is allowed to the gentleman from Louisiana he will remember it when an extension of time may be asked for others.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman from Louisiana did not object to an extension of time being granted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] awhile ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Louisiana have his time extended for ten minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The President could have ordered Captain Meigs away from that duty; but in order that he might be there to continue that work the Congress of the United States recommended, in stronger language than we use in the present bill, that Captain Meigs continue in the prosecution of the work. Do we do more? I submit in all candor that we do not. I will ask any gentleman here if there is anything more in this feature of the bill than a mere recommendation to the President to appoint James B. Eads to fill the position of advisory engineer which is created by the act? And I repeat again, that notwithstanding that recommendation, the President could refuse to appoint Captain Eads and could appoint another. Therefore, that clause of the bill is clearly not amenable to the criticism of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] that this is an unconstitutional and unheard-of provision, because Congress thereby attempts to exercise the constitutional prerogatives of the Executive.

Mr. PERKINS. Will my friend from Louisiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. Does this do anything more than provide for the employment of Captain Eads for this purpose?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It does not.

Mr. PERKINS. And has any court ever held that Congress has no right to authorize the employment of a man for a particular purpose?

Mr. BLANCHARD. No, sir; and that is all there is in this proposition. I thank my colleague for his valuable suggestion.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], whom I do not now see in his seat——

Mr. PRICE (in another part of the Hall). I am here.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am glad to see that the gentleman is present. In the few remarks he submitted to the House the day before yesterday he took occasion to sectionalize this bill, if I may so express it. He took occasion, and I am glad he is the only member on this floor who has done so, to ascertain how much was given to the East, how much to the Northwest, how much to the West, and how much to the South. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I say it with gladness, that the question of sectionalism, whether political or otherwise, never entered into consideration in the River and Harbor Committee. I say we rose to a plane superior to that; and I am sorry to see that the gentleman himself did not do the same.

Mr. Chairman, I exceedingly regret that I have not the time to have read from the Clerk's desk some figures, since the gentleman from Wisconsin has interjected the sectional issue into this discussion. No one regrets that he has done this more than I do. I for one want to know no North, no South, no East, no West in considering great questions affecting our common country.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. BLANCHARD. No, sir; I have only ten minutes. I regret exceedingly that that issue was brought in here, but since it was brought in by the gentleman from Wisconsin, I must be permitted in the few moments allotted me to meet him on that question. And, I repeat, not having the time to have read from the Clerk's desk these figures, I will take occasion to have them printed with my remarks.

In this connection I will state that the gentleman's own State of Wisconsin ranks very high up in the aggregate of appropriations made for the improvement of its rivers and harbors. It comes next to New York and Michigan, or third on the list. Therefore, sir, it comes with an ill grace from a Representative of that State to object to this bill in the face of these facts. Because, forsooth, with $750,000 in this bill for Galveston Harbor, a little more is given to the Southern than to the Northern section of the country, he makes up his mind to fight the bill.

Mr. Chairman, ours is a great country. It has the longest and greatest rivers, it has the greatest lakes, and it has the longest line of seacoast of any country on the face of the globe. It is too great and grand and glorious for a narrow sectional spirit longer to be tolerated.

Why, sir, there is within the limits of the United States one-sixth of the world's entire wealth; and it is a fact, sir, that we as a people are increasing in wealth at the rate of $2,000,000 a day—more than twice as rapidly as our nearest rivals Great Britain and Germany, and nearly six times as rapidly as the greatest of our other rivals. It is a further fact, and I call the attention of this House and of the country to it, that we as a people to-day are doing one-third of the world's entire mining, one-fourth of the world's entire manufacturing, one-fifth of the world's entire agriculture, and one-sixth of the world's entire banking on a territorial capital of but one-eighteenth of the world's land area, and that, too, but partially reduced to use.

Sir, I say, in conclusion, let us continue to present the example of a continental republic, possessed of every variety of climate and production, whose people are as one again—loyally devoted to the perpetuity of the Union, fearing no foreign foe, following the pursuits of peace, and solving practically the great problem of self-government. [Applause.]

APPENDIX.

Executive Document No. 64, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, issued by the United States Engineer Office, gives the entire amount appropriated by the Government for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country from the day the very first appropriation was made. This, including all the repairs, surveys, dredging-machines, and other machines and materials used, amounts to $105,796,403, comparatively moderate, if we consider the sums expended by other powers of far less extent than this.

Viewed sectionally, the Eastern States have no cause to complain, New York feast of all. That State stands at the head of the list in appropriations, having secured no less than $9,539,973.95 for rivers and harbors situated entirely within its limits.

The South, on the other hand, has some cause to protest. There is a greater extent of water front in the South than any portion of the Union, and more rivers, yet it falls far in the rear, and the Southern State which has fared best ranks only eighth in the list, as follows: New York, $9,539,973; Michigan, $7,915,856; Wisconsin, $6,675,795; Illinois, $6,277,080; Ohio, $3,832,764; Delaware, $3,043,636; Massachusetts, $2,928,779, and Texas, $2,569,372. Divided sectionally, it is found that the eleven Eastern States have obtained $24,742,717, or about $2 to each inhabitant; the twelve Western States, $38,033,533, or $2.15 to each inhabitant, and the thirteen Southern States, $27,176,222, or $1.50 to each inhabitant. Two States, Colorado and Nevada, have secured nothing for harbors. It is discovered further that the little mountain State of Vermont has received very nearly as much as South Carolina, and that Connecticut's harbors and rivers have cost more to improve than those of Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Kentucky, South Carolina, or Tennessee, including their share of the improvements in the Mississippi, Ohio, and Tennessee Rivers.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I have frequently heard debates on the river and harbor bill in the House and in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and in most cases the attacks made upon the bill were directed against the small appropriations. Thus far the criticism of this bill has avoided the small appropriations and has been directed to the large ones. After an examination, in connection with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, of the various recommendations for rivers and harbors throughout the country, I have come to the conclusion that these much-derided small appropriations are in the main more profitably expended than the large ones, and that commerce is aided more by the small than by the very large appropriations.

To my mind the objectionable features of this bill are not the small appropriations. I have no doubt that there are such appropriations made in this bill for undeserving items, but in the preparation of a measure of this kind, with the information available to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, it was simply impossible for that committee to judge intelligently of all the various schemes presented for its consideration.

There are in this bill ninety-five appropriations of $5,000 and less; ninety-four between $5,000 and $20,000; forty from $20,000 to $50,000; nineteen from $50,000 to $100,000; eighteen from $100,000 to $200,000; eight from $200,000 to $500,000; one between $500,000 and $1,000,000; between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000, none; and between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000, one.

If the members of this House will carefully scrutinize these items I believe that in the appropriations made for the small streams—appropriations of $5,000 and less, those between five thousand and twenty thousand and those between twenty thousand and fifty thousand—they will find but very few objectionable ones, and they will find that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, so far as it has had opportunity and facilities for examining into these cases, has given a fair and considerate judgment in dealing with the different rivers and harbors.

The present method of making appropriations by Congress for these purposes is radically wrong. Under it the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the House can have no adequate information as to whether an expenditure of money for any particular stream should be made or not. With the information accessible to the committee under the present system it is impossible to say with anything like precision or accuracy that a given sum should be applied to a particular improvement. As I have said, the method is radically wrong. If you will take up the last report of the Engineer Department you will perceive how defective the method is. The Chief Engineer in his report to Congress says:

In view of the misapprehension that seems to prevail regarding the annual estimates, it may be advisable here to go somewhat into detail.

After an interval of more than ten years an act was passed and approved June 23, 1866, "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works, heretofore commenced under the authority of law, and for other purposes." (Statutes at Large, volume 14, page 70.) This act made provision by specific appropriation for more than fifty works of improvement and directed that examinations or surveys be made at more than thirty other localities with a view to their improvement. It was quite full, and expressed with much detail the manner in which the sums appropriated were to be applied. It also made provision for reports both special and annual (to be submitted to Congress) in relation to the various improvements and surveys therein provided for. Among other things set forth in the act as necessary to be reported to Congress, it required that the annual report shall be accompanied "with a statement of the amount and date of all former appropriations for each work, and a full estimate for its entire and permanent completion, with the amount that can be profitably expended in the next fiscal year."

In the following year an act was approved March 2, 1867 (volume 14, page 418), making provision for sixty works of improvement and eighteen examinations or surveys, and containing the same general and specific requirements as to expenditures, reports, estimates, commercial statistics, &c.

It is proper to state that these annual estimates are made in compliance with the above-quoted requirements of law, and are not to be considered as carrying with them a recommendation of the officer in charge of the district or of this office, either in respect to the commercial value of the improvement or to the amount to be appropriated, other than for the most economical administration of works, the prosecution of which had already been approved by Congress.

The preliminary step is taken by Congress when it authorizes a survey, and any gentleman on this floor by simply requesting the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to insert in the river and harbor bill authority for the Engineer Department to make a survey can have such a proposition inserted in the bill. Then the Engineer Department will make the survey, and the Chief Engineer will make a report and estimate as to the amount of money that will probably be required to make the stream thus surveyed navigable.

That report comes before us as a recommendation from the Engineer Department, or rather it has been so treated by Congress. In point of fact, as gentlemen will see, the Engineer in Chief disclaims making any such recommendations in these estimates that he sends to Congress. So you see we are pursuing a method wholly embraced in most cases within a circle, whose confines do not contain sufficient data on which to act intelligently on so important a subject. Congress authorizes the survey of the stream; the Engineering Department surveys the stream and makes a report to Congress with an estimate; Congress makes an appropriation because the Engineer Department made the survey and estimated the cost; and the Engineer Department made the survey and estimated the cost because Congress authorized it so to do. There you have the long and short of the entire proceeding.

Therefore the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was compelled, in the exercise of a wise discretion, to reject many of these recommendations, and about one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty of the streams embraced in the reports of the Engineering Department for this year were rejected upon such knowledge as the committee could obtain out of the Book of Estimates. Now, what kind of a basis is that upon which to make these appropriations? Of course the committee is often aided by members of Congress, but the information thus obtained varies. Some members of Congress are happily endowed with a very vivid imagination. They can point out the great advantages to commerce which are to result from the improvement of a given stream. Others are matter-of-fact individuals, not specially endowed with powers of imagination; so they make statements not so attractive and often not so influential, and are quite unable to make the worse appear the better reason. Others, again, have much argumentative fertility and can make words appear to be things, and can wholly obliterate, when necessary, things by words.

The information coming in this way is impelled doubtless by an honorable desire on the part of the members that an appropriation should be made. Their fellow-members, anxious not to impute to them any intention to misrepresent the facts, take their word, and the appropriations are made. Then you find members of Congress who appear before the committee and argue, "Oh, if you will improve this stream in my section of the country you will build up a vast commerce; there are hundreds of thousands of acres of fine timber land and fine coal land; all that is needed to develop the resources of that section of the country is to make an appropriation." Others say, "We do not want appropriations made except so far as commerce may demand it." That is a principle to which I agree. That is the policy for which I contend, that no appropriation should be reported by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or passed by this House unless the actual present demands of commerce require it. I do not believe in appropriating money for particular streams with the view of developing a commerce that may ultimately come from that district. Sufficient unto the day is the necessity thereof.

Thus, in considering these propositions, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and the House are not advised as they should be with reference to the amounts which ought to be appropriated for particular streams. I am not surprised that gentlemen rise on this floor and criticise with just severity the report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, because it is open to such criticism from the very necessities and exigencies of the case.

It was hoped that some responsibility for river and harbor expenditures would be placed somewhere. It was thought that this responsibility ought to be fixed in the Secretary of War, or if not in the Secretary of War, in the Chief of Engineers. But when we come to the Secretary of War, what have we? We have from that officer, as a general thing, a mere submission of the estimates made by the Engineer Department, without any specific recommendations.

Secretary Lincoln, a man of the highest integrity and character, undertook in a letter to the Forty-seventh Congress to point out various small streams which were provided for. Some of these appropriations were carried through, some were defeated. But on went the work of spending money for stream after stream, notwithstanding the fact that this information had come from the Secretary of War.

On this occasion the Secretary of War has recommended an appropriation of $8,000,000 for the river and harbor bill. My friend the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. WILLIS] was in error when he said that this bill contains but one-third of the amount recommended to Congress. This bill appropriates more than $4,000,000 in excess of the recommendation by the Secretary of War to Congress.

Mr. WILLIS. I am sure my friend does not desire to misrepresent me; and as I see a similar statement in one of the New York papers of this morning, I hope he will allow me to say that, as he knows and I know, the Chief of Engineers submits annually to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors an estimate of the amount which can be profitably expended on these works during the coming fiscal year. The estimate thus submitted by him for the next fiscal year is $34,000,000; and that is what I stated. This amount is not what will complete the existing projects, but the amount which he states can be profitably expended. That is all I said.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not wish in any way to misrepresent the gentleman——

Mr. WILLIS. There can be no difference of opinion upon that point. There is only one side to it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the engineer recommend that the amount be expended——

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. Or does he say that it could be expended?

Mr. WILLIS. He recommends the expenditure. The subordinate engineers often submit estimates which the Chief of Engineers cuts down, as he has done in this case.

Mr. HISCOCK. My recollection is that he states the amount which can be expended, if the work goes on; but he does not indorse the work.

Mr. WILLIS. He advises Congress that at these various points he can profitably expend—"profitably" is the word—these various amounts.

Mr. GUENTHER. May I call attention to the fact that the Secretary of War says that $500,000 can be profitably expended for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, yet the committee has not reported an appropriation of one solitary cent for that purpose?

Mr. WILLIS. That is true.

Mr. BAYNE. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is mistaken in saying that the Engineer in Chief recommends the appropriation of $34,000,000. If the gentleman had paid attention to what I have been reading he would have discovered that the engineer disclaims in specific terms any responsibility for these estimates put in by the subordinate engineers.

Mr. WILLIS. Here is a column on page 164 in regard to rivers and harbors, in which all the rivers and harbors recommended to Congress are stated. In the last column are the words "the amount that can be profitably expended in the next fiscal year as reported by the Chief of Engineers."

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Read the note on the same page.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not yield, and I hope gentlemen will not interrupt me. Now, Mr. Chairman, the note on page 164, referring to the very statements put in by the Chief of Engineers, is as follows:

NOTE.—The following statement is not furnished as a part of the "annual estimates for the public service" required by the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Statutes, page 370), to be furnished by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury, but is inserted as a convenient and customary summary of items taken from the annual report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1884, showing, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1867 (14 Statutes, page 421), "the amount that can be profitably expended in the next fiscal year" on each of the uncompleted works mentioned.

Mr. WILLIS. That is precisely what I have said.

Mr. BAYNE. Immediately before that, on page 164, my friend the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will find that the Secretary of War recommends an appropriation of $8,177,000 for the rivers and harbors of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

Mr. WILLIS. That is not in conflict with the other. Where is the conflict?

Mr. BAYNE. I say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not wish to misrepresent the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; there is nothing further from my intention than that.

Mr. WILLIS. I am aware of that fact.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, I understand him to say that a recommendation had come in here from the Secretary of War for $34,000,000, and that we had appropriated about one-third of that recommendation. I say the Secretary of War has recommended but $8,177,000 to go into the river and harbor bill for this year, and not a dollar more.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no conflict between the gentleman and myself. I repeat again, that the Chief of Engineers, the officer in charge of these works, has recommended to Congress he can profitably expend $34,000,000, that the Secretary of War has scaled that down to $8,000,000, and the committee has scaled it down to $12,000,000, are matters we know, but it still remains not that $34,000,000 will complete these works, but that if Congress will give him the money he can profitably expend that amount; and that amount is a reduction, as the gentleman knows, on the estimates of the local engineers in charge of the different works.

Mr. BAYNE. All I have been trying to do, and the gentleman's statement confirms it, is to show that Congress has no adequate information on which to make these appropriations. You hear my friend saying that the Engineer Department recommends $34,000,000 in round numbers.

Mr. HISCOCK rose.

Mr. BAYNE. I can not yield. I have more than I can get through with. I would permit my friend as soon as any other cheerfully if I had the time.

Now, the Engineer Department estimates about $34,000,000. The Engineer in Chief has trimmed it down—how much I do not know. The Secretary of War has diminished it to a little over $8,000,000.

But I have a number of other matters to mention here before I take my seat. There are, as I have said already, some objectionable measures in the bill. One is Sandy Bay, on the coast of Massachusetts, for which an appropriation of $100,000 is put in to begin a work that will cost from six to eight millions of dollars for a harbor of refuge; and that appropriation is made here in the face of the recommendation of the commission which went there to examine into the proper place to locate a harbor of refuge. That measure ought to be stricken out of the bill. Until the engineers unite or the commission appointed to report whether a harbor there is necessary and select a locality other than that or agree upon that, there should be no money advanced for that purpose.

Another objectionable measure in this bill is the Hennepin Canal; not because it is objectionable in my mind per se, for I think it would facilitate commerce to construct that canal. I believe that it is an honest project and intended to benefit commerce. I do not believe there is any job back of it in any respect, but I am opposed to incorporating canals in the river and harbor appropriation bill. If you put this one in you will put another and another, and in a few years hence you may have thirty or forty canals in your river and harbor bills. Therefore I think this canal should stand upon its own footing and be reported by the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Another scheme objectionable in this bill, and which involves a violent departure even from the methods the committee has always heretofore employed in the way of making a bill, is one of $750,000 for Galveston. That appropriation is made without any plans, specifications, or estimates having been furnished to Congress. No man here knows what the scheme of Captain Eads may be for the improvement of that harbor.

No man can undertake to say that it will prove successful. That appropriation is made in a spirit, in my opinion, of blind faith in Captain Eads and without anything else in the world to recommend it. It has been cited on the floor here often and over again that Captain Eads achieved wonderful engineering exploits; that he built the Saint Louis bridge and improved the mouth of the Mississippi River. Mr. Chairman, the Saint Louis bridge, as has been said by my colleague [Mr. THOMAS], has nothing whatever to do with engineering skill in providing water ways. The work on the passes at the mouth of the Mississippi River, I declare to you to-day, is but an experiment yet to be tried, with the chances largely against its ultimate success.

Mr. KING. Where does the gentleman get his authority?

Mr. BAYNE. I will give my authority. In the first place, if any man will go beyond the mouth of those passes and make the necessary soundings he will find a bar beyond the mouth of the passes; and let the Engineer Department of the Government make that investigation, and my word for it they will find that result.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BAYNE. I can not yield now. I say they will find that result, and that for this and another reason which I will cite the jetty system is a failure.

Mr. KING. That is not true.

Mr. BAYNE. Another fact is also apparent, that this pretended jetty system is a failure at the mouth of the Mississippi River for the reason that whereas ten, twelve, or fourteen years ago the Atchafalaya Bayou was a narrow, unpretending water way, fordable at many points, with but little water in it, now it has become quite a stream, and the waters of the Mississippi River have been diverted by the jetties into that bayou; and the danger is now that all the waters of the Mississippi River will eventually take that course to the ocean.

Now, the plan, as I understand it, is to get Mr. Eads back of the Mississippi River Commission in order to do what? At a salary of $3,500 a year he is placed there in order that he may throw a dike across the Atchafalaya, and thus make the waters of the river pursue their course to the sea through the jetties at the mouth of the river. There is an express appropriation of $65,000 for that purpose. What is the effect of this plan? The effect is as certain as that rain falls, to fill up the river between the Atchafalaya and the passes at the mouth of the Mississippi River. That part of the river is gradually filling up, and, unless the waters of that stream are again deflected into the Mississippi, they will so fill up that water way that it must become unnavigable.

On the other hand, if you fill that place up, throw a dike across the Atchafalaya River, you are simply inviting the floods of the Mississippi River to make their way through some other bayou—to open up some other water course for them—and they will reach the ocean through such pass as they are reaching it through the Atchafalaya, and as they will continue to reach it in gradually increasing volume if they are not shut out by a dike across that river. Why is this true? Simply because the jetty system implies a species of damming up the water. They talk of getting "accelerated velocity" in order to scour out a channel and deepen it.

How do they get it? They dam the water to get the greater fall. These jetties are constructed upon that principle, and there is no more certain thing in this world than that those low alluvial lands about there will be broken through at different points by these great floods down that river, and no man's ingenuity or skill in this world can confine these vast quantities of water within the banks of the Mississippi between the Atchafalaya River and the Gulf.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BAYNE. I will, for a question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Does not my friend from Pennsylvania know that the flood-head at the South Pass is nearly a foot lower to-day than when the jetties were built? The effect of the jetties has been to lower the flood-head, not to elevate it, as the gentleman stated.

Mr. BAYNE. There may be records going to indicate that fact, and it is possible that it is attributable to the fact that a greater volume of the water is going down that unnamable river, and thus lowering the water at the passes. That is in all probability the cause of it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But my friend said that this jetty system had dammed the river up.

Mr. BAYNE. And there is nothing more certain than that the jetty system is damming it up now to a certain extent, and the water that formerly went through the passes has been deflected and is passing through the Atchafalaya River.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But how do you account for the fact that it has lowered the head of water at the passes?

Mr. BAYNE. It has not lowered it above.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But it has lowered it at that point.

Mr. BAYNE. That is true; but not above. Where you confine the channel and increase the velocity of course it would secure a deepening of the channel in time; but the water above has been dammed up by these jetties, and the consequence is the flow and push of the water is not so great above as in the jetties, and the sedimentary deposits will gradually fill up the channel above the jetties, which result is going on at this very moment, and I predict with what little knowledge I have on this subject, and it is not very great, that this jetty system will ultimately prove a failure.

There will be only one way to obviate it, and that is to build jetties all the way up the Mississippi River, and thus confine its waters within one channel, and within jetties so powerful and secure and so well built that the waters of this great stream can not undermine them or wash them away.

It would require hundreds of millions of dollars to do that thing. Now they want a channel made at Galveston. Galveston has my cordial sympathy. I will appropriate a million or two millions or three millions or five millions to give you an assured harbor at Galveston. I do not want to deny Galveston the chances of putting out its commerce and receiving into its harbor the largest vessel we float. I am not only willing but I am anxious that it should be done. But why do it according to the plan of Captain Eads? How do you know it is going to succeed? I say the reasons against success are infinitely stronger there than they were against the success of the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi.

Why? Because you have four hundred and fifty square miles of water above the harbor in an almost stagnant condition; and the only way you get an outflow is when the tide rises and pushes a body of water in which must run out, or where there are heavy rains in that section which contribute to those streams and the water comes down those streams. You can not create the velocity of flow that you have at the mouth of the Mississippi River; and for that reason the scheme proposed by Captain Eads, if we know what it is, will prove a failure at Galveston; and the engineer talent of this country, including Captain Eads, has not yet discovered the method of giving a 30-foot channel at Galveston.

Mr. FUNSTON. Now, with the gentleman's permission, I would like to ask him a question: How does he know that to be the plan of Captain Eads?

Mr. BAYNE. I will tell the gentleman how I know that to be his plan. Captain Eads was before the committee, not at this but at the last session of Congress, and he was interrogated by myself respecting his plan. I had a curiosity to know what his plan was. He expatiated with elaborate eloquence on his theories; but I wanted to know something about the practical plan. So I put the inquiry to him:

Mr. BAYNE. Is your present plan for improving Galveston Harbor similar to your plan for the jetty work at the mouth of the Mississippi River?

Captain EADS. It is based upon the same principles precisely. The location of the works must be quite different, of course.

Mr. BAYNE. And it is to make a channel 1,000 or 1,500 feet wide?

Captain EADS. The channel at Galveston would be wider than that, but it would be nothing like the width that the Government engineers propose.

Mr. BAYNE. Nothing like 12,000 feet?

Captain EADS. That is a matter I should take into serious study before I should determine what particular width and direction I should give, but I do not think it would be over 3,000 feet.

Mr. BAYNE. Is there a similarity of conditions between Galveston and the mouth of the Mississippi?

Captain EADS. Only in so far as this is a bar composed of material that is brought there by the action of the current?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. At Galveston the bar is formed by material brought there by the action of the Gulf currents, and at the mouth of the Mississippi the material was brought there by the action of the Mississippi currents?

Captain EADS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. Have you made a personal examination of the harbor at Galveston?

Captain EADS. I have been there several times.

With a diplomacy worthy of the gentleman, whose abilities are acknowledged, he declined to say that he had made such an examination as would enable him to tell what his plans were, where he would place his jetties, how far apart they would be; and to this day and hour he has not stated that plan. And yet Congress is asked to appropriate $750,000 without knowing how he is to expend one dollar of that money.

Then one word more in this connection. Mr. RANKIN inquired:

Mr. RANKIN. As I understand it, there is nothing in this plan of yours that is not open to the world. Is there anything to prevent the Government engineers from adopting it?

Captain EADS. No.

Mr. RANKIN. Suppose the city of Galveston should accept yours as a business proposition—and I direct this question more to the representatives of that city who are now present than to you. If that plan is adopted by the Government why would it not be better to appropriate a certain sum for each year than to appropriate four or five millions in one sum for the whole number of years? The committee are now asked to recommend this appropriation to do something for which we have no estimate. They generally manage to get the money out of it some way.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS. Were the provisions of this bill or the other bill that came to the committee before the committee at the time Captain Eads was there?

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; neither the provisions of this bill nor the bill that has since been presented was before the committee at the time Captain Eads was there.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My friend is in error. The bill introduced by Judge REAGAN was at that time before our committee and under consideration.

Mr. OCHILTREE. And it was because that bill had been introduced that Captain Eads was present.

Mr. BAYNE. My memory may be at fault. I do not remember seeing the bill till I saw it this session of Congress; and I am sure I could not have seen it, or at least examined it, or I would have a vivid recollection of its existence; because of all the marvels presented to any legislative body for its action I never found the equal of that bill which was presented for the improvement of Galveston Harbor in the interest of Captain Eads—a bill appropriating $1,000,000 for the first foot, $1,000,000 for the second foot, $500,000 for the third foot, $500,000 for the fourth foot, $350,000 for each of the next six feet, $400,000 for each of the next two feet; all that vast appropriation to be given to Captain Eads for securing eleven or twelve feet of water—which anybody could have secured over that bar by the simple use of dredgeboats—and without a single solitary guarantee to the Government that that contract would be performed and that work done except the withholding of $500,000 for ten years, on which the Government was to pay interest at the rate of 4 per cent.

Mr. KING. There is no such provision in this bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I never saw such a measure in all my legislative experience. I doubt whether anybody anywhere ever saw the like of it before, and I hope the American Congress will never see its like again.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Is that provision in this bill?

Mr. RAYNE. No, sir; it is not in this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Ah! It is a man of straw.

Mr. BAYNE. That was the original bill, and it is very properly used as a measure of Captain Eads's fertility of resource and as an indication of the things he may do, and in fact the reason he did not do it was because the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would not have it so.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania this question: If Captain Eads would so deal with the Government in regard to Galveston Harbor, how would he be likely to act with unlimited power as to the Mississippi?

Mr. BAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the committee is better by far than the original proposition, and yet the proposition of the committee ought to be voted down. To make a vast appropriation of $750,000 for this work without a plan, without estimates, without knowing how it is going to be applied—to say to one man, "Take this money and expend it as you please and secure a certain number of feet of water"—to leave it all to him, the Government exercising no scrutiny, no judgment about the matter, is a proceeding which as a member of this House I can not countenance.

I think Congress ought to have sufficient data on which to form an intelligent judgment before making such an appropriation as this. I think Congress ought to know where this money is going, and how it is going to be expended, and upon what plan. I think Congress ought to have the opportunity of submitting the plans for this work to the rigid scrutiny of other engineers, in the service of the Government and elsewhere. I think these plans ought to be published in the newspapers, so that all the world might see them and see what was proposed to be done, and then, perchance, Congress might get such enlightenment in the way of criticism upon the plans as to lead gentlemen to say, We will not appropriate this money to be expended in this way, because we believe that if we did it would be lost.

Inasmuch as the gentlemen from Texas have such an abiding faith in Captain Eads I am willing to recommend his employment by the Government, but I am unwilling to appropriate any more money than will be required to get out the necessary plans for the work. Then I want those plans and specifications brought before Congress, that it may examine them and see whether the money should be expended in that way or not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the next great appropriation in this bill is that for the Mississippi River. I can recollect very well when on the floor of the House gentlemen rose in their places and said, "Give your appropriations for the grand Mississippi River; make liberal appropriations for the Mississippi, but strike out all the creeks and rivulets and the runs."

Gentlemen criticised the river and harbor bill perhaps with just severity, but very often I believe with an undiscriminating judgment that did not do them credit. But in that way they created a volume of public sentiment in favor of making large appropriations for the Mississippi—a sentiment almost as vast in extent as the body of water in that great river at high flood. So, on the present occasion, we are asked to make another great appropriation of nearly $4,000,000 for the Mississippi.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what has been the result of the work that has been done so far on that river? Sir, it has proved a complete failure, and the Macedonian cry has come to us, "Give us Eads that he may help us!" "Help us or we sink!"

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It was Cæsar that said that.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, it was Cæsar that said that; but it is the same thing. It is what the Mississippi River Commission is likely to say.

We have here a demand for nearly $4,000,000, and, after having made some examination into that subject, I say here that every dollar of that money, if it is expended on that river—except the portion of it that may be spent for dredging—will be money absolutely thrown away.

Has any gentleman here a full knowledge of the dangers besetting the channels of that river at high flood? Why, sir, I am credibly informed that the water will undermine the banks so that at times as much as four or five or six acres of land will drop into the stream at once—land having great large trees on it, with roots running deep down into the ground, and, therefore, a far stronger and more powerful obstacle to resist the action of the water than any piles that can be driven. Yet that land with those great trees upon it, with their great roots, is undermined and swept away almost in a moment. Nevertheless you have a "commission" down there driving in their little piles, and geting up their little mattresses, and hauling their little cart-loads of stone, and putting that material down, and undertaking to check the course of that mighty stream at high flood. It is the finite fighting the infinite. It is simply an impossibility.

Tennyson says somewhere:

> Possibles do and impossibles dare,
> And gallop in spirit everywhere.

This is but the daring of the impossible. It is not the conclusion of good sound sense; it is not the conclusion of practical knowledge. It is the daring, the hope, the dream, the expectation of vivid imaginations that something can be done; and therefore, as I have said, this cry has gone up from the Mississippi River people—"Give us Eads, or we shall fail in our undertaking!" Sir, they have failed in their undertaking. And now is Congress going to vote three or four million dollars more for this Mississippi River improvement to be wasted in the same way?

The plans of the commission are all ready to go on. Those plans have been submitted. The members of the commission themselves have the integrity and the candor to say that their plans have failed. The report of the commission tells of the difficulties they have encountered—a caving bank here, another caving bank there, and another there; and if any gentleman will take up that report and mark the number of cases of caving banks, I venture to say that he will find at least ten or twelve such places where the banks are stated to have caved.

Why, sir, I heard only last night that a lot of piles had been driven at one point on the Mississippi River for the purpose of narrowing the channel—carrying out the scheme of the Mississippi River Commission; that the water had washed the sand away; that the piles had toppled over, and that one of them had come in contact with the wheel of a steamboat and broken it. These are results of the efforts you are making to narrow the channel of the Mississippi River and to improve the river at an expenditure which must ultimately reach hundreds of millions of dollars, because every million you put in there will require another million or more to undo the mischief your system is causing.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to corect an error of fact? The Mississippi River Commission does not state that this work is a failure; the majority of the commission state that it is a success, and ask for liberal and prompt appropriations to prosecute the work. My friend knows very well the serious difference of opinion that there is in regard to some things in that report; but his statement just now with regard to the report of the commission was, I presume, an unintentional error, and therefore I decided to correct it right here.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, if there is any dispute on this point, I call attention to the report of the Mississippi River Commission. On page 3 it speaks of a caving bank; again on page 4 it speaks of a caving bank, and again on page 7 and page 8. On page 9 two are mentioned, and again caving banks are mentioned on pages 10 and 12. Thus you can go through this report page after page and find nothing but "caving banks" and other difficulties. And finally the commissioners "cave," and must have the assistance of Captain Eads! There is this blind belief on the part of some men that Captain Eads can go there and get that commission out of its difficulty. Eads is a great man, but he is unequal to that emergency.

A MEMBER. And you are not willing to let him try?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir; I voted to put in Captain Eads as an advisory member of the commission. I am willing to give the utmost facilities for securing whatever result is possible; I am willing he shall go there and advise with that commission. But I do protest against this Congress appropriating nearly $4,000,000 to be thrown away on that river.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether the very same gentlemen who are now urging the appointment of Mr. Eads were not absolutely certain in 1882 that this Mississippi River Commission was all that was needed to manage the improvement of that river?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, it was thought so.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. They were then just as sure that the commission was all that was necessary as they now are that Captain Eads is the desideratum.

Mr. BAYNE. Not only so, but it is confessed all around that the plan pursued by the commission is the plan which Eads suggested.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Oh, no; that is not conceded at all.

Mr. BAYNE. They may change their plan now; but the plan of Mr. Eads was to narrow the channel and put into operation the scouring-out process. He himself says over and over again that this is his plan—to narrow the volume of water, thus encouraging the scouring-out process and securing a deep channel. That is the whole system. I can not elaborate it or put it in scientific terms. In plain language that is the plan.

My friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has just handed me a telegram on this subject from the War Department. I will read it.

WAR DEPARTMENT, January 31, 1885.

Hon. F. HISCOCK:

Your telegram received. Chief of Engineers reports that the only damage reported is that mentioned in Captain Sears's letter of January 26, which is said to have occurred 17th of January, and is reported as follows: "On the 17th instant a cave occurred two hundred and fifty feet in length and one hundred feet deep about 1,000 feet above range 20. It took place in a pocket, making it larger. The current is too strong and the river too high to admit of making another mat. It is proposed to float a string of piles, prepared for experimental pile revetment, and sink them in this pocket." The breach is stated to be near Pilcher's Point, about eighteen miles above Lake Providence. Further report will be called for by telegraph from the officers in charge.

ROBT. T. LINCOLN, Secretary of War.

This is a recent report, and it confirms the report of the commission that these banks are caving at one point and another, that revetments have failed, that piles have failed, that dikes have failed, that everything has failed. And it is in the nature of things that everything must fail, because no practicable human agency can cope successfully with the great flood tides of the Mississippi River; and the sooner we make up our minds to that fact the better it will be for us all and the better it will be for the Treasury of the United States. Everything has failed but the Treasury and the water. The water is still there; and the Treasury is still at the other end of the Avenue. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have here pointed out what I believe to be grave objections to this bill. I believe this vast appropriation for the Mississippi River is an objection, and an insuperable one. I believe the appropriation for the Mississippi River should be somewhere in the neighborhood of $500,000 for the purpose of dredging and alleviating the dangers that beset the navigation of that stream. I think only about fifteen or twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars should be appropriated for Galveston Harbor, to include Captain Eads to prepare plans and specifications to be submitted to the next Congress. And if Captain Eads can convince the next Congress he can give Galveston a channel twenty-five or thirty feet in depth, I say employ him to go on and supervise that work under the direction of the Secretary of War and have that work done.

I know the difficulties that the people of the South Atlantic coast labor under in reference to harbors; I know the great number on the North Atlantic coast. I appreciate the difference, and I for one am anxious to help them out. I want to help them out wherever I can, and whenever I am convinced an appropriation will effect that object I will give it cheerfully; but I am unwilling to vote these vast sums out of the Treasury for that purpose when we have no assurance at all this money will secure the results predicted.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to incorporate in my remarks some matter I have not had an opportunity to deliver.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Efforts have been made to discredit the capacity of the officers of the United States Engineer Corps. It has been said that their education is limited in the science of civil engineering. Having the highest confidence in the honor and integrity of these officers, I desired to inform myself as to their opportunities for qualifying themselves for the important service they are required to perform in relation to the improvement of rivers and harbors. So I wrote to General Newton, Chief of Engineers, who replied, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1885.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 26th instant, I have the honor to say that all officers of the Corps of Engineers, in addition to their military duties at the United States Military Academy, are there instructed in mathematics, natural and experimental philosophy, astronomy, chemistry, mineralogy, and geology, electricity and magnetism, civil engineering and drawing, in all of which they must take a high standing. This course requires four years' hard study.

Immediately after graduation the officers assigned to the Corps of Engineers are ordered to the Engineer School of Application at Willets Point, N. Y., where for two and a half years their practical and theoretical instructions are continued, and they become familiar with surveying, astronomy, and electrics, as well as the important portions of military engineering.

With this preparation these officers are then assigned to duty as assistants to officers engaged upon river and harbor works, and as such assistants have practical instructions in work of this character. After serving as assistants for periods varying from four to eight years, sometimes longer, they are assigned at first to the charge of districts of minor importance and in time to the more important works now in charge of the Corps of Engineers.

From the commencement of operations looking toward the improvement of rivers and harbors, about the year 1823, until such work ceased from lack of appriations, about 1839, the Corps of Engineers had entire charge of these works of improvement, and again in 1844 and 1852 they were committed to their supervision.

In 1864, when operations by Government upon river and harbor works were again resumed, these were placed in charge of officers of the Corps of Engineers of the Army, and for the past twenty years the work has progressed under their care and control.

They alone, aided by such assistants as the extensive operations in this field devolving upon them rendered it necessary for them to call to their aid, have for the past sixty years, whenever money was available, carried on these important works, and if the conditions of these rivers and harbors when work commenced could be compared with the results obtained and spread before the country in a tabulated form, the result would demonstrate the skill and fidelity of the corps.

With facts so patent as those which have been enumerated in relation to the preliminary education required at West Point and Willets Point, and the long experience almost amounting to an exclusive control of the river and harbor improvements for the past sixty years, I must express my astonishment at learning that it has been proclaimed in Congressional committees that the officers of the Corps of Engineers of the Army have but a limited education in civil engineering.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, Brigadier and Brevet Major General.

HON. THOMAS M. BAYNE,
House of Representatives, Capitol.

The following was received by me from Col. W. E. Merrill, one of the most accomplished engineers in the United States Engineer Corps:

The paper on the South Pass jetties, printed in the October number of the Transactions, by Mr. E. L. Corthell, is a valuable and interesting one, but there are some errors in it which are worth noting, and it contains certain suggestions that should not be permitted to pass without comment.

The South Pass jetties have given an excellent mouth to the Mississippi River, and their success has been such as to warrant the United States in paying for them a large bonus over the cost of construction; but it should not be forgotten that the engineer who built them contracted with Congress to give a depth of thirty feet for a width of three hundred and fifty feet for a total sum of $7,250,000 on the principle, widely advertised, of "no cure, no pay," and failed to secure the depth. As a matter of fact, he only earned under his contract the first three installments of half a million each, with a quarter of a million for maintenance, making in all only $1,750,000. The fourth installment of half a million was not payable until a channel had been secured having a depth of twenty-six feet with a width of three hundred feet, and no such channel has even yet been secured. In order to be sure of the exact facts of the case I to-day (January 21, 1885) telegraphed to the inspecting officer to know the exact width of the 26-foot channel, and have just received the reply that it is two hundred and ten feet wide.

In March, 1879, Mr. Eads procured the passage of an act of Congress reducing the required width of the 26-foot channel from three hundred to two hundred feet, abolishing the clause requiring the 28-foot and 30-foot channels, and redistributing the payments, so that he should receive the same sum, $7,250,000, for the 26-foot channel as he was to have received for the 30-foot channel. It is true that a provision was inserted requiring a central depth of thirty feet regardless of width, but this clause added nothing to his obligations, as it was hardly possible to secure the required depth of twenty-six feet over a width of two hundred feet without having a central depth at least four feet greater. His original contract for a channel thirty feet deep, with a width of three hundred and fifty feet, would probably have carried with it a central depth of thirty-five feet.

I mention these facts not in the way of criticism or personal allusion, but merely to show the great difficulty of making results tally with predictions when dealing with large bodies of water in motion, and to show that iron-clad contracts with the Government can sometimes be set aside. In my judgment there was much more engineering skill and fertility of resource shown in the works at the head of the South Pass than at the jetties themselves. There were abundant precedents for the latter, but none that I know of for the former.

The lessons which Mr. Corthell draws are nine in number and on them I would like to make a few comments.

In his condemnation of the "outlet" theory, as applied to the Mississippi River, I fully agree; but my acquiescence comes from a study of the river above New Orleans, and I do not see that experience at the jetties has any particular bearing on the subject. No engineer has ever disputed the fact that by contracting a stream you can deepen it; in fact it is an elementary principle, and it has been applied on the Ohio River with moderate success since 1825. I say "moderate" success, because local deepening is often followed either by the formation of a new bar below the contraction or by a decrease of depth on the bar next above.

I do not think that the criticisms on the work at Galveston and at Charleston are justified by the facts. In building jetties upon movable sands the lower courses must necessarily be built first, and, from the nature of their construction, they can subsequently be widened or heightened as occasion may demand without making the ultimate cost of the jetty materially greater than if the intention to build it above the sea-level had been proclaimed from the beginning. Nothing has been done at either locality except what would have had to be done in any event. It seems to me that a wise and prudent engineer, dealing with such a difficult problem as the improvement of a harbor on a sandy shore, would proceed cautiously, feeling his way by degrees, prepared to change his plans whenever their effect seemed unfavorable.

I am disposed to believe that as a rule jetties should be above the level of the sea, as they are at Ymuiden, the mouth of the Maas, Port Said, and many other localities; but in spite of the belief I should certainly try first to build two submerged jetties and see how they worked, because it is quite possible that one or the other might require removal. It is also possible that in some localities submerged jetties may answer every purpose, at a great saving in cost; in other places jetties above water may confine storm-tides too much, and may cause too violent an action within the jetties and create a shoal bar in the open sea beyond them. To illustrate the necessity of making haste slowly, and the difficult nature of the general problem, I would refer to the sandy harbors along the northeast coast of France and the north coast of Belgium, where jetties have proved a practical failure, even with the aid of large flushing basins and high tides.

In spite of the large experience of the French and Belgian engineers with this class of harbors, the King of the Belgians a few years ago offered a large prize, open to the engineers of all nations, for the best essay on harbors on sandy coasts. The result of the competition I have not learned; but it is clear that the engineers who have had most experience with these harbors consider the problem a very difficult one. The failure at the mouth of the Maas is sufficient proof that it is not always possible to predict the results of jetties on sandy shores, even though a large river flows out between them.

In reply to the criticisms on Galveston Harbor contained on page 326 I will submit the following statement from Colonel Mansfield, the engineer in charge, to whom I forwarded Mr. Corthell's article, with the request that he would send me a reply.

Colonel Mansfield quotes the paragraph beginning on the third line of page 326, and replies as follows:

"This budget of errors, and the errors following, as regards results, may be best answered by giving a brief account of the work at Galveston, so far as executed, with accompanying results, and stating what is intended to be done in the line of further improvement.

"I will right here call attention to a most important consideration which seems to be entirely overlooked, namely, the condition of the two problems—the one the removal of a bar formed by the détritus from a great river, where immediately beyond the crest of the bar and the jetty-heads is the deep water of the Gulf ready to receive the material brought down by the current and scoured from the bar, where it can no longer obstruct navigation; the other the removal of a bar formed by sand drifted along the coast and heaped up by the sea at the entrance to a bay into which no rivers of any size enter.

"There is no parallelism in the case of the South Pass, Mississippi River, and Galveston Bar. The problems being so entirely dissimilar, they must be treated separately and upon a careful study of all the conditions surrounding each. A treatment that would solve the one might not solve the other.

"Galveston Bay has an area of four hundred and fifty-one square miles, forming an immense reservoir, whose surface is known to have been raised to a height of ten feet in a great storm, and not infrequently raised three, four, five, and even six feet by easterly winds, though the average range of tides is but one and one-tenth feet. The discharge of accumulated waters of the bay under off-shore winds, which usually follow easterly blows, creates strong currents through the gorge, maintaining here forty feet of water, and the momentum of discharge is sufficient to excavate and maintain a channel of thirty feet to a distance of over a mile, twenty-five feet a distance of two miles, and twenty feet over three miles out from the gorge.

"The crest of the bar is about four miles out, and the distance across from 18′ to 18′ is about one and one-quarter miles, and beyond the exterior 18-foot curve the bottom of the Gulf deepens at the rate of about one fathom to the mile. Beside the outer bar, obstructing the entrance to the bay, there was an inner bar obstructing entrance to Galveston channel, along which the wharves are located. Upon this inner bar there is now twenty-six feet of water at low tide, where formerly there was but about nine feet; and the depth of water over the outer bar has been improved, so that navigation has been benefited to the extent of about two feet, and this has been accomplished by the Government works, which consist of an incomplete jetty running from Fort Point out to the crest of the bar a distance of four and one-quarter miles.

"The project contemplates the raising of this work to a greater height if necessary and the construction of a jetty on the north side, the position of which is yet to be determined.

"Previous to my taking charge in 1880, Major Howell had expended $527,000, and secured as a result twenty feet water on the inner bar. I have expended since in the construction of the jetty $975,000.

"This structure is a most substantial one, and is not likely to deteriorate much; that it has been an economical one the records will plainly show.

"Should it be necessary to raise this jetty above high-water mark, it can be done for less than $1,000,000, while the jetty upon the other side, equally high, may be built for less than $2,000,000.

"My opinion is that it will not be necessary to raise the jetties to a height above overflow. To be sure, the greatest effect will be produced thereby, but the question, if any, is, will it be necessary in order to secure the required depths of channel? I think not; nor will it be necessary to raise the jetties so high, in order to guard the channel against filling from wave action. Let me give you my experience.

"At Arkansas Pass Bar, my jetty, nearly a mile in length, originally brought near to the water surface at mean low tide, but since compressed so that there was an average of more than four feet over its entire length, caused a channel to cut where desired through the bar eleven feet deep where there was but four and a half feet before, and this channel has been maintained a long time and is improving. I am now raising this jetty above overflow.

"Here is a single jetty, not on the side whence the drift comes, but on the other side, and nothing in the way of a jetty to prevent the whole drift of sand along the coast from coming into the channel.

"It would seem that Mr. Corthell has yet much to learn on the subject of the improvement of river and harbor bars. No two rivers or harbors are precisely alike, and to lay down in advance a law that shall be rigidly applied to all alike, without regard to the varying circumstances, would be the height of absurdity."

The statement of Mr. Corthell that there is to be two and one-fourth miles between the jetties is positively denied by the Chief of Engineers and by the resident engineer, both of whom state that the north jetty has not yet been located. Mr. Corthell asserts that "lateral outlets were left near the land, ostensibly to let the tides into the bay," and he vigorously condemns this method of construction. I agree with him, but I can find no authority for the existence of these outlets; nothing of the kind appears in the last official map of Galveston Harbor. There is a low place in the jetty about three miles from the shore, but this is nowhere "near the land," and it appears to be merely a place where the work is incomplete. The map shows that the shore end of the jetty, for at least a mile from the shore, is above the wafer surface.

The total expenditures made by United States engineers on the improvement of the outer bar at Galveston is a little less than a million. This is just one-eighth of the sum that Mr. Eads asks Congress to appropriate in a lump for his project. I would like to ask the author of the paper if he or any one else could have done any more with the sum allowed by Congress than Colonel Mansfield has done, and how he or any one else could have completed an eight-million job for one million. It is understood that Mr. Eads proposes to build a pair of jetties, just as the Government engineers propose. With an eight-million appropriation he can undoubtedly work much faster than a Government officer with two hundred thousand a year; but the nature of the problem is such that in any event he must do about the same amount of work in pretty much the same way.

The only possible variation is in the location and length of the jetties, and as his location has not been divulged it can not be criticised. Experience gained in building the existing south jetty shows that it can be raised above water-level for one million more. The north jetty can be built at the same cost as the south jetty, and the entire improvement can be completed for $3,000,000. Why then should the United States give any one a bonus of four millions for what can be done just as well by its own officers at cost, and without any bonus at all.

If the United States is not satisfied to use its own officers to do this work, then I submit that the matter should be thrown open to public competition, and all members of the Society of Engineers should have an opportunity to submit proposals. It is more than probable that competent engineers and contractors can be found who will guarantee twenty-six feet of water for a much less profit than $4,000,000. Congress has passed laws requiring that contracts be given to the lowest bidder, and yet we find that Congress itself is seriously discussing the question of selecting one man out of the whole nation, and giving him, without competition, an enormous contract at more than double the estimated cost of the work.

The practical effect of such a contract is to make an immediate appropriation of nearly eight millions for the improvement of Galveston Harbor. Had less than half of this sum been appropriated when work on the outer bar began, the work would now be completed. Mr. Corthell's statement that one and a half million dollars have already been expended on Galveston bar (meaning the outer bar) is incorrect; a very large amount having been expended on the inner bar, a very necessary work, but wholly disconnected with the outer bar. The exact expenditure on the south jetty has been $975,000, or less than a million.

The final lesson that Mr. Corthell enunciates is that civil-engineering work should be in the hands of civil engineers. He seems to forget that United States military engineers are thoroughly educated as civil engineers, and in many particulars experience in the two branches is identical. Moreover, all the other Army officers have had years of experience as civil engineers, and it is as civil engineers that they are admitted into the American Society of Civil Engineers

He makes a plea that "the doors be thrown open freely to all engineers fitted by education and experience for the service required." To this I make no objection; but there is a wide difference between an engineer and a contractor, and while he talks of throwing open the doors "to all engineers," his whole paper is written in the interest of a single favored contractor.

If Congress should choose to select Mr. Eads as the engineer of the works at Galveston Harbor I should not raise a word of protest, for I have as high an appreciation as any one of his genius as an engineer; but when he is brought forward as a contractor in such a contract the matter stands on a different footing, and I feel it my duty to point out the objections.

In conclusion, I would call Mr. Corthell's attention to his error in asserting that in no other country are military engineers employed on civil works. Great Britain makes exactly the same use of her military engineers as does the United States.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. WILLIS, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PATENT OFFICE BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House report from the Commissioner of Patents of the business of his office for the year ending December 31, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days, from February 2, on account of important business.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House joint resolution (S. 104) providing for printing and distribution of the Descriptive Catalogue of Government Publications; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

SUPERVISING ARCHITECT.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, by unanimous consent, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7523) defining the duties of the Supervising Architect, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MOUNT DESERT FERRY.

Mr. MILLIKEN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8146) providing for the establishment of a port of entry at Mount Desert Ferry, in the town of Hancock, in the State of Maine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. COX, of North Carolina (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: Petition of citizens of Waterville, Kans., asking for such amendment of homestead law as will enable settlers within railroad limits to take homestead on additional 80-acre tracts—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. W. W. BROWN: Memorial of the Philadelphia Commercial Exchange, praying for the passage of the bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, praying for the placing certain scientific books on the free-list—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the National Board of Trade, urging the passage of the Senate bankrupt bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, relative to the importation of alien laborers under contract—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. DEUSTER: Petition of business men of Milwaukee, Wis., asking that the United States shall acquire the title to the two canals connecting Portage Lake, Michigan, with Lake Superior—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Petition of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, for passage of Senate bankrupt bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, to place on the free-list books on physical, natural, and medical science, and apparatus—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EVERHART: Resolution of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, urging the passage of the Senate bankrupt bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of Philadelphia Produce Exchange, favoring national bankrupt bill—to the same committee.

Also, petition of the New York State cider and cider-vinegar makers, for repeal of so-called "vaporizing act of 1879"—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FORNEY: Petition and papers of Susan Wilson, widow of Benjamin I. Wilson, deceased, late of Cherokee, Ala., asking for reference of claim for property taken by the United States Army during the late war, to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition and papers of Rebecca Riggers, widow of Robert Riggers, deceased, of Cherokee County, Alabama, asking reference of similar claim to Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. HARMER: Resolution of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, in favor of placing on the free-list books pertaining to physical, natural, and medical science, and apparatus—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the board of directors of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, in favor of the Senate bankruptcy bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KEAN: Petition of citizens of Elizabeth, N. J., calling attention to the rapid spread of Mormonism, and asking early action to prevent same—to the same committee.

By Mr. KEIFER: Petition of John G. Wamen and 48 others, praying for the passage of a bill granting a pension to Anthony Peterson, of Ohio—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Memorial of Richard S. Kirk, of Montgomery County, Maryland, asking compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Henry C. Mumma and Samuel Mumma, executors of Samuel Mumma, deceased, of Washington County, Maryland, for compensation for property taken by the United States Army during the late war—to the same committee.

By Mr. PHELPS: Petition of citizens of Morris County, New Jersey, and others, favoring legislation for the Territory of Utah—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the iron-ore men of the Northwest, against the ratification of the Spanish treaty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PRYOR (by request): Petition of James Clendinnin, of Jackson County, Alabama, asking compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. W. F. ROGERS: Resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange of the city of Buffalo, in favor of the purchase by the United States of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-canals—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolution of the Merchants' Exchange of the city of Buffalo, in favor of the passage of the Senate bankrupt bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROSECRANS: Petition of James A. Powlett, relative to the loading of heavy ordnance—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of citizens of Monticello, Ind., asking Congress to suppress Mormonism in the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. A. HERR SMITH: Resolution of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, in favor of putting on the free-list scientific books and apparatus—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, in favor of the passage of the Senate bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 67 citizens of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, against the ratification of the reciprocity treaty with Spain—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TUCKER: Petition of Henry T. Hartman, of Lexington, Va., to extend the time of patent, &c.,—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WAIT: Petition of Stephen M. Kellogg, of Waterbury, Conn., for the purchase by the United States of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Canals—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WEAVER: Petition of W. A. Hartly and others, of Bennet, Nebr., asking for increase of widows' pensions—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. J. S. WISE: Papers relating to the claims of John W. Conard, Ebenezer J. Conard, Oliver G. Butts, George Cooper of John, all of Loudoun County, Virginia—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. FORAN: Of 393 citizens of Pike, Brown, and Fayette Counties, Ohio.

By Mr. KLEINER: Of soldiers of Dale, Ind.

By Mr. LOWRY: Of 30 citizens of Fort Wayne, Ind.

By Mr. MORRILL: Of J. E. Baird and others, of Indian Territory.

By Mr. SHIVELY: Of William H. Jordan and others, of Bourbon, Ind.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Of J. S. Hutson and others, of Trumbull County, Ohio.

By Mr. WARD: Of citizens of Anderson, of Zionsville, of Jamestown, and of Elwood, Ind.

By Mr. WELLER: Of citizens of Bassett, Iowa.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 2, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. J. DE WITT MILLER, of Philadelphia.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of John C. Spooner, chosen by the Legislature of Wisconsin a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1885; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

He also presented the credentials of GEORGE G. VEST, chosen by the Legislature of Missouri a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1885; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

MILITARY INSTRUCTORS IN COREA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I herewith transmit a communication from the Secretary of State in regard to the desire of the Government of Corea to obtain the services of one or more officers of the United States as military instructors in that country, and recommend the adoption of a joint resolution authorizing such officers as may be conveniently spared, and who may be selected for that duty, to proceed to Corea for the purpose indicated.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., January 30, 1885.

THE ALERT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

When the expedition for the relief of Lieutenant Greely and his party was being prepared in the early part of the year 1884, and a search for suitable vessels was being made, the Alert, then the property of Great Britain, and which had been the advance ship of the expedition under Sir George Nares, was found to be peculiarly fitted for the intended service, this Government immediately offered to purchase that vessel; upon which Her Majesty's Government generously presented her to the United States, refusing to accept any pay whatever for the vessel. The Alert rendered important and timely service in the expedition for the relief of Lieutenant Greely and party, which, in its results, proved so satisfactory to the Government and people of this country.

I am of the opinion that the Alert should now be returned to Her Majesty's Government, with suitable acknowledgments for its generous and graceful acts of courtesy in so promptly putting the vessel at the service of the United States, and I therefore recommend that authority be given me by Congress to carry out this purpose.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., January 30, 1885.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). If there be no objection, the message will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and printed.

Mr. CONGER. That seems to be a question of courtesy between nations. In that respect it is immaterial to the people of the United States or the Navy whether the vessel is returned or not returned. If it relates to the comity of nations, the courtesy, and the recognition of their tender of it to this nation, and the return of it after its valuable service to the country, the question should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan make that motion?

Mr. CONGER. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the message be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 21st ultimo, certain documents relating to the collection of the tax upon distilled spirits; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. WILSON, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Patents, submitting, in compliance with the requirements of section 494 of the Revised Statutes, a report of the business of the Patent Office for the year ending December 31, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 232 of the Revised Statutes, an abstract of the organized and unorganized militia force of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 5th ultimo, copies of all the papers on file in his Department relating to the condition of affairs at the Kiowa, Comanche, Wichita, and other Indian agencies; which was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the communication will be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with the accompanying papers.

Mr. CONGER. By that reference will the accompanying papers be printed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will not. The letter of the Secretary will be printed without the accompanying papers. The Chair supposes, as the papers are very voluminous, consisting largely of reports which have already been printed, it would be well to refer the papers without printing to the committee, and they can request the printing if they see fit.

Mr. CONGER. Very well. The committee can ask for their printing if it is deemed necessary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting sundry communications, in the nature of petitions, from infantry officers of the Army, urging the passage of Senate bill 2442, to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of J. F. Halloway, president, and 12 others, of New York city, on behalf of the Society of American Engineers, praying such legislation as will increase the efficiency of the Patent Office and secure a prompt determination of the causes considered therein; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of W. D. Graham, of Wesson, Miss., praying for the substitution of the seventh for the first day of the week as a day of rest and devotion; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present, in the nature of a petition, resolutions adopted at a meeting of the National Board of Trade held recently in this city, in which they respectfully pray for the passage of the bill entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to the entry of distilled spirits in distillery and special bonded warehouses," submitted recently by Secretary McCulloch, claiming that the measure will afford a greatly needed remedy for the existing oppression to an important branch of industry. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of A. W. Colton, M. D. Carrington, J. H. Bowman, and 50 other citizens of Toledo, Ohio, and two petitions of citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, praying that the United States Government shall acquire the ownership of the two canals crossing Point Keweenaw, Lake Superior, Michigan, as recommended by the Secretary of War; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Toledo, Ohio, praying for the passage of an act granting one hundred and sixty acres of land to all honorably discharged soldiers of the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONGER presented a memorial of the Marine City (Mich.) Stave Company, by C. McElroy, president; the Detroit Stave and Heading Works, by R. S. Keys, secretary; the Saint Clair (Mich.) Timber Company, by John T. Sill, secretary and treasurer, and other citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of the passage of the House bill prohibiting the importation of contract labor; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Michigan; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Preamble and concurrent resolution adopted by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Michigan.

LANSING, January 29, 1885.

Whereas the Senate of the United States did pass a resolution of the date of April 22, A. D. 1884, instructing the honorable Secretary of War to cause an inquiry to be made as to the cost of construction of the Lake Superior Ship Canal and the Portage Lake Improvement Company Canal; and also to inquire upon what terms said canals might be purchased by the United States, and make free water ways to the commerce of the great lakes; and

Whereas the honorable Secretary of War did designate Col. O. M. Poe, of the United States Army, to make such examination and report, in conformity to said resolution; and

Whereas the honorable Secretary of War did report, on or about January 5, A. D. 1885, that Colonel Poe had made such examination, and on whose report did recommend that Congress take steps to purchase the same, and make them free water ways to the commerce of the lakes; and

Whereas the tolls collected by these canals are a serious burden to a numerous people and a very large industry embraced inside the limits of the territory supplied by these canals; and

Whereas these water ways should be made free channels to the great traffic that is now springing up with Minnesota, Iowa, and the country along the Northern Pacific Railroad, that passes through Lake Superior, finding an outlet to the East and seaboard; and

Whereas the dangers of the navigation of Lake Superior may be greatly lessened by the improvement of this water way, and make a safe shelter at a point where the dangers of this lake are the greatest, and most serious disasters have occurred: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Michigan (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use their best endeavors to secure such legislation by Congress as will result in the United States acquiring, upon fair and reasonable terms, title to and ownership of the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company and Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canal and Railway Company, connecting the waters of Keweenaw Bay through Portage River, Portage Lake, and the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canal and Railway Company with the waters of Lake Superior, for the purpose of making them free to the commerce of the lakes, and securing a commodious harbor of refuge for that commerce at a point on Lake Superior most dangerous to it.

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be, and he is hereby, instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

ARCHIBALD GRATTAN,
President of the Senate.
LEWIS M. MILLER,
Secretary of the Senate.
NEWCOMB CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
D. E. CROSSMAN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILSON. I present the petition of D. McKay and other citizens of Iowa, praying for the passage of the bill forfeiting what is known as the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railway Company land grant, being in amount 85,957 acres, located in Northwestern Iowa, and which the State of Iowa has withdrawn from that railroad company. As that bill has been reported, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of General James A. Beaver and others, citizens of Centre and Clearfield Counties, Pennsylvania, praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Susquehanna River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON presented a petition of citizens of Osceola and Plymouth Counties, Iowa, praying for an amendment of the bill (H. R. 7299) providing for the forfeiture of certain uncarned lands granted to the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railway Company which will protect the rights of persons who have in good faith purchased lands from said company; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the managers and officers of houses of refuge and reformatories for children in various parts of the United States, praying for an appropriation to enable the Bureau of Education to publish an annual digest of information as to the work of reformatory institutions for children; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of 58 citizens of Iowa, remonstrating against the proposed Government control of the telegraph system; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PENDLETON presented a petition of Mast, Crowell & Kirkpatrick and other publishers of Springfield, Ohio, praying for a reduction of the rate of postage on second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DOLPH presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying for speedy legislation declaring lands in Oregon and Washington Territory included within the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of its main line from Wallula Junction to Portland, and which have not been earned by the construction of its road, withdrawn from the operation of said act; which was read, as follows:

House Joint Memorial No. 3.

Introduced by Mr. Cox in the house January 15, and read and adopted. Read in the senate and concurred in January 16, 1885.

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring). That the annexed memorial be directed to the Senators and Representatives from this State in Congress assembled, and that they be instructed to urge upon Congress an early action thereon:

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent: That within the grant of lands made by Congress to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, to aid in the construction of its road, there is a vast area of excellent agricultural land lying within the State of Oregon, and to the west of Wallula, in Washington Territory, which, by reason of said grant, has been for years, and now is, withheld from settlement, to the great detriment of the public interests of the State.

That, in the judgment of your memorialists, the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, by its failure to construct so much of its road as lies through such lands, in accordance with the conditions upon which such grant was made to it, has justly incurred a forfeiture of such portion of its grant.

Therefore, your memorialists, on the part of the people of the State of Oregon, urge upon your honorable body, as a matter which the people of this State may justly demand as a right, to adopt some speedy legislation declaring such lands withdrawn from such grant, and that the same be thrown open for settlement.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, STATE OF OREGON,
Office of the Secretary of State, Salem, January 22, 1885.

I, R. P. Earhart, do hereby certify that I am the secretary of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the great seal thereof; that the foregoing transcript of the house joint memorial No. 3 has been by me compared with the original copy of the said house joint memorial No. 3 now on file in this office, and that it is a true and correct transcript thereof, and the whole of said original house joint memorial No. 3.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the great seal of the State of Oregon. Done at the capitol at Salem, Oreg., this 22d day of January, A. D. 1885.

[SEAL.]
R. P. EARHART,
Secretary of State.

Mr. DOLPH. As a bill has already been reported on the subject, I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of John A. Fairfax, of Loudoun County, Virginia, praying compensation for board furnished certain laborers employed by the board of public works of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that Hon. JOSEPH C. S. BLACKBURN, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, had been elected Speaker pro tempore during the temporary absence of the Speaker.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. L. P. POLAND of Vermont, Mr. J. R. TUCKER of Virginia, and Mr. WILLIAM DORSHEIMER of New York managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6220) regulating appeals from the supreme court of the District of Columbia and the supreme courts of the several Territories, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7895) for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people of said district from empiricism in relation thereto, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5650) for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes, direct me to report the same back with sundry amendments. If the Senate will indulge me a single moment, I desire to say that inasmuch as this bill must become a law before the 20th of this month if it is to perform its purposes, I ask the Senate to consider the bill at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Chief Clerk to read the amendments I have furnished him, that the committee recommend.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be announced in their order.

The Chief Clerk read the amendments, which were, in line 3, before the word "sum," to strike out "the" and insert "such;" in the same line, after the word "sum," to strike out "of $6,000, or so much thereof;" in line 4, after the word "necessary," to strike out "(one-half payable from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia)," and insert the words "not to exceed $8,000;" in line 6, after the word "appropriated," to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" in line 9, before the word "day," to strike out "twenty-fifth" and insert "twentieth;" in line 12, after the word "all," to insert the words "reasonable and;" and in line 15, after the word "period," to strike out:

And to prescribe penalties for the infraction of such regulations; and such rules and regulations made as provided shall have the same force and effect within the District of Columbia as if enacted by Congress—

And to insert—

Any person violating any of such rules and regulations shall be liable to a fine in the police court of the District of Columbia not to exceed $25.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That such sum as may be necessary, not to exceed $8,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the commissioners to maintain public order and to protect life and property during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, from the 20th day of February to the 6th day of March, 1885, inclusive; and the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and required to make all reasonable and needful rules and regulations for preserving public order and protecting life and property, and for regulating and fixing fares by public conveyances, during the aforesaid period. Any person violating any of such rules and regulations shall be liable to a fine in the police court of the District of Columbia not to exceed $25.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2604) for the relief of Russell Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2605) granting a pension to George G. Early; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2606) granting a pension to Lewis P. Howard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 2607) granting a pension to Mary B. Holmes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2608) granting an increase of pension to James M. Dickey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. McPHERSON, it was Ordered, That W. Grosch have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. HOAR. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6771) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary as a substitute.

Mr. HOAR. I am authorized by the Judiciary Committee to propose a few amendments to the substitute reported by the committee, and I ask to have them adopted in order that they may become a part of the substitute, and that the substitute so amended shall be treated as the report of the committee. I do not know but that it is proper to ask unanimous consent for that, the Senate having taken no action upon the original report except to hear it read. I should like to have these amendments inserted as a part of the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that certain amendments which he now reports from the Committee on the Judiciary to the original amendment reported from the committee be inserted to stand as a part of the amendment for the action of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Massachusetts will send to the desk the amendments of the committee to be inserted.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps before the Chief Clerk reads the amendments which I send to the desk, I may be permitted to state what they are in a word.

The Sioux City road was treated as one of the dependencies of the Union Pacific Railroad, and the Union Pacific Railroad was required to issue its bonds for the debt of that road; but it turns out that that road has no connection whatever with the Union Pacific, and is in fact a rival road. The mistake arose in this way: The Union Pacific Railroad was originally authorized to build the track, in the statute of 1862; but afterward, not doing it, a statute was passed authorizing such corporation to build it as the President of the United States should designate, and he designated this corporation; so that the amendment puts that road in and makes it responsible for its own debt.

Then the substitute as drawn was left somewhat obscure as to whether it added the interest on the principal into the bonds and spread the payments over the term of sixty years, or whether it required semi-annual interest to be paid on the whole debt from the beginning. The committee recommend the latter course, which is most favorable to the United States. The other course would postpone for an average of thirty years the payment of the interest, and the substitute is amended to make that clear.

The third amendment is that the committee substitute 40 per cent. of the net earnings as the sum to be paid instead of 35 per cent. of the gross earnings in lieu of 25 per cent. of gross earnings under the Thurman act, if this act is not accepted.

The Chief Clerk will please now read the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will read the amendments submitted by the Judiciary Committee as a part of the original amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the second subdivision of section 1, line 26, strike out "and;" in line 27, after the word "Company" insert "and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company."

At the end of line 2 of section 2 strike out the word "and," and after the word "Company," in line 3, insert "and the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company."

In section 2, line 15, after the word "Pacific," insert the word "and;" in line 16, after the word "Pacific," insert the word "railroads;" in line 17 strike out the letter "s" in the word "railroads," and after that word insert "shall issue its bonds for its debt due the United States," and in line 22, after the word "ascertained," strike out the words "each of said bonds shall be payable semi-annually, with interest at 3 per cent. per annum, in lawful money of the United States," and insert:

The principal and interest of said bonds shall be payable in lawful money of the United States. The interest on each, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, shall be payable semi-annually from and after its date, and the principal shall be payable as follows.

In section 3, line 16, after the word "Pacific," insert "and Sioux City and Pacific Railroad."

In section 4, line 27, after the word "companies," insert "or of this act."

In section 8, line 7, strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" and in the same line strike out the word "gross" and insert "net;" so as to read:

Forty per cent. of their annual net earnings.

After section 9 add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act contained shall operate to discharge, extinguish, diminish, or affect the rights of the United States in the property now belonging to or hereafter to be acquired by either of said companies, as against any person or corporation who may have acquired or shall hereafter acquire rights in the same subsequent and subject to the rights of the United States, or in any way diminish or affect the rights, if any, of such person or corporation to redeem such property or be substituted thereto on paying the debt due to the United States.

Mr. BECK. I should like to understand if it is proposed to take a vote upon the amendments of the Judiciary Committee to-day. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; that is the desire if there is no objection. It was explained fully the other day.

Mr. BECK. I read what the Senator said the other day, and I supposed that the amendments now being made to perfect the substitute of the Judiciary Committee would be printed, and that we should have a right to look at the proposition as amended. I propose at some time or other to show why the House bill should not be disposed of in the way now proposed and this taken as a substitute. I think there are amendments that ought to be made to the House bill, and to my mind the only chance to do anything is to amend the House bill. I want to do something, and I believe that the adoption of the substitute of the Judiciary Committee is just equivalent to saying that nothing will be done; the two Houses will be so far apart that there will be no chance to do anything. I had not expected to argue the question to-day, and I do not want to do so.

Mr. HOAR. What is the desire of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BECK. I supposed when these amendments were all printed we should fix a day for the discussion. I do not think the bill can be discussed in half an hour or so, and I hope unanimous consent will be given the moment the Senator from Illinois gets through with the interstate-commerce bill to take this up daily at 2 o'clock, and let it remain as the unfinished business until disposed of.

Mr. HOAR. While that would suit me very well as having the bill in charge, I am quite sure it would not receive unanimous consent because there are so many other measures in the Senate that are special orders.

Mr. BECK. This is one of the most important measures before us.

Mr. HOAR. It would result, I am afraid, in our getting no action. But I would suggest to the Senator from Kentucky whether this would not answer his purpose for the present: Let this bill go over until to-morrow morning standing as it does now. Will he not be able to argue the question to-morrow at this hour after the morning business?

Mr. BECK. I hope so. I will endeavor to present my views to-morrow morning, but I am not a member of the committee and the amendments which are being made require very careful examination. I have read the report of the Railroad Commissioner, the report made by the committee, and the bill as it came from the House, and there has been a great deal of discussion in regard to it. Of course I am familiar with the Thurman act and the object of it.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. BECK. I will endeavor to be ready by to-morrow morning.

Mr. HOAR. The amendments just put in amend the committee's proposition in three particulars. First, the Sioux City road was supposed by the draughtsman of the measure to be a part of the Union Pacific Railroad system as a dependent. It turns out to be entirely independent and indeed a rival road. Therefore it is put into the bill in its own name. That is certainly as well for the United States. There will be no objection, I am sure, to that in any quarter on any theory of the proper remedy.

Then the amendment as drafted left it possibly doubtful whether the interest on the bonds was to be added to and made a part. I do not think the whole Judiciary Committee would agree that there was any doubt before; I would not for one; but as drawn it left it possibly doubtful whether the meaning was not to add in the interest on each bond and make it payable at the maturity of the bond. The effect of that would have been for an average time of half the length of these bonds to postpone the payment of interest. One amendment made to-day makes it perfectly clear that the whole debt is to have its interest paid semi-annually from the time the new arrangement is made. That saves the United States several millions of dollars. That makes clear what was intended by the committee to be the meaning of the measure as originally reported.

Mr. BECK. One of the objections I saw, which perhaps is obviated now, was that the first payments which were to be made under the original bill were to be much smaller than those made afterward.

Mr. HOAR. No; it is just as if the Senator from Kentucky had a debt against me of $10,000 and he said to me, "Pay that a thousand dollars a year, paying me semi-annually interest on the whole from the beginning."

Mr. BECK. It is now made so that the payments shall be of the proper proportion each year?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, of the proper proportion each year.

Mr. BECK. Not postponing the largest payment until the latest?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; each year pays exactly its proportionate part of the debt. It is made clear now; and it was intended to mean so before, but in my judgment it was doubtful. That removes what would have been an objection to the bill in some minds.

Mr. BAYARD. A simple illustration, I may say, of the doctrine of equation of payments.

Mr. HOAR. That is all. The third amendment is this: The bill as first reported by the committee, in order to avoid the question which had been made under the Thurman act as to the meaning of the term "net earnings," made a provision that if the roads did not accept this bill, but went on under the Thurman act, the Thurman act should be amended so that they should pay in 35 per cent. of their gross earnings every year. The railroads said that 35 per cent. of the gross earnings would not leave them profit enough to pay the running expenses, such as taxes and certain fixed charges. Therefore the committee leave the net earnings to be paid as before, but raise the amount from 25 to 35 per cent. If this new scheme is adopted that is immaterial, but if these railroads, or any one of them, refuse to accept this new scheme and go on under the Thurman act, they are obliged to pay 35 instead of 25 per cent. of their net earnings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report this morning is to make that 40 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; 40 per cent. of the net earnings, instead of 35. I am obliged to the Chair.

Now, if the Senator from Kentucky desires it, I will consent that the bill shall go over to this hour to-morrow morning, to be taken up then and subject to the disposition of the Senate then as it is now, unless some other Senator would like to address the Senate at this time.

Mr. BAYARD. I would suggest, in the absence of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], that notice was given that a bill, perhaps of greater importance than this, a bill relating to the coinage of silver, which was brought in a few days ago, was to be called up to-morrow, and I should be sorry to see a collision occur for precedence between two measures, both of which are important, and the silver bill is considered the more important of the two.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps these amendments will remove the objection of the Senator from Kentucky so far that he will not desire a postponement. But I do not think we ought to ask any Senator who has prepared himself to speak upon it to vote upon this measure against his will without giving at least one day's opportunity. I therefore wish to do what is agreeable to the honorable Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senate will bear with me a moment, I desire to say a word. This bill has been before the Senate only a few days. The report of the Senate committee was only laid upon our table on Friday, I think. It is a very important measure, and one that Senators have probably had time to give but little attention to so far. For myself I have not had time to look it over carefully to know fully what it does provide. I should like to have the bill go over a sufficient time to enable us to investigate the subject carefully. With my present views of the question, I am totally opposed to giving further time to the Pacific railroads. They have paid millions upon millions of dollars to stockholders by way of dividends without paying the Government or making any arrangement, by sinking funds or otherwise, to take up the bonds issued by the Government. I am not in favor of extending to them any further privileges, and with my present view of the case I shall so vote. However, I would like an opportunity to investigate the subject more carefully.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator will be satisfied on such investigation that this bill is drawn solely in the interest of the Government, and that whether the railroads are to be considered as having rights of property to be protected, or no rights of property which deserve to be protected, the interest of the Government is the same.

Mr. McPHERSON. I look upon it that the officers and managers of these railroads are entitled to but very little consideration from the Government, and I do not know that the Government is wise in extending the time and increasing its own debt against these railroads in the manner and form provided in this bill. I am of the opinion that it is the duty of the Government to take possession of the property and dispose of it.

Mr. HOAR. I am myself—I will not say unalterably, because that is not a word to be used in legislation—but I am opposed earnestly, decidedly, to having the United States run the great railroad systems of this country that lead from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I am opposed to having the Government take possession of these roads and sell them in the market at any time within the next ten years, provided we can escape both these calamities by getting within a reasonable time every dollar of the principal and interest of our debt paid. I think we can do that under this bill. I think we can get every dollar of the principal and interest due us paid, and escape both these calamities, and without this bill we can not do it.

Mr. McPHERSON. What right has the Senator to assume any such thing, that we can get both principal and interest paid? We propose under the bill to reduce the interest.

Mr. HOAR. But we propose to more than double the security; we propose to continue the debt at the same rate of interest which the Government itself pays; and I have the right to assume that which any Senator has who enters into an investigation and comes to a conclusion; that is my opinion. I do not assume it with any other positiveness than that which is the result of investigation.

Mr. McPHERSON. If it is only the Senator's opinion, I must dissent from it. I do not believe in the Government running railroads; I agree with the Senator in that respect, but I am not in favor of the Pacific railroads or any railroads running both the railroads and the Government any longer.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that when he asked to have the bill go over until to-morrow morning I was aware of what the Senator from Delaware has suggested, that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], on the Finance Committee, expect to-morrow morning to bring up the question about the trade-dollar and silver coinage, and being a member of that committee I have taken some interest in that question and have endeavored to look into it. I did not want to antagonize that.

This bill came from the House at the close of the last session, and I examined it then somewhat, as it was argued by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] and others, and I saw defects which I thought ought to be amended. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that I would rather give away the road than have the Government attempt to run it. I do not want the Government to run a railroad, and yet I want to save all I can. I have been looking into the report; I have examined as carefully as I could the action of the House of Representatives, trying to ascertain its temper as well as its action, seeing what we are likely to agree about before Congress adjourns, and not being prepared to criticise the action taken by the Judiciary Committee, and not desiring to do so if I can avoid it, all I want is reasonable time to look into the whole subject. After the bill is laid before us with the committee's substitute and the amendments of to-day, which I think modify the former action and remove some of the difficulties I had, I suppose, now if we can get it called up, say on Wednesday morning, I shall be able to say what I desire to say. I do not wish to consume time or throw obstacles in the way. I desire to agree with the committee if I possibly can; but let the Finance Committee dispose of its matter if it can to-morrow, and I shall ask no further time than till Wednesday at 1 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, then; I will agree to let this matter stand off and call it up again on Wednesday morning.

Mr. BECK. I shall not ask any further time, and perhaps I may not speak at all after I have read the amendments. I have no desire to consume time.

Mr. WILSON. I did not understand the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kentucky desired to have this bill stand until Wednesday morning, that he might be prepared to address the Senate on it if he should then desire to do so.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to state that, notwithstanding I greatly regret what seems to be a demand that I shall say something on this measure, I still feel that the conditions of the case and the circumstances surrounding it will impel me so to do.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senator ready to proceed now?

Mr. WILSON. I do not wish to interfere with other business.

Mr. HOAR. I shall be delighted to have the Senator proceed now with his remarks, if he is ready.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] I believe desires to proceed with another matter.

Mr. HOAR. That is a private matter, which we can yield to the Senator from Kansas without any trouble.

Mr. WILSON. If that can be disposed of, I have no objection to this bill being taken up after that.

Mr. HOAR. Then I will ask unanimous consent that this be laid aside informally for the measure of the Senator from Kansas, so that the Senator from Iowa may proceed to-day; and then if the Senator from Kentucky is not ready, let it go over until Wednesday.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire that the regular business, which is now before the Senate in the morning hour, shall not be displaced by unanimous consent. I think the first case on the Calendar, which the Senate decided to take up——

Mr. WILSON. That is my desire also.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 396, being the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has made a motion which the Chair will state.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kansas withhold his motion for a minute?

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senate to allow this matter to go over until Wednesday morning. I move that the pending bill be postponed until Wednesday morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the further consideration of the railroad bill be postponed until Wednesday next.

Mr. HOAR. After the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not put the motion precisely in that form.

Mr. HOAR. It makes no difference. I shall have the right to move to take it up then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary will be reprinted as amended for the use of the Senate.

SUITS FOR DAMAGES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator from Kansas makes his motion the Chair will lay before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, being the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia.

The bill passed the House of Representatives and was sent to the Senate, amended in the Senate and returned to the House of Representatives. The resolution of the House on the amendment of the Senate will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 31, 1885.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. POLAND, Mr. TUCKER, and Mr. DORSHEIMER be the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, and grant the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HARRIS, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. RIDDLEBERGER were appointed.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to take up Order of Business 396, being the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not press that motion this morning. The Senator from New York who sits nearest me [Mr. LAPHAM] has taken a very great interest in that bill, and he is indisposed this morning, so unwell that he is unable to come to the Senate Chamber, and he desires to have this matter laid over until he can be in the Chamber. The Senator's colleague [Mr. MILLER, of New York] also, I think, is absent this morning, and both feel an interest in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion.

Mr. PLUMB. If I were certain that when the Senator from New York came here we should not then be obliged to open this case at very great length, I should not object; but I fear that some dilatory tactics may be employed to prevent a consideration of the bill, and that in the hurry and push of matters which undoubtedly will engage the attention of the Senate in the last days of the session its consideration will be prevented. All I want is that the Senate shall say by a yea-and-nay vote whether it means to give these people the relief called for in this bill. I do not want it to be pushed over so that that result can not be reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again state that debate is not in order. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his motion?

Mr. PLUMB. No, sir; I do not withdraw it.

Mr. CONGER. I ask permission to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent to make remarks on this subject. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the motion with the understanding that I shall renew it in the morning and at that time call for a vote.

Mr. CONGER. I wish simply to say to the Senator from Kansas that while I am with him in getting up the bill at the proper time, I told both the Senators from New York that I would see to it that it was not taken up in their absence.

Mr. PLUMB. In calling it up now I only designed to have the report read and to get that routine at least cleared out of the way; but I will let the matter go over until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas withdraws his motion.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up for consideration Order of Business 1001, being the bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber culture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was in section 1, line 3, after the word "thirty-two," to insert "excepting sections 2275, 2276, 2283, 2286, and 2288;" in line 7, after the word "and," to strike out "sections" and insert "section;" in line 8, after "twenty-two hundred and ninety-nine," to strike out "and twenty-three hundred and nine;" so that as amended the clause will read:

That chapter four of title thirty-two, excepting sections 2275, 2276, 2283, 2286, and 2288, and section 2299 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and all other laws allowing pre-emption of the public lands of the United States, are hereby repealed.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill as it came to the Senate repealed the whole of chapter 4 of title 32 of the Revised Statutes. On examination of that chapter it was found that there were certain sections incorporated in it which contained general legislation, and did not relate entirely to the pre-emption laws—sections which ought to be continued in force. The sections are those named in the exception in the amendment reported by the committee. If any Senator desires an explanation of the sections that are retained, I am prepared to give it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, after the word "repeal," in line 11 of section 1, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That all persons having the right of pre-emption who have heretofore, in good faith and in the absence of fraud, made settlement on the public lands of the United States conformable to the pre-emption laws heretofore in force, shall be permitted to make final proof and entry of the land so settled upon, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, conformable to existing pre-emption laws.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the passage of this act may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed: And provided further, That any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the pre-emption law, and who has failed, from any cause, to perfect title to a tract of land heretofore entered by him under the homestead laws, may make a second homestead entry in lieu of the pre-emption privilege hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That sections 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, and 2468 be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That such repeal shall not prejudice the rights of those who have in good faith made entries under the law and complied with the requirements thereof: And provided further, That whenever, from any cause, any person legally eligible thereto has entered and located a homestead, and subsequently loses the same in consequence of any grant previously made, or by any means whatever, without fault on his or her part, such person, upon satisfactory proof made thereof, may enter another homestead upon any of the lands of the United States subject to homestead.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 2. That an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to encourage the growth of timber on the Western prairies,'" approved June 14, 1878, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the passage of this act may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Is not the question on striking out and inserting put separately?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir; it is not a divisible question.

Mr. CONGER. I was not aware of the nature of the motion. I hope the Chair will put the question again on the amendment just acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment just acted on will be considered as not disposed of, but pending. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is pending.

Mr. DOLPH. I suggest, inasmuch as this bill embodies several distinct propositions, the repeal of the pre-emption law, the repeal of the timber-culture act, and the repeal of the desert-land act, and amendments to the homestead law, that unanimous consent be given that the vote be taken separately on each section after it is amended. That is to say, after the sections are put into shape, let the question be whether the section as amended be adopted. I think that will facilitate the disposition of this bill.

This amendment is necessary because the bill as it came from the House undertook to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes which had been superseded by a subsequent act. The amendment is only intended to make the bill relate to the statutes in force at this time. I suggest now that we go through and perfect this bill by adopting such amendments as the Senate concur in, and then by unanimous consent that a vote may be taken separately on the section repealing the pre-emption law, on the section repealing the timber-culture act, and on the section repealing the desert-land act, so that the debate on the merits of the bill may all come in after the several sections have been amended.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman in charge of the bill desires that course and that still leaves it open for remark on this particular amendment on which I wish to comment, I shall have no objection. If the proposition of the Senator from Oregon is acceded to, the question on the adoption of this amendment is postponed until we go through the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. The question will be finally on the adoption of the section as amended. Certainly there can be no objection to the amendment because it strikes at the existing law, whereas the bill as it came to the Senate referred solely to the old sections of the Revised Statutes which have been superseded. I can not see that there can be any question raised as to the propriety of the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that we have a vote on each section as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Michigan that while a proposition to strike out and insert is not divisible, pending that question it is in order to amend the part proposed to be stricken out or the part proposed to be inserted.

Mr. CONGER. The remarks which I propose to make are against the repeal of the timber-culture act, which is in section 2 reported here. If there shall be any subsequent opportunity to speak upon it before a vote occurs, either in committee or in the Senate, I will wait until that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be open in the Senate as it is in committee. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That every homesteader shall make final proof, by two credible witnesses, that he has continuously resided upon and cultivated and permanently improved his or her homestead for four consecutive years next succeeding such entry. Such proof shall be in duplicate, and filed, one set in the local land office and one in the General Land Office, for one year; and if no contest be filed and no notice given, supported by affidavit made before some officer, State or Federal, authorized to administer oaths, charging and specifying fraud either in the original entry or the proof made and filed as aforesaid, before the expiration of that time, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the patent to issue on the entry; but if a contest be filed or affidavit be made as aforesaid, or if there be, from any cause, reasonable ground to suspect fraud in the case, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the Commissioner of the General Land Office to investigate the same and make such order as shall be just and lawful. And an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries on public lands," approved March 3, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask leave to recur to section 1 for the purpose of offering an amendment to save pre-emption rights on lands purchased of the Ute Indians.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Oregon that the amendments reported by the committee should first be disposed of, after which he will have an opportunity to offer any additional amendments.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section [5] 4, after the word "repealed," in line 4, to insert:

Provided, however, That this repeal shall not affect any valid rights heretofore accrued or accruing under said laws, but all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the passage of this act may be perfected, upon due compliance with law, in the same manner, upon the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same limitation, forfeitures, and contests as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. DOLPH. This amendment is necessary, because as the bill came from the House existing rights were not preserved—rights of persons whose claims had been initiated—which was an oversight.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to inquire what has become of the amendment proposed by the committee in line 7 of section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has just been informed by the Secretary that he overlooked the amendment referred to by the Senator from Alabama. He will now read it.

The SECRETARY. In section [4] 3, line 7, before the word "calendar," the committee propose to strike out "thirty" and insert "eighteen;" so as to make the section read:

That section 2301 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows: "SEC. 2301. Nothing in this chapter shall be so construed as to prevent any person who has availed himself of the benefits of section 2289 from paying the minimum price for the quantity of land so entered at any time after the expiration of eighteen calendar months from the date of such entry, and obtaining a patent therefor, the proofs of actual settlement and cultivation thereof to be filed at least six months prior and as preliminary to the application for the patent, and in the same manner and to the same effect as is provided and required in section 3 of this act as to final proofs and the issuance of patents."

Mr. MORGAN. I doubt the wisdom of that change. I think we had better go back to the House bill on that subject. One of the objects of the homestead law, to which we are now confining all entries, is to secure a home for a bona fide settler, and it is also to cut off the men who float settlements upon public lands for speculative purposes, persons in the neighborhood of great iron works and in the neighborhood of coal works and various other public works of that kind. The reports from the Secretary of the Interior show a most extraordinary list of frauds that have been perpetrated under the homestead and pre-emption laws in different parts of the Union. Thousands and thousands of alleged fraudulent cases, and cases that are shown to be fraudulent, have occurred in consequence of pre-emption claims and homestead claims being set up by persons who never had a bona fide intention of acquiring a homestead.

We permit under the laws after a certain lapse of time that any homesteader shall commute his homestead settlement into a pre-emption claim, and by paying the minimum price of a dollar and a quarter an acre get a patent for the land; and then his capacity to sell it is entirely restored and he can put it into the hands of the person he may wish to dispose of it in favor of. That is a very great temptation to persons who wish to build up large establishments; as, for instance, around iron mines, iron manufactories, iron furnaces, men will take their laborers and locate them in different places on the public lands as homestead settlers, and after a brief interval of time these persons, notwithstanding they had made affidavit that they intended to settle there for the purpose of a permanent home, would under the pre-emption laws pay for the lands at the minimum price, get a patent, and dispose of them of course to the person who put them there. It is really giving a pre-emption to the speculator on the public lands under the guise of a homestead settler.

The House of Representatives, in order to obviate that, required that the homestead settler under the provisions of this amended law should remain on the land thirty calendar months. The Senate Committee on Public Lands have reduced that period to eighteen calendar months. I believe thirty is the safer period. If a man is required to remain on his homestead thirty months, cultivate the soil, experience the reality of living upon it, there will be very much less temptation to fraud. I hope the Senate will return to the House propositions on that subject.

Mr. DOLPH. The pre-emption law was passed in 1841, as I recollect. It was amended in 1843. As it was passed it only applied to surveyed lands. Some time after 1850 it was made to extend to unsurveyed lands. It has no doubt accomplished a very beneficial purpose, and it is in force at this time, and under it the settler may acquire title to one hundred and sixty acres of land, and under this provision for commutation of homesteads an additional one hundred and sixty acres of land by paying the minimum price therefor. Under the homestead law as it stands at present, at any time after six months and before the expiration of five years from the date of settlement a homestead may be commuted, the minimum price paid for the land by the homestead settler, and title acquired. It is proposed by this bill to repeal the pre-emption law so that title can be obtained by one settler hereafter to only one hundred and sixty acres of agricultural land.

There are some members of this body and there are many people who are opposed to a repeal of the pre-emption law. It was proposed by the House bill not only to repeal the pre-emption law, but to require thirty months' residence by a homestead settler before he could commute for his homestead claim. It is said, and I think well said, that in a great many instances before the thirty months expire the settler on the public land will be in need of money, and that he ought to be allowed to obtain title in less time than that if he chooses to pay for his land at the minimum price in order that he may use it as the basis of credit for purchasing teams and the other necessary appliances for improving his homestead and making a home.

This amendment as proposed by the committee was a compromise of the different views entertained by members of the committee upon this subject. I think it is not well to make so radical and sweeping a change as at once to repeal the pre-emption law, and then extend the time of residence required before a commutation of a homestead can be made from six months to thirty months. The bill as reported by the committee requires a residence of eighteen months and extends the time twelve months in addition to the residence required under the provisions of the existing law.

Mr. MORGAN. One of the results of this bill will be, whether it is the object of the bill or not, to restrict very much the disposal of the public lands. After this bill shall become a law, except in a few exceptional cases, no one can acquire a title to public land except under the homestead feature. He must become an actual settler on the land, and must be qualified to take a homestead under the law. Those qualifications as they exist at present are very strong invitations to immigration from foreign countries to come and take up the lands of the United States. I do not object to that, because it increases our population, and of course all population that is worth anything at all increases the public wealth and the strength of the country. But when we are confining our own citizens to this as the only means of getting homestead entries, it seems to me well enough that we should put some limitation on the period of residence, so that those who come from abroad can not commute their homestead settlements into absolute titles within a very brief period of time and enter into a speculative sort of dealing with the public domain.

If we find that the public domain is really going too fast and that we must put some restrictions upon its disposal, those restrictions ought to extend their special benefits to persons who are of American origin, whether of American ancestry or not. We have a great many people in the different large cities of the Union who would realize great blessings if they could be induced to leave those crowded places and go out onto the public lands and there establish themselves in farming, or acquire homes at all events; and inasmuch as we are taking up the system and reforming it, it seems to me that is a necessary part of the reformation which we ought to adopt. The House, I think, was right when it insisted that a man should not acquire the right to an absolute fee in the land until after he had resided upon it for thirty months. To shorten the period is merely to invite people who come from abroad to stay here and acquire titles to our lands before they really get an introduction to a knowledge of our institutions and laws and our system of government. I do not know that I should be willing to embarrass or check the further immigration that comes here. I desire the country to remain free to access for all good people from all parts of the world; but when they come here I do not desire to give them the heritage that belongs rightfully to the people who have descended from American ancestors in this country until they have established homes here and have signified in that practical way a determination to become part of the community.

Now, sir, suppose that foreign landlordism, which is very much complained of by some persons, and I think rightfully complained of, should take it into its head to establish very large settlements in this country, the foreign landlords could send their tenants from other countries to this, and after the persons had come here and remained a brief space of time on public lands under the guise of a homestead entry, the landlords could supply them with money to pay for their lands at a dollar and a quarter an acre. They can very well afford to do it, and in that way they can aggregate very large holdings, and unless we pass laws that no foreigner shall own lands in this country or shall acquire lands above a certain number of acres in one body or in one county or in one State or in one Territory, this law can be easily evaded by men who will come here or send their tenants here for purely speculative purposes.

Suppose a man wants to take up an extensive cattle range or an extensive sheep range, what has he to do but send his herders and shepherds here and locate them about these lands and let them engage in the raising of cattle or sheep, work for him, and after each has had the land in possession for some little time go and buy it out and acquire the absolute title? What is to prevent that? Nothing. I do not know that we can prevent it at all; but it seems to me that the House provision would be some check upon it; that by deferring the realization of the speculative adventure for thirty months we should better subserve the interest of this country than we should by deferring it for eighteen months. If we could defer it for five years it would make no difference, because when a man goes on a tract of land and settles there, the presumption is that he wants to make a home for his family; he wants to live there continuously. It is no hardship on such a man that he may be compelled to remain in possession of the land he takes up even for five years; if he expects to make a home for himself and his family, there it is only a benefit to him that he can occupy it for five years before he is compelled to pay the final fee and take out title.

The Senator from Oregon suggests that perhaps the man may be poor; he may want to make a mortgage on his land, to make some pledge of it to raise money to buy stock or improvements. I would sympathize with a man in that condition very much. At the same time if he has a homestead and is a good laboring man, an honest, industrious citizen, he will not want credit. He need not obtain credit by the mortgage or pledge of his land. The fact of his being there permanently with his family, of his improving his land, will give to his creditor who wishes to provide him with a horse or a wagon, or whatever it may be necessary for his business, encouragement to advance him the money, to give him credit.

So I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon is not a very important one as compared with the suggestion which I make, that if you shorten up the period at which the party by commutation can take these lands at the minimum price from the Government you thereby endanger the country with that flood of immigration which we are now trying really to resist in some form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the amendment be reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section [4] 3, line 7, before the word "calendar," strike out "thirty" and insert "eighteen;" so as to read: "after the expiration of eighteen calendar months."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was to insert as a new section:

SEC. 5. That after the passage of this act no public lands of the United States, except abandoned military or other reservations and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public auction or be subject to private entry; and all offered public lands are hereby withdrawn from market, and shall be disposed of as unoffered public lands.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I should like the Senator from Oregon to explain the effect of that section, as he understands it.

Mr. DOLPH. I suppose every Senator is aware that from a very early period in the history of the disposal of the public lands by the Government it was the custom as soon as the public lands were surveyed to put them up at public sale; and after they had been offered for a certain length of time at public sale if they were not sold they were then subject to private entry, and could be purchased at any time thereafter, until they were withdrawn by law, by any person in any quantity at a dollar and a quarter an acre. Such lands are known as "offered" lands.

There is remaining unsold now in the United States, subject to sale at ordinary private entry, mainly situated in the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, and Florida, and the northern portions of Michigan and Minnesota, a large amount of public land. The amount is probably about 2,000,000 acres in Mississippi; 1,000,000 in Florida; 500,000 each in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, and Louisiana, and 200,000 in Missouri; in the northern portion of Michigan and Minnesota about 500,000 acres each. There are, perhaps, 50,000 acres in Wisconsin, Colorado, California, and Oregon. There are about 50,000 acres in each of the Territories of New Mexico and Washington.

These offered public lands subject to private entry are, in part at least, agricultural lands. The bill as it came from the House undertook to repeal by wholesale all the laws for the disposition of the public lands except the homestead law. Upon examination it was found that the provision for that purpose was so imperfectly drawn that the committee could not with safety adopt it. Without great difficulty and much labor it could not be ascertained what laws were repealed by it; but supposing that the main thing intended to be accomplished was the prevention of the sale of public lands at private entry, the committee substituted the section under consideration to forbid the offering of lands at public sale hereafter and to withdraw all the public lands known as offered lands from private entry. That is the object of the section.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon if the public lands in Missouri have not been open and subject to private entry for a long time?

Mr. DOLPH. That is so. I think very few lands have been offered at public sale in any except the Southern States within the last twenty-odd years. It has not been the policy of the Government to offer lands, consequently the land referred to must have been in the market for twenty years at least.

Mr. COCKRELL. All the lands in Missouri have been in market and have been once offered and are now subject to entry.

Mr. DOLPH. I understand that to be the case.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would be a great wrong to that State to take those lands out of the operation of the existing law and make them so that nobody but a homesteader could take possession of them, because they are not agricultural lands. They are hilly, broken, timbered lands; they are fit only for grazing, and it would simply be to say that nobody else shall settle in that portion of Missouri where those lands are. There they are; they have been open to private entry at a dollar and a quarter an acre for the last twenty years, and the people right there have not taken them up at that price. It is only recently that they have commenced taking them up for grazing purposes, for cattle and sheep, and it will be many, many long years before they are taken up even for that purpose. I should move that an exception be made in regard to Missouri of lands situated in that State.

Mr. DOLPH. The present policy of the Government appears to be to preserve all the public lands for actual settlers, and, as I said before, it is not the present policy of the Government to offer lands at public sale. The amount of lands subject to private entry in many of the public-land States is very small and will continue to grow less. The hardships the Senator speaks of in reference to his own State exist in regard to those States where there are no great bodies of public land subject to private entry. It will be understood that any one person may purchase at one time all the lands subject to private entry in the United States at the minimum price of a dollar and a quarter an acre. The committee believed that the time had come when these lands ought to be withdrawn from private entry and reserved for homes because portions of them at least are agricultural lands; and if at any future time any further legislation is required for the disposition of such lands as are not agricultural lands, that legislation should be had.

I propose to offer as an amendment to this measure a bill reported favorably from the Committee on Public Lands amending the law authorizing the sale of timber lands in California, Oregon, Nevada, and Washington Territory for commercial purposes, and I think perhaps the provisions of that bill might properly be extended to the State of Missouri and other States where there are timber lands or lands of the class referred to which are not agricultural lands; but the object of the committee in proposing this amendment, which is not a change of the bill in that respect from the House bill, because as I understand it the section of the bill to be superseded by this amendment as it came from the House repealed the law authorizing the sale of lands at private entry; the object of the committee is to repeal the law by which agricultural lands may be now entered at private entry. As I have said, if any further legislation is required in regard to the remnant which remains after as many homes have been taken out of the public domain as can be taken, that legislation can be had.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Why take these lands in Missouri that have been open to homestead and pre-emption settlement and also to private entry for twenty years and have not been taken up yet—why take them and place them so that they can not be had except by homestead? You absolutely place them beyond the control of any one who would desire to settle upon them. No one could undertake to settle upon one hundred and sixty acres of those lands. That would not be sufficient in quantity and area to graze stock sufficient to support a family. I can not see why Missouri should be excepted. There is no complaint about the existing law there now. Everybody seems to be perfectly satisfied with it. The only question is as to whether the terms of acquiring title to the land should not be relaxed to some extent and the price graduated to certain of the lands.

I must confess that there has been no abuse there of the present law; there has been no effort to keep large areas of the lands and monopolize them in any way, or to inclose them and exclude small cattle-men or small sheep-men from the use of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill to regulate interstate commerce.

Mr. CONGER. Before that is proceeded with I wish to have an opportunity for my colleague to offer an amendment to the bill just under consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that being received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the proposed amendment will be received, printed, and laid on the table.

Mr. PALMER. I offer a new section to the pending bill as to public lands, and ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment suggested by the Senator from Michigan will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. That wherever lands have been withdrawn from sale or disposition on the part of the United States by reason of grants made to aid in construction of railroads or other works of internal improvement, and such withdrawals have been terminated by act of Congress, executive order, or order of the Land Department, or where lands have been, by operation of law, reduced in price to $1.25 per acre, and said lands have been purchased, in good faith, at said price, or entered with warrants or scrip, and the officers of the Land Department have issued certificates or patents thereon in accordance with such purchase or entry, without such lands having first been proclaimed by the President and offered at public auction, and where, on the 25th day of January, 1885, there are no conflicting claims thereto, all such entries, and the certificates and patents issued thereon, are hereby confirmed and declared valid and legal.

Mr. PALMER. I ask that that amendment be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. DOLPH subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to offer some amendments to the bill (H. R. 7004) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands and the laws allowing entries for timber-culture for the purpose of their being printed. The bill was partly considered this morning, and I think the amendments are so important that they require to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received and printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1339) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Pittsburgh, Pa.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 31st ultimo, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1144) granting a pension to John W. Wright; and

An act (S. 1112) granting a pension to John Sweeney.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] moved a substitute for the House bill, pending which the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] proposed an amendment, and the question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky to the original bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "reasonable," in line 14, section 1, down to and including the word "person," in line 31; as follows:

And any person or persons having purchased a ticket to be conveyed from one State to another, or paid the required fare, shall receive the same treatment and be afforded equal facilities and accommodations as are furnished all other persons holding tickets of the same class, without discrimination; but nothing in this act shall be construed to deny to railroads the right to provide separate accommodations for passengers as they may deem best for the public comfort or safety, or to relate to transportation relating to points wholly within the limits of one State: Provided, That no discrimination is made on account of race or color; and that furnishing separate accommodations, with equal facilities and equal comforts at the same charges, shall not be considered a discrimination. Nor shall any railroad company or its officers charge to or receive from any person who is to be conveyed from one State or Territory into another any sum exceeding 3 cents per mile for the distance to be traveled by such person.

Mr. INGALLS. This is an amendment to the part proposed to be stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment to the House bill, to the part proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say, Mr. President, that, as I am informed by the Committee on Appropriations, there are two appropriation bills ready to be considered by the Senate coming from that committee. There are two others, as I am informed, about ready for consideration. In view of that fact and of other pressing business demanding action by the Senate, I desire to say that I am exceedingly anxious that this bill shall be finished to-day. If it is not, however, I shall ask the friends of the measure to remain here to-morrow until it is finished, and shall consider a declination on the part of the Senate to do it as an evidence that there is no diposition to pass a bill at all on the subject. I hope, therefore, that we shall proceed with the consideration of this bill and complete it to-day if it is possible to do so consistent with the time that we have for consideration; but if we do not, I give notice now that I shall ask the Senate to remain here to-morrow until the bill is concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Illinois to suggest now that if this bill is not completed to-day, he will resist an adjournment to-morrow until it is finished.

Mr. CULLOM. Until it is concluded.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is not my intention to discuss the pending amendment, but rather to make some general remarks upon the subject of interstate commerce, more particularly in the direction of a comparison of the two schemes for regulating that commerce which are suggested by the House bill and by the bill reported by the Committee on Railroads of the Senate.

There seems to be a disposition in some quarters to limit the discretion of the Senate in the consideration of the merits of these two bills. We were advised by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], and in effect by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], that it would be impossible to get any legislation upon this important subject unless the Senate should consent to accept the House bill known as the Reagan bill. The Senator from Kentucky was not quite willing to impute to those who favored the Senate bill a disposition to defeat all legislation upon this subject. He formally conceded to them good faith in the maintenance of their views, but suggested that practically they were doing the work of the railroad monopolists in insisting upon the Senate as against the House bill.

I do not know what right any Senator has to say that the House of Representatives, or the conferees of that body, if the amendments of the Senate shall go into a committee of conference, would not be disposed to meet the conferees on the part of the Senate in a full and free discussion of the differences between the two bodies. No one has a right to say that the views of the Senate upon this measure as they shall ultimately be expressed by the amendments adopted to the House bill will not have in such a conference committee fair and respectful treatment; that they will not be met there with a disposition to harmonize differences and to agree upon some measure that shall express, not the will of a single branch of Congress, but the conjoint and concurrent will of the two equal and co-ordinate bodies.

There are points of agreement in the two bills which it seems to me any conferee on the part of the House really desiring to have legislation in the interest of railway shippers would be willing to accept, though that acceptance should involve the surrender of some features of the House bill. Both of these bills prohibit any discrimination between shippers; both declare the exaction of an unreasonable rate to be extortion; both prescribe a heavy fine for extortion and unjust discrimination, and provide for prosecutions in the courts of the United States. So far the bills run together.

But I can not for one surrender my judgment as a member of this body to any suggestion as to the temper or disposition of the House of Representatives upon this question. While willing to do whatever I may to bring the two Houses in agreement, that we may accomplish at this session of Congress something in the direction of the restraint and control of the railways of this country, I must in the first instance express my own judgment in my votes here.

It has been assumed, the Senator from Texas so told us, that the Reagan bill is the people's bill. Mr. President, I do not know that the Senator from Texas holds any other or fuller commission to speak for the people of this country than I do. I deny that the Reagan bill has received the sanction of a general popular approval in this country. So far as I know, it is not the statute law of a single State in the American Union to-day.

I notice in the press dispatches of this morning that the Reagan bill has been introduced into the Legislature of Texas and that it was not probable that it would receive the sanction of that body. So it appears that in the State from which the distinguished author of the House bill comes the Legislature is unlikely to adopt that scheme for the reform of railroad abuses which is heralded here as the only one in the interest of the people.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator state who sent the dispatch to which he refers?

Mr. HARRISON. It was an Associated Press dispatch. I do not, of course, know the name of the press agent. It professed to be a statement by the gentleman who introduced the bill in the Texas Legislature. But, Mr. President, if we are to look to State legislation as expressive of the popular view upon this question, then I am told that out of thirty States that have undertaken to legislate for the control of railway transportation twenty-five have adopted the commission plan. I am not able to vouch for the exact correctness of this statement, but I have here a long list of States, embracing the leading commercial States of this Union, which in their legislation upon this subject are very nearly in accord with the Senate bill.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will permit me, I will suggest that the Reagan bill ought not to pass the Legislature of the State of Texas or any other State, because it purposes to regulate only interstate commerce.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, does the Senator suppose that there is in the Legislature of Texas a man so ignorant that if he were to introduce there the Reagan scheme would not adapt its provisions to the regulation of State commerce instead of interstate commerce? I did not mean to suggest that any Texas legislator had conceived the idea of regulating interstate commerce by a State law.

Mr. COKE. The Senator's assertion with reference to this dispatch was that the Reagan bill had been introduced, not the Reagan bill changed or adapted to any other conditions, but that the Reagan bill had been introduced in the Legislature of Texas.

Mr. HARRISON. I supposed every one would understand when I spoke of the Reagan bill being introduced in the Texas Legislature that I meant the scheme or frame of that bill adapted to the regulation of State traffic, and not interstate traffic.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will permit me, I will suggest to him that any adaptation of a bill to the regulation of State commerce would be an elimination of all the features of the Reagan bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator has not well studied the Reagan bill. The prohibition of pooling between points in the same State might be made just as well apply to State commerce as to interstate commerce. Its prohibition of rebates would apply just as well to State as to interstate commerce, and almost every other feature of the bill is equally applicable to State commerce as to interstate commerce.

Mr. COKE. Then, if the Senator will permit me, I will say that the constitution of the State of Texas forbids unjust discriminations by the railroad corporations, and also forbids consolidation of competing railroad lines, which means a prohibition on pooling.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the point I was making was this: that if we are to look to State legislation as indicating what the popular judgment is as to the best method of dealing with this great question, the overwhelming weight of evidence is in favor of a commission bill. And yet Senators assume here, without any higher commission to represent the people or any more sincere interest to protect them than I claim for myself, to label the one bill as the people's bill and the other as a bill favorable to the railroads. But for this suggestion I should not have addressed the Senate upon this question at all. It is my purpose in what I shall say to maintain that the Senate bill contains the more efficient scheme of exposing and repressing the discriminations and unjust exactions of railroad companies.

What is it that the people complain of? What is the just grievance at the bottom of this great popular clamor against the railroad companies? I think, as both these bills admit, just two things: First, extortion, the charging, especially for local freights, of unreasonable rates, thus unduly burdening the local traffic for the maintenance of the railways; and secondly, and chiefly, discriminations between shippers of the same class.

Mr. President, I do not stop to prove the existence of these evils. They are confessed of all fair men. I do not stop to prove, for proof is not needed, that the railroad companies by these discriminations between individuals and between localities, and by the unrestrained exercise of the power to establish rates, have assumed and do now exercise a most dangerous and unwarranted control over the commerce of this country.

A few years ago I was in the Territory of Montana, and while there became aware of an incident in connection with railway management that illustrates the arbitrary character of the control which has been exercised by some of our great railway corporations. The Union Pacific Railroad, extending from Omaha, in Nebraska, to Ogden, in Utah, was also the owner of the Utah and Northern Railway, a narrow-gauge road extending from Ogden northward through Idaho and into Montana. A circular was issued from the office of the Union Pacific Railway Company establishing a rate equal to three times the ordinary first-class rate on all canned goods, rice, green coffees, and that class of goods that came to Ogden from San Francisco over the Central Pacific and then asked transportation over the Utah and Northern road into Idaho and Montana. The railroad company openly defended this policy. They said to the merchants of that great region of country, "You should buy your canned goods, your rice in the East, in order that we may have the long haul over the Union Pacific Railroad instead of giving the Central Pacific, our rival, the haul to Ogden and to us only a short haul over the Utah and Northern." They endeavored to placate the opposition which this order created by the suggestion that they would give the merchants on the line of the Utah and Northern road some favored rate from Omaha in order to induce them to buy their goods East instead of West. This was in effect saying to that entire community, "You shall not deal where you may deal to the best advantage; you shall not select your own market, East or West, as may please you; we take control of that matter, and we say to every merchant in Montana who deals in rice or canned goods, 'You shall not buy them in San Francisco, but in Omaha or Chicago.'"

I give this as a specimen, Mr. President, of the business discrimination and tyranny which some of these railroads have exercised. I am glad we have come to a time in this discussion when no one in the Senate denies that the power of Congress over this question of interstate commerce by railway is as ample as over that by the sea. It may be, as the Senator from Kentucky said, that some attorney of a railway company, in the committee-room, may yet maintain the doctrine that Congress has no power over this subject, but in the discussion here no one has expressed the smallest doubt of the right of Congress to control and regulate by wise provisions of law these great channels of interstate commerce.

Mr. President, intelligent legislation of a curative or remedial character will always be directed to the evils to be cured, and the intelligent legislator will always desire to have a clear understanding of the evils which are to be remedied before he drafts his bill. I think we have a clear and definite understanding of the evils to be remedied by this legislation. They are extortion, the exaction of unreasonable rates from shippers; they are discriminations between localities or between shippers at the same locality. I believe there is not a Senator here who will not agree if we can so legislate as to make every railroad tariff reasonable and to make those reasonable rates apply without discrimination to every locality and to every shipper that we shall have effected a radical, thorough, and lasting cure of this railroad trouble.

Mr. President, do these evils have their origin in the fact that there is now no law restraining them? Do these practices prevail because they are lawful? Do railroad companies extort because there is no limitation upon their discretion in fixing rates? Do they discriminate because the law allows it? No, Mr. President; both of these things are prohibited now by law. The Senator from Texas undertook to show the other day that the Reagan bill was a simple codification of the common law now in force in all of our States. The fact is, that any shipper from whom an unreasonable rate is exacted has now the amplest legal right to recover back the excess. The fact is, that any shipper against whom a discrimination is practiced has the amplest legal right now to recover the damages he suffers by that discrimination. If that be true, it is not more law we want; it is not a statute which shall codify the common law simply, because statute law is no more self-executing than common law. Statutory rights and statutory penalties can only be enforced as common-law rights are, by resort to the courts. One is of as high sanction as the other. So I would regard it as an utterly futile piece of legislation if we should pass here a bill simply declaring the common law upon this subject.

What is the trouble? It is that the shipper needs to be re-enforced in his contest with the railroad companies. If some one should ask me why it is, if the exaction of an unreasonable rate is now unlawful and the excess may be recovered back, that shippers do not recover it back; or if one should ask me why it is, if discriminations are illegal, that shippers do not expose them and recover their damages, my answer would be that it is an unequal contest to which the shipper is invited.

I think then I may declare, with the approval of those who listen to me, that legislation upon this subject to be efficient must re-enforce the shipper in his contest with these great railway corporations. The Reagan bill does not do that in the smallest degree. To be sure it gives him smart money in case of a recovery, but he can not get his smart money until he has established his case in court, and in the work of ascertaining the facts or in prosecuting his claim the Reagan bill yields him no help, but leaves him as he is now, a weak and feeble contestant with these rich and powerful corporations.

So, if I wanted to correct these evils in railway management, I should address the legislation to that particular point. I would help the man in his contest with the railroad company.

Let us look for a moment further at this question. Let me suppose that a shipper at the city of Indianapolis makes a shipment of freight over the line of a certain railway company to New York. Another man engaged in the same business at the same place is shipping over the same road at the same time. The first shipper can not know what rate the other man is paying. He knows what rate he is paying. He may be suspicious that the railway company is giving his rival in business a favored rate which enables him to get his produce to the seaboard cheaper than the other can. Suppose the man thus discriminated against concludes to bring suit, what is the first thing he must do? He must prove the existence of a discriminating rate in favor of his rival. How will he go about proving it? He goes to the local freight agent and examines the bill of lading, but the rate indicated on the bill is precisely the rate paid by him. He asks the local freight agent, "Has my rival a contract for a drawback?" The answer is, "No;" and that answer may be perfectly true, for the arrangement for a rebate is made by some one else. It is paid at the other end of the line. How utterly helpless that man is to discover the fact that he has been discriminated against! The information is in a distant city. It can only be had by an examination of the officers there and of their books and papers. That man needs to be helped to find out whether a discrimination is made in favor of his rival. Legislation should provide some agency at the public expense which would ascertain that fact for him by an inspection of the books of the railroad company and a careful analysis of all their cash expenditures.

But that is not the only disadvantage under which the shipper labors. He knows that if he goes into such a contest the railway company has it in its power to further oppress him in his business by such other discriminations as might be sufficient to ruin him. Let me suggest but a single method. When large amounts of freight are moving there is a great demand for cars. This shipper who has entered into a legal contest with the railroad company wants cars. How easy it is for the manager to say to him, "We can not furnish you any; our cars are engaged;" or by other vexatious methods to delay and impede his shipments. Therefore it is that the shipper does not often undertake this unequal contest. Therefore it is that he submits to existing wrongs in fear of greater that may follow if he attempts their redress.

The Reagan bill leaves the shipper absolutely without any help, absolutely without any re-enforcement in this contest with the corporations. To be sure it denounces penalties, but he can not recover the penalty until he has proved his case. He can not prove his case except by forcing his way into the recesses of the accounts of the railroad companies in distant cities. He can not urge his case without the risk of being further discriminated against.

There is another point in which the shipper is weak in this contest. He can not get the public ear. He can not concentrate public opinion upon his individual grievance. He may talk about it; he may possibly get some local newspaper to mention it; he may even excite some interest in his favor in the community where he lives, but his voice is unheard by the great mass of the people of this country. He can not reach the public ear, and he can not concentrate the mighty power of a wide public sentiment against the wrong. The Reagan bill leaves him just as helpless as he is now. It leaves the battle to be fought out between the individual shipper, with all the limitations, with all the elements of weakness that invest and surround his case, and the great power of the corporations.

The view I have expressed is not held by me alone. I think if the Senator from Texas has read the testimony and arguments before the House committee upon this subject he will agree with me in the statement that the argument and statements of Mr. Chittenden, of New York, showed a familiarity with the question in all its phases and a fairness of judgment that was not equaled, certainly not excelled, by any other man who appeared before that committee. This gentleman was no railroad lawyer. He was a representative of the Anti-Monopoly League of New York. He was one of those who had been most influential in the fight with the railway companies in the State of New York which resulted in the passage in 1882 or 1883 of their present railroad-commission bill. No one can read his statement without seeing how careful and how wide his study of this question has been. He was familiar with the British commission and with all the English cases upon this subject. I shall read what he says upon this subject in support of the proposition I am arguing, that our legislation should be in the direction of re-enforcing the shipper in his unequal fight.

Mr. COKE. If the Senator will allow me, I ask him if Mr. Chittenden was not advocating the adoption of the Reagan bill before the committee of the other House?

Mr. HARRISON. Exactly; I am glad the Senator has called my attention to that fact. I read now the testimony of a man who on the whole favored the Reagan bill, and I ask the Senator to keep that in mind while I read some extracts from this same gentleman on another point that I shall reach presently. Here is what Mr. Chittenden says at page 114 of this book:

> I have stated three propositions. If the Reagan bill goes beyond them, if it involves any new principles of common law, I am not in favor of it. I do not think the country calls for any change in the common law. The people do call for some more effective means of enforcing the rights of the citizen at common law, for every lawyer in active practice knows that it is impossible for the citizen, as matters now stand, to enforce these rights in the courts of the country.

This gentleman says we do not want any more law; the common law covers the whole ground; if the Reagan bill goes further he is not for it; but what we do want, as he expresses it, is "some more effective means of enforcing the rights of the citizen at common law;" something that will re-enforce the citizen in this contest with the railroad companies. Let me read again, for at page 117 he puts this even more strongly. Mr. STEWART, of the committee, asked him this question:

> Then why are not the courts open for redress?
> Mr. CHITTENDEN. They are, but what is the position of a man who undertakes to get redress in these courts? No merchant dares to do it. He can be crushed in his business if he does. The question to-day before this great dry goods trade is, whether or not it is wise, whether they can afford to go into the legal fight and attempt to get these pooling contracts set aside by the courts. No. There is hardly a week passes in the office of any prominent lawyer in New York that this matter is not presented. A merchant comes into the office of his counsel with a claim against a railroad for an overcharge or a denial of some legal right, the lawyer examines it and decides that there is no doubt about the merchant's right to redress. But when it comes to bringing a suit the merchant hesitates—he can not afford to do it. He can not take the risk of doing it, because the railroads have it in their power, at any time, to destroy the business of any man or firm that seeks redress in the courts.

There it is. What is the weakness? The weakness is in the disparity of strength of those who are invited to contest their rights in the court. One would think we ought to re-enforce that man if we want to help him, and that we ought by our legislation in some way to protect him effectually against those discriminations of a vexatious kind which would be used against him in order to intimidate others from seeking redress in the courts.

I repeat what I have said, that the Reagan bill does not help such a man at all. To be sure it denounces a penalty, as the common law now denounces damages; to be sure it says that the vexatious practices to which the railroads would resort to crush the man who enters into this contest with them are illegal, but the common law says that. Yet these things are practiced. Right here, Mr. President, is the strength of the commission plan.

Mr. Chittenden says that legislation in the direction of a good railroad commission is not popular legislation with the railroads. In this testimony he declares that the whole combined strength of the railroads was thrown against the passage of such a bill in the New York Legislature.

Now, how does the commission plan furnish the help to the individual in his contest with the railroad company which I have undertaken to show is the important thing after all? In the first place, all the details of railroad management are to be open to the commission. Every closet, every dark place in which secrets as to rebates and discriminations of all sorts are locked up, shall be open to it. The light of day shall be turned upon every one of their transactions without any expense or trouble to the shipper; he may not need to move in the matter at all. The original investigations required of the commission by the bill may disclose it all. He may not even need to make a complaint; but when he files a complaint, then, without expense, without leaving his own office or abandoning for a day the transaction of his own business, the powerful influence of the Government, represented by these railroad commissioners, is brought to bear, and a scrutiny thorough and searching is instituted into all the books and papers of the railroad company. He is not required to go and look up the facts; he is not required to bring a suit in the dark; but the railway commission makes the investigation for him and puts into his hands every fact that it will be necessary for him to prove in his suit against the company. The Reagan bill gives him no such help.

I should have said that I assume an intelligent and an honest commission. The salaries provided in the Senate bill are sufficient to secure the ablest and most reputable men in the country. I believe that no executive will venture to trifle with public sentiment by the appointment of any other than men of first-class ability and character upon the commission. Given such a commission, and their first work is to open the secrets of the railway companies. Take the discriminations by rebates in favor of the Standard Oil Company, were the smaller corporations and oil producers who were seeking to have equal rates able to discover and expose the facts? No, it took the power of the State of New York wielded through a legislative commission to bring out those facts. We start, then, with a commission composed of nine intelligent, reputable, disinterested men—one living in each of the nine judicial circuits of the United States.

This commission, as I have suggested, secures a prompt, thorough, and inexpensive investigation of every grievance. The merchant has only to formulate his complaint. I said "formulate." It may be without form, so it conveys to the commission information as to the particular in which he claims the railroad company has violated the law. Having filed his complaint he sits in his own office, he pursues his own business; the Government has taken up his case. The United States has thrown itself into the scale in behalf of the citizen in this contest. By its own agency, at its own expense, it pursues the inquiry; and when it is closed, if it is found that on a particular day the railroad companies were giving one shipper under the same conditions and circumstances an advantage over another it places in the hands of the man discriminated against all the facts that enable him to maintain his case.

That would indeed be the end of the proceeding. Does any one suppose that, after the facts have been brought out, any shipper would need to bring into court any solvent railway company in the country to compel the payment of his damages? They would settle without the service of a summons.

Yet the Reagan bill, lauded here as the popular bill, does not in any of these particulars that I have mentioned help the shipper at all. In high-sounding words it denounces penalties, but it says to the shipper, "Fight out the fight yourself."

Then, again, the commission has the power to get the public ear as the individual shipper has not. It has the power to concentrate public sentiment upon any practice of the railroad company that is thought to be unjust. Take the humblest man in any of our towns; he can not make himself heard beyond the village he lives in. He has no influence; the railroad managers would laugh at him; he is but a pigmy in this contest and he is contending with giants. But when this great commission representing the authority of the United States, composed of able, intelligent men, men of wide reputation, of calm judgment, and without prejudice, looks into the grievance of this humble citizen, and says to the railroad companies and to the country, "You have practiced an oppression upon that man," the whole country hears the case, and public opinion is concentrated in its condemnation.

Do you suppose in that case the railroad company would resort to vexatious retaliatory measures upon the man who had made his complaint to the commission? Do you suppose that they would venture to say to such a shipper when he asked for cars, "We have no cars?" Do you suppose they would venture to resort to any of these small vexatious tricks? Not at all; for here stands this great commission, which may require them at any moment to answer why they did not furnish that man with cars and where their cars were. They can not hide these facts from the commission. The shipper can not tell whether their cars are in use or not, but the railroad commission can ascertain for him. It is not possible, it is not to be thought of for one moment, that any railroad company in this country would ever venture upon any of these small persecutions against a shipper who had complained against them. They would rather show special care and alacrity in meeting his wishes.

So it is that under the commission plan the shipper's investigation is made for him, the facts are ascertained, and if he is compelled to seek legal redress his case is prepared for him by the Government. Not only so, but he is likely to have his grievance corrected without resort to litigation by reason of the power of public sentiment and the force of the mandate of the commission, though no execution lies behind it. Our legislation goes directly to the point at which we find the present imperfection in the law.

I wish for a moment to call attention to what Mr. Chittenden says in relation to the operations of the New York railroad commission bill. Mr. WOODWARD, of the committee, asked him—I read from page 111:

Do those powers exist now in the English commission? Is that commission a success?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I understand that they are as successful as our commission, and I do not think anything can be more successful than the New York railroad commission has been during the eight months of its life. I am going to refer to that if the discussion does not take up too much of my time.

Then, at page 115, the following question was asked by Mr. DUNN:

Let me ask you if one central commission could possibly answer the purpose; ought there not to be branches of that commission at all the commercial cities and centers of the country, divided, for instance, as the courts of the United States for the convenience of the citizen?

And I may pause to say here that by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] we have provided for one commissioner for each judicial circuit, and under the bill he is authorized to sit and take testimony himself. Mr. Chittenden's answer was as follows:

I do not know that I can answer that. I will say this, however, that such a railway commission as we have in the State of New York, of which we have only had about eight months of trial, in my judgment, is sufficient to redress very many, perhaps nearly all, the State grievances. State railway commissions will redress State grievances, but the place where they fail and where they are utterly useless and powerless is where they come in contact or are required to deal with interstate commerce. They are not worth then the snap of your finger.

Of course not, Mr. President. A plea to the jurisdiction must be sustained as to all matters of interstate commerce before a State commission. The State Legislature has no power over interstate commerce, but when we supplement by Congressional legislation this defect, when we have a great national railway commission which would co-operate with the commissions of the different States, interchanging information, which would enable a State commission practically to transfer to the national commission any grievances connected with interstate commerce which might be brought to their attention, and which they could not for want of jurisdiction settle—when we have completed this system, which is the favorite system of legislation in the States, by putting upon it as its climax and consummation a great railroad commission on behalf of the General Government, then everything would be made to work smoothly and harmoniously. Mr. DUNN then said:

They have no power.

Mr. LONG. Do you mean to say that there ought to be an interstate commission?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I will answer that question shortly. You will see to what my argument leads. We obtained in the State of New York, after shaking political parties to their center for refusing it, a lame sort of commission. By careful previous arrangement the appointment on that commission of one member who represented the people was secured, and although we were promised better things we had two men put on that commission for the purpose of controlling Mr. O'Donnell, the nominee of the friends of the bill. The commission has been in operation now for about eight months. The result has been that the two commissioners put there to control Mr. O'Donnell are now acting with him, and the proof has been so clear and the force of these grievances has been so great upon that commission that now they are all acting together and in general harmony. You hear no one in the present Legislature proposing a repeal of the commission bill.

He adds further:

Let me show you how the commission operates upon commerce—

This is a most interesting illustration of the power and usefulness of the commission. He says:

Let me show you how the commission operates upon commerce that is not interstate commerce. You heard Mr. Depew—say that his company had yielded to a decision of this commission which had already cost them $200,000! Well, I have this to say for Mr. Depew: He is, in my judgment, the ablest railroad man living in the United States. He is so because there is in his conduct of railroad matters so large an infusion of common sense. He fought this railroad commission as earnestly as it was possible to fight it down to the time when the bill was passed and he was beaten. I have seen him bring down his special-raters with free passes by car-load after car-load to resist the passage of this law, and afterward to induce the governor to veto it; but when the opposition failed and the commission bill became a law

The general attorney of the New York Central Railway—

Mr. Depew said, "Very well, gentlemen, that is the end of it; I propose now in good faith to accept this commission and to obey its decisions; at all events, where they are reasonable." And when they asked him to enter into the brutal attack that was made upon Mr. O'Donnell, one of the commissioners, to defeat his confirmation by the senate, Mr. Depew said, "No; I am not prepared to say that Mr. O'Donnell will not make a good commissioner." And he took no part in it. And it is due to him in all these matters within the State of New York to say, and I am glad to be able to say it, that he has thrown his influence, and it is powerful in the New York Central Railroad, in the direction of complying with the requisitions of the commission.

I shall refer to only one of the many cases before the commission. The milkmen upon the Harlem road came before the commission and claimed that it was not right that they should be charged 45 cents a can for transporting milk into the city of New York, whether the distance was ten miles or one hundred and fifty miles. They did not so much object to a uniform rate per can, but they insisted that the rate itself was an unreasonable one. They presented their complaint before the railroad commission. There was a hearing. The New York Central Railroad was heard. The whole commission decided the rate was unreasonable, a majority deciding that it should be reduced 33⅓ per cent.; one, that it should be reduced 50 per cent. The railroad immediately reduced it.

There, in a contest with one of the greatest corporations in this country, it was not found necessary that the milkmen should go into court and enforce their rights, but the simple judgment of the commission was at once acquiesced in at a loss already accrued, as the attorney of the road says, of over $200,000. Mr. Chittenden continued:

Mr. Depew now says to this committee, and Mr. Depew does not state things that are untrue, that that decision has cost the New York Central Railroad (and it has not been in operation more than six months) $200,000. Who has received that $200,000? Either the milkmen, the producers along the line of that road, or the consumers of New York, who would have had this amount taken out of their pockets by an unreasonable rate which has been demanded and paid in that State for the last eight or ten years, and would have been paid forever but for the New York commission.

I shall read further, because I esteem this testimony of special value. It is the testimony of a most intelligent man. It is the testimony of a man whose sympathy and whose work has been with the people against the railroad companies. Speaking of the commission again, Mr. Chittenden says, in answer to the question:

"But not as to the local State traffic?"

Let me go a little further. The commission is required to examine immediately all complaints within certain limitations, and to make their report, and when they make report that any railroad company is violating a law, the attorney-general of the State is directed, and it is made his official duty, to prosecute for that violation.

I pause to say that under the Senate bill it is made the official duty of the United States district attorney to prosecute for its violation, either by an action for damages in the name of the claimant, or, if necessary, by a suit on the equity side of the court, for an injunction to prohibit the continuance of the illegal practice. Mr. Chittenden says:

But the great value of the commission is that it lets in the light of publicity upon the doings of railroad companies. This commission requires them now to make quarterly reports instead of annual, as was then the custom, and to do various other things of value to the citizen.

I shall read one further extract from Mr. Chittenden. He said:

Gentlemen, one valuable element in a commission is its operation and effect upon railroad men. Of this Mr. Depew furnishes a good illustration. He is a strong and a hard fighter, and yet he recognizes the force of public sentiment and public opinion, and therefore when a fair commission, such as I assume we are to have—we have it in New York by accident—examines a question between the citizen or a number of citizens and a railroad, and expresses its deliberate judgment that the citizen is right, Mr. Depew, and men of his class, will yield and not carry the contest further, for they do not like this controversy with the people any better than the people like it.

That is not simply the opinion of this gentleman as to what the railroads would do, for he has given us a most forcible example of what they did do in the case of the complaint of the milkmen along the line of the Hudson River Railway. The influence and power for good of a national commission would be greatly multiplied because of its increased dignity and power. He adds further, and it is the last quotation I shall make upon this subject, in speaking of the railroad companies:

The only orders they—

have made, that I have seen, which were not acquiesced in by the railroad companies, were those which related to interstate commerce.

So it seems that in every case which has been presented to the railroad commission in New York, the judgment of that commission as to what the railroad company ought to do as between itself and the shipper has been accepted as absolutely conclusive. The shipper has not in a single instance been put to a resort to the courts to get his rights. Yet the advocates of the Reagan bill, which gives no re-enforcement or help to the shipper but leaves him only a resort to the courts for any infringement of his rights, tell us that is the people's bill, and that this commission plan which has worked so successfully in New York, which has worked so successfully in Massachusetts, which has worked successfully, as a recent report of the commission in Iowa shows, in that State, a plan which is the general resort of the States desiring to deal with this question, is against popular opinion. I would not give a snap of my finger for any legislation upon this question that did not re-enforce the man in his unequal contest with the railroad companies, not by giving smart-money, to be had when he gets through, but by some help at the beginning. Experience shows that by a good commission he is relieved of all necessity of going to the court because the influence of these commissions, and of the public sentiment which they concentrate upon any particular wrong, is such as to compel acquiescence even by the greatest corporations.

I have here the seventh annual report of the board of railroad commissioners of the State of Iowa. It comes through Hon. James W. McDill, at present one of the commission and formerly a member of this body. I read a brief extract from page 12:

The commissioners are glad to report that the various railroad companies have by agreement reduced the rates on grain to Chicago, Peoria, Beardstown, Saint Louis, and East Saint Louis, from stations on the Iowa divisions to and including Creston and corresponding points, 3 cents per hundredweight. Reductions east of Creston and corresponding points are now being considered.

A result reached so pleasantly can not fail to be a matter of congratulation. Nothing has ever been done in railway matters in the State which has proven so satisfactorily to the public a proper appreciation of the common public good by the railway officials as this reduction of rates. Many thoughts presented by the managers in the letters and extracts of letters herewith presented are worthy of much consideration.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to call his attention to that same report of the Iowa commission, on page 8, where they state that the rates have been reduced even below what they were fixed by the "granger law?"

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I will read that extract also. They say:

Since writing the above the commissioners have received additional information which they deem it proper to make public. Eleven of the railroads of Iowa which carry the bulk of the grain to market, in answer to our inquiries, report there has been no increase of rates, and the commissioners are satisfied that rates have not been raised for several years, and that the roads are generally carrying at or below the rates agreed upon with the commissioners in 1878, which was a slight reduction below rates prescribed in what is commonly known as the "granger law."

It seems there was a rate prescribed in the granger law, and then the commission suggested a somewhat lower rate, and the railroad companies have actually gone below the last rate in their transportation upon the suggestions of these commissioners.

Mr. President, I have thought it necessary to make these remarks to-day simply because for one I was unwilling that this debate should close without putting on record the reasons which lead me to believe that the scheme of the Senate bill is wider, more intelligent, more discriminating, more efficacious as a remedy for the confessed evils in railway management by far than the Reagan bill.

But it must not be thought that the Senate bill simply constitutes a commission to get information, and without other powers. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] said the other day that the broad language used in the second section, conferring powers upon a commission, was a virtual attempt to strip Congress of all control over the subject of interstate commerce, and to confide to the commission as full a control as was possessed by Congress under the Constitution. I do not think that was a fair construction of the language. But that argument, which was referred to as being very conclusive by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], has been answered by an amendment which has been adopted, and which limits the powers of the commission to those expressly granted in the bill.

As to the other objection, that judicial power is conferred upon the commission, I do not think it is well founded. Its powers are simply supervisory. They are empowered to get information; they are empowered to administer oaths, just as a committee of Congress may in the examination of witnesses. It is not a judicial function. The commission may make recommendations as to what ought to be done, but the bill does not give their conclusion the force of a judgment. It is not the exercise of judicial power, because the bill provides that after the commission has expressed an opinion on the subject, if the railway company does not of its own motion comply, proceedings are to be taken in the courts of the United States to enforce it. So the bill is not subject, I think, to either of those criticisms.

But the Senator from Texas says that the Senate bill prescribes an exclusive remedy through the commission; that if the bill passes, every one having a grievance against a railway company connected with interstate commerce must assert it through the railroad commission; that he will be deprived of his right to institute an action in the first instance, and to conduct it himself without reference to the commission. I marveled at that statement coming from so good a lawyer as the Senator from Texas.

I believe the rule of law is that when a new right is given and a particular form of remedy is pointed out that form of remedy is exclusive; but here no new right is given. It is simply a recognition of the common law; it does not supplant it; and the method of an inquiry through the commission would never be held by any court in the world to be exclusive. Each shipper will be as fully at liberty after the bill passes as he is now to ignore the commission, to refuse to avail himself of its services, to institute his own suit where he pleases and prosecute it the best way he can.

But, says the Senator from Texas, you are depriving the State courts of jurisdiction and giving exclusive jurisdiction to the United States courts. There never was a greater misconception than that. I suppose the Senator will admit that the prosecution of criminal offenses against the United States must be in the courts of the United States. He would not expect the grand jury of a county to be charged with the investigation of violations of the criminal laws of the United States. So the bill provides that indictments under its provisions for extortion or for unjust discrimination shall be prosecuted in the United States courts.

It was further intended by the bill to supplement its provisions in the interest of the shipper by giving him the benefit of the services of the United States district attorney. The Senator will understand that the United States district attorney can not practice, as such, in a State court, and we could not send him into a State court to represent anybody. Therefore, if any shipper desires to avail himself of the use of the only law officer we can give him, he must go into a court where that law officer is recognized.

But the shipper is perfectly free to go into any State court and select his own lawyer. He may take the benefit of the investigation of the commission; he may avail himself of the facts which have been brought out by their examination of the books of the railroad company, and go to any State court having jurisdiction and bring his suit there.

The Senator from Texas also said that the Senate bill would result in bringing the shipper from Oregon to Washington to have his grievance investigated. The Senator did not enter upon the consideration of this bill with that open-minded fairness which he generally brings to the consideration of public questions or he would not have said that. The bill provides for a commission for the judicial circuit of which Oregon is a part. It authorizes this commission to make an investigation there. While the general conferences and consultations are to be held here, everything that the shipper needs to do may be either done by mail or it may be done in the very locality where he lives.

The Reagan bill undertakes to declare certain things to be illegal, which the Senator from Texas says are now illegal, which are not named in the Senate bill. It makes a rebate absolutely illegal and a misdemeanor. A rebate by way of discrimination is made illegal and a misdemeanor under the Senate bill. A rebate is the repayment of some part of a sum received. Under the Reagan bill if a railroad company had exacted an unreasonable rate they could not pay it back, because they would be paying a rebate. They would be in this interesting condition: liable to prosecution for having taken the unreasonable rate, and liable to a second prosecution if they paid it back.

There are a great many people in this country who think they understand the railroad problem in every detail. I am not one of them. There are a great many people who upon a very scanty examination of the question feel themselves competent to prescribe rates and to provide an iron-bound code of rules to regulate all railway traffic.

It seems to me there may be cases where a rebate ought to be paid. Take my own city, tapped by all the great trunk-lines to the seaboard. Here is a miller who is shipping his flour over the Pennsylvania route; beside him is another who is shipping over the Baltimore and Ohio, the destination of both being New York. The shipper by the Pennsylvania route desires to ship to-day five hundred barrels of flour. He inquires of the agent as to the rate, and is told. The shipper asks, "Are not some of these other roads giving a lower rate?" The agent answers, "No, sir; that is the rate of all the roads; but I will say this to you, if any of the other roads are shipping at a lower rate you shall have the benefit of that rate." It turns out that the Baltimore and Ohio road that very day was shipping for 10 cents a barrel less to New York. Are Senators willing to declare that it shall be made a misdemeanor for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to equalize to its shippers that cut by the Baltimore and Ohio? I do not say to equalize to a favorite shipper, but to equalize to all shippers of flour at that time over their road. I am not willing to declare that to be a misdemeanor.

Therefore I prefer that this declaration should be in the terms of the Senate bill, which is that if a rebate is used to discriminate between shippers it shall be a misdemeanor punishable by fine, but where it is used as a means of equalizing rates the reason of the rule certainly fails, and the rule ought to fail with it.

A great deal has been said about the long and short haul clause in the Reagan bill. I wish to recur again to the testimony of Mr. Chittenden to show the Senate what he said on that subject. The Senate will bear in mind that the Senator from Texas has claimed that Mr. Chittenden was a defender of the Reagan bill. I had myself described him as one of the most intelligent, earnest, and persistent opponents of railroad monopoly that I have ever known. Now, let us see what Mr. Chittenden says about the long and short haul business:

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up a moment's time of the committee. I have been giving the time since yesterday to the problem that was presented in the Memphis and Winona case, and that had led me to an examination of the decisions under the nintieth section of the railway-clauses act in England to which I had reference yesterday, and I find that that problem has given to the house of lords in England the same trouble that it certainly gives me. It may not give the committee any. In one case that I have found, which went up from Scotland to the house of lords, the house of lords were divided upon the question whether under this ninetieth section such a similar discrimination as that mentioned here was authorized. In that case the road led from Derby to London. Its maximum rates, as all the rates in England are, are fixed by Parliament. It made a rate to a place called Hampton-on-Arden. They charged 8 shillings from Hampton to Derby, but on through-passenger traffic from Hampton to London the proportion would be only 2 shillings, and yet by a divided court the house of lords held that that was not contrary to the ninetieth section of the act which I read yesterday, and they held further that it was certainly doubtful whether it was practical to take away that power of discrimination from the railway companies. All I have to say is that I should hesitate myself some time before I committed myself absolutely to the provisions of the Reagan bill, which prohibits more for a short haul than for a long haul under all possible circumstances. There is a very serious question there that certainly is deserving the best examination of the committee. I say this because I thought to some extent differently yesterday. It is probably the most doubtful question there is involved in the bill.

In view of this statement, is it too much to ask that that question may lie over until the railroad commission can give us their judgment upon the subject? As ardent an advocate and friend of strong restrictive legislation as Mr. Chittenden declares that he is not able to give to that provision his assent.

I do not stop to speak at length of the schedule provision of the Reagan bill. I believe it to be utterly impracticable. I notice that while we are all appealed to here to stand by the Reagan bill, and are threatened with the failure of all legislation if we do not, the friends of the Reagan bill are themselves proposing to amend it. Under the bill as it came from the House it would be impossible for a railroad company to reduce its charges until it had for five days posted up a notice of the reduction in every depot on all its lines. It would take five days certainly, possibly more, to get the schedule printed and put up on some of the long lines of railroad, and then there are to be five days more before any reduction or increase of rates could go into operation. It is an unintelligent way to deal with this question; it is an impracticable proposition.

Is it asking too much of those who really want legislation to meet us upon the propositions we have offered, namely, to prohibit extortion, to prohibit all discriminations, to establish a railroad commission which shall make inquiry into all matters of railroad management and shall re-enforce the shipper in his unequal contest with the railroads? Congress ought at once to pass some efficient legislation that will bring this gigantic power under the control of reason and of law, instead of being left as now with self-interest as its only law. We ought to have legislation. We shall have it if there is a disposition to harmonize differences as to details. If the commission plan is adopted I believe we shall have legislation that, before it has been in operation two years, will have the universal approval of the people of this country.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, I hesitate to advance a suggestion upon the subject before the Senate. It has been ably and at length, if not fully, discussed.

As a whole, I like neither the House nor the Senate bill, while in either there is much I approve.

The power to conform the conduct of the common carrier to the rightful subserviency of the public interests is the admitted prerogative and high duty of the sovereign.

The sovereign appears in this case when the carrier engages in the business over which to him (the sovereign) is delegated exclusive control.

It is not here as in the governments of Europe where common carriers are licensed by the national authority, or the right to regulate their conduct would be absolute and complete. Here it can only apply where the power of the grantor ends and that of the government of delegated powers begins.

Where the power is coextensive with the franchise it would seem not a difficult problem to adjust the conduct of the carrier to such performance of public service as induced and inspired the grant conferred. Yet the matter which it is now proposed to subject to legislative regulation has long engaged the serious thought and consideration of the older governments of Europe as well as of the States of this Union, with results sometimes damaging to the corporations and their capabilities of serving the public, and at no time securing that measure of performance which it was believed the public interests demanded and to which of right they were entitled.

It has been alike unfortunate for investors and the public that our railway system has drifted away from the sphere in which it was intended to operate. Its members have become more or less the agencies of stock operations and the prey of parasites, to the wrong and injury of the real plant, and not infrequently have the prime promoters had their honest investments swept away by designing trustees.

It has been from such diversion and such misdirection of our public works that come indirectly much of the evil and abuse which gives rise to an extended and increasing outcry, well founded, for relief at the hands of the great body of people.

That our railways have contributed more to the development, population, and power of the country than any other agency is confessed, and that so many are the interests dependent upon the system, and such their magnitude, that all must agree that too much care and caution can not well be taken in shaping such legislation as public exigency seems to demand.

That regulation of the conduct of carriers in respect to interstate commerce is demanded by far-reaching considerations of public policy has not been, and I venture to say can not be, successfully controverted.

Besides the remedies against the abuses which it is intended to restrain, it seems to me of paramount importance to prescribe, as Congress may do, certain definite principles on which transportation companies may engage in the business of interstate commerce.

These are embodied in the amendment which I gave notice it would be my purpose to offer when the bill shall be perfected for the consideration of the Senate. They go, as I believe, to the very root of the subject, and, while serving the people everywhere to an equitable service, impose no wrong on the carrier—no hardship.

He has no right to use a delegated trust, which in the higher sense and legal implication is granted for the public good, in any manner which shall give to any one person, community, or locality, in the performance of the like service, advantage over another.

Such is the nature and the consideration alone on which carriers are incorporated. It is of the very essence of the duty imposed by the grant, sought, conferred, and accepted, that he treats all comers by the same rules and with the same reasonable measure. It is an abuse of this trust to pursue his preferences to the prejudice of persons or communities. It is a pernicious misuse of the grant to direct the energies of the enterprise in the single interests of the immediate promoters. The public, of sovereign right, are entitled to enjoy the advantages of the invention at reasonable charges. This is all that an enlightened public judgment expects, and that, it seems to me, is the duty of the sovereign to enforce.

Mr. President, no acceptable or sufficient reason can be assigned why a person desiring to go from any railway station in any State or Territory to any other in any State or Territory of the Union, where the journey may be effected by any connection of carriers, whether wholly by land or by land and water, should not be entitled to receive a through ticket and for his baggage a through check. It is merely a matter of arrangement between the transportation companies, which I conceive to be in the line of their public duty and conservative of their own better interest.

There is no good reason why a shipper similarly situated, and likewise desiring transportation for any produce or merchandise, should not be entitled to a through receipt and bill of lading all the way to destination at a fixed total charge for the service. This is likewise a matter of convention between the carriers composing the route. The duty is to enforce it. The like is done by the leading express companies of the country as to packages, and yet it is by means of the transportation lines they perform such service.

Then I say, Mr. President, this done, and we open to the proper use of the people of the nation our transportation routes as wide and as free as the sea. The system as to interstate commerce becomes one of an interchangeable and homogeneous service, and the amendment I propose aims directly at such result. Besides this, it fixes a principle for computing the charges for the transportation of passengers and freights, which I venture to say is theoretically and practically correct.

The terms "reasonable" and "discrimination," when applied to this subject, are indefinite and vexatious. The concession granted that the same charge may be levied on a bale of cotton from Texas to Norfolk as is made by the same route to New York—that the same charge may be levied on a car-load of corn from Chicago to Richmond as is made by the same route to Newport News, or that the carrier may charge as much for a short as for a long haul, in effect legalizes discrimination. It is to alter unjustly the rightful relations of the markets and the producer—the merchant and the consumer. In the transportation of either and both—passengers and freights—there enters certain distinct and well-defined elements of cost, which the year's business of any well-organized transportation company will near enough ascertain to fix a fair and substantial basis on which to formulate an equitable tariff of charges for the succeeding year. These are what are commonly called "fixed charges"—including terminal expenses and the cost of hauling. Both are dependent in different measure upon the volume of business, and the latter sensibly upon the evenness of opposing currents. Fixed charges comprehend such items of expense as are necessarily incurred by the corporation, whether it transports one passenger or one thousand, whether it hauls one thousand tons of freight or ten millions, and they are in the direct ratio of the number of each transported.

Right there enters the first and essential factor in computing the proper charge for the transportation of either passengers or freight, and you have the data for determining what the proper constant is in respect to each by classes. Such charge must be made against each passenger and each ton of freight, no matter what the distance transported.

The cost for hauling is practically, as to the same member, pro rata per mile. One is common to all distances, and the other is ratable. The principle thus briefly described entitles the passenger from any station this side of New Orleans to the same rate per mile, plus the fixed charge to New York, Washington, or Richmond, as that paid by the passenger from New Orleans, and vice versa. It entitles the shipper from New Orleans and from any intermediate station, to Lynchburg, Norfolk, or Washington, to the same rate per mile, plus the fixed charge, as is charged to New York.

It entitles the shipper from Cincinnati, Saint Louis, or San Francisco, or from any intermediate point, to the seaboard, or to any intervening station on the same route, to the same rate per mile plus the fixed charge.

It entitles the shipper in Virginia, no matter from what station, to the same rate per mile, plus the fixed charge, as is paid over the same route to points South and Southwest.

It maintains relatively the geographical relations of persons, communities, and markets. It leaves to enterprise and God-given advantages a fair field. It opens all markets to the producer everywhere upon even terms. In an equitable sense it makes no place a way-station.

It enables the producer, for himself and at once, without let or hindrance, to choose his own market, and it leaves to the commercial energies of every locality an unhindered, open way to the trade of the country.

It will stimulate development, vitalize dormant resources, and enlarge the volume of business and increase the revenues of the transportation lines, as will every step taken which shall promote the facilities, improve the accommodations, and lessen the cost of transportation. I mean such relations between the transportation lines of the country and the public, such composition and formation of passenger and freight charges, as the amendment I have submitted proposes to institute. And this is the amendment:

Amendment proposed by Mr. MAHONE to the amendment of Mr. CULLOM to the bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers, namely:

Add at the end of section 12 the following:

"And it shall not be lawful for any transportation company to engage in such transportation of passengers or freights with any other such company unless it admits and contracts with any and all other transportation companies desiring to engage with it and its connecting carriers in the business of interstate commerce upon the same terms of association as those agreed upon between it and such other company. And the rate of transportation over all lines engaged in such business shall be computed and charged upon the following basis—that is to say: For passengers of the same class the combined charge of all the carriers, to be divided as they may agree, shall nevertheless, for all distances, be pro rata per mile. For freights of the same class and of like units, taking the car-load as the maximum, the total charge from the station of shipment to the station of final delivery shall be composed of two items—the charges for fixed expenses and the charge for any transfer where a break of gauge or transshipment from rail to vessel, or vice versa, or a necessary porterage may be imposed, such proper charges for each class of freight and like units below and including the car-load to be ascertained and agreed by the transportation companies concerned, subject to the approval of the said board of commissioners. The charge for transportation of freights of the same class and unit below and including the car-load shall be, as to the same carrier composing part of the route traversed, for all distances, pro rata per mile, to be divided between the carriers directly performing the service as they may agree."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to the House bill. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 14, after the word "reasonable," it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "person," in line 31, as follows:

And any person or persons having purchased a ticket to be conveyed from one State to another, or paid the required fare, shall receive the same treatment and be afforded equal facilities and accommodations as are furnished all other persons holding tickets of the same class, without discrimination; but nothing in this act shall be construed to deny to railroads the right to provide separate accommodations for passengers as they may deem best for the public comfort or safety, or to relate to transportation relating to points wholly within the limits of one State: Provided, That no discrimination is made on account of race or color; and that furnishing separate accommodations, with equal facilities and equal comforts at the same charges, shall not be considered a discrimination. Nor shall any railroad company or its officers charge to or receive from any person who is to be conveyed from one State or Territory into another any sum exceeding 3 cents per mile for the distance to be traveled by such person.

Mr. VANCE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I should like to make an explanation before voting. If I understand it——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to have it understood what we are voting on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is debate.

Mr. MAXEY. Then I shall not vote at present.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] at the suggestion of his colleague. I shall not vote on this amendment. I should vote "yea," if the Senator from Illinois were here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I inadvertently voted. I was paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER]. I do not know how he would vote if he were here. I should vote to follow the committee bill. Inasmuch as I do not know how he would vote on an amendment of this sort, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I wish to announce the pair between my colleague [Mr. FARLEY] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Beck,	Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Call,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vance,
Camden,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Morgan,	Williams.
Coke,	Jackson,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BECK. I suggested another amendment, which I will offer. I have not the bill before me, but I think it is in section 4, line 5, after the word "same," to strike out "for a shorter than for a longer distance, which includes the shorter," and to insert "for any distance less than the whole length of the line than is charged for similar service for the whole length of the line."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. I was not able from the reading, in consequence of the confusion, to understand precisely the point. Will the Senator from Kentucky state what he designs to accomplish?

Mr. BECK. The point is that the railroads shall not charge more to haul freight from Omaha to Virginia City than from Omaha to San Francisco; that they shall not haul a car-load past a place on the line to a place four or five hundred miles further and charge the intermediate points twice as much, as they are in the habit of doing.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator think they ought to be allowed by law to charge as much for a short haul as for a long haul?

Mr. BECK. I do not. I will not refuse to remedy one glaring evil because I can not remedy all.

Mr. INGALLS. Why can not they both be remedied?

Mr. BECK. They may be. I will try to remedy this one now, and then I may vote with the Senator to prevent another.

Mr. INGALLS. But in preventing one difficulty the Senator proposes to legalize another which is as bad.

Mr. BECK. I do not propose to legalize anything. I do not propose to give them any rights they have not now. When I propose to do away with an evil, then I want to test the sense of the Senate, and if the Senator from Kansas will find a way to go further I think perhaps I shall go with him.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him whether the bill as it stands does not prohibit the evil of which he speaks?

Mr. BECK. I think it does not.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the friends of this bill admit that it is imperfect.

Mr. BECK. There were amendments put in by the House, as, for example, in the first section, by persons who were not friends of the bill, in order to embarrass it, as the one put on to meet the question made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] limiting fares to 3 cents a mile, which the committee did not want. It was kept in by the enemies of the Reagan bill in the Senate to-day by a yea-and-nay vote for the very purpose of defeating it.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator does not contend that this language to which his amendment refers was amended by the enemies of the bill in the House. Does he not know that is the original language of the bill?

Mr. BECK. It is not the way the bill read when presented by Mr. REAGAN, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is not in order in referring to any proceedings of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BECK. I believe I am not; but the temptation was very great.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to restrain the Senator.

Mr. BECK. That is true, and I submit. It was shown before the committee of the House that, for instance, a bale of cotton would be hauled from Memphis to New Orleans for a dollar a bale, passing through a place called Winona, I believe, one hundred and twenty miles south of Memphis, and if hauled from Winona to New Orleans $3 a bale would be charged. I seek to remedy that. It was proven time and again in the case I gave of the Pacific railroads that at Reno or Virginia City or elsewhere $800 a car was charged, when that point was passed by the railroad and a car hauled to San Francisco for $300. I seek to prevent that, and I have asked for the yeas and nays upon it. To the first section of the bill my amendment was beaten, but I shall ask the yeas and nays on that when it comes into the Senate again.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he thinks the Reagan bill as it now stands does not prevent the charge he mentions in transportation between Winona and New Orleans?

Mr. BECK. I am afraid it does not, and if it does it may go much further than I propose to go in regard to the intermediate haul at present. I am willing the commission may examine into that and report. I propose only to deal with flagrant, admitted evils, and to leave for future adjustment all doubtful questions as to whether there should be a different rate ten miles further or twenty miles further because of peculiar conditions, or because the point is one where there are no connections reaching out, which is one of the arguments for charging more. I leave all that for future adjustment, and I do not legalize that, nor do I give the railroads any greater power than they have now over the intermediate rates along the line; but I seek to reach that great class of cases where men along the line are made to pay double and treble, and even quadruple, what the hauling is worth in order to make up for the losses that are sustained in carrying traffic from one end of the land to the other; where railroads, in order to break each other down or to break down water ways, so as to get clear of competition, that they may charge hereafter what they please, carry at losing rates, and make the whole line profitable by doubling up charges along the line. I desire to get clear of that; and as to other matters, I leave them to the future.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The evils which the Senator from Kentucky suggests are precisely those which we ought to try to remedy; and if his amendment is better calculated to remedy such evils, I should want to vote with him.

Mr. BECK. I think it is. I do not see how any injury can come to a road from the adoption of it. Very elaborate arguments have been made as to adjusting rates along the intermediate points; that you may haul ten miles farther off on the same road, and stop at a place where only one car a week has to be left, and where the train has to be readjusted, so that they can not afford to haul for as small compensation as they could where a whole train-load was taken off or half a train-load was taken off, or where the terminal loading and unloading was easy. I leave all such matters for future adjustment; I simply seek to get at the great question that the charge for the whole length of the line shall be as great as they shall charge for any part of it. That seems to be just on its face.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I suppose the object to be attained here is a just compensation for the service rendered by the common carrier. I presume that is the principle which we are trying to enforce in this legislation.

Mr. BECK. I am endeavoring to do that.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am inclined to think that the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky does have a tendency to effect that object better than the language of the bill as it now stands.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he has carefully considered his amendment and thinks it makes it any plainer than the original bill. From reading the amendment at the desk, and carefully looking at it, I am of the opinion that it will leave it in no better shape than the bill. The House bill certainly covered that point as much as the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend by inserting after the word "line," where it first occurs in the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, the words "in proportion;" so as to make the connection read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as provided in the first section of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation for a similar amount and kind of property, for carrying, receiving, storing, forwarding, or handling the same, for any distance less than the whole length of the line in proportion than is charged for similar service over the whole length of the line.

The purpose of this amendment is to test the sense of the Senate upon the two principles. The principle on which the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky depends is that the charge of a railroad company should be proportioned to the length of transportation. If that be not a true universal principle, then the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is not a wise or sound proposition. If it be true as a universal principle, then the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky very properly goes some length in accomplishing it; but it does not go to the full extent of the principle. Therefore, it seems to me that it is proper we should have the two questions brought face to face—the view that this is to be settled by the laws of trade on the one side, and the view that the service done is to be compensated according to the proportion of service. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will explain his amendment by telling me "in proportion" to what?

Mr. HOAR. You shall not charge more in proportion for one distance than you do for another—in proportion to distance, of course.

Mr. CONGER. I did not know but that it might possibly be in proportion to the expense of carrying.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I repeat that I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER]. I do not know how he would vote on any of these amendments if present. I would say at this time that if I were at liberty to vote I should vote against all of them, and for the bill as it came from the Senate committee.

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 41; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to offer an amendment before the roll is called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to the amendmen t?

Mr. PLUMB. An amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky by adding to the words proposed to be inserted, "under similar conditions and circumstances;" so as to read:

Any distance less than the whole length of the line than is charged for similar service over the whole length of the line, under similar conditions and circumstances.

The statements which have been made in regard to the injuries or wrongs to be remedied by this section, which it is proposed to amend, which is the vital one of what is known as the Reagan bill, are exaggerations—that is to say, the grosser cases have been stated as justifying the application of this principle, which I think is an unwise one, and will do, in any possible application of it, either as originally incorporated or as proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, more harm than good. The Senator from Kentucky himself states as its justification that it is designed to prevent a railroad from charging more from Omaha to Virginia City than the same railroad company charged from Omaha to San Francisco. That is not a fair statement of the effect of the section, nor has there been a fair one made that I have heard.

The case stated is a strong one, or would be if there were a single railroad from Omaha to San Francisco via Virginia City, as there is not, which of course lets the bottom out of all of it. In the next place, it is not the usual case. There are hundreds of instances, thousands of cases where the application of this principle would be destructive, and do a great deal more harm than good unless modified as I propose to modify it. Take, for instance, the case of a haul from Indianapolis to East Saint Louis and one from Indianapolis to Saint Louis. The haul between Indianapolis and East Saint Louis is a mile and a half or two miles shorter than the haul from Indianapolis to Saint Louis. The haul from Indianapolis to East Saint Louis will in most cases be that pertaining to small business, a single car, loaded at Indianapolis after the usual delay, and requiring similar delay before it is unloaded. It may be necessarily taken on a local freight train, which stops at all local stations, and thus this car will be subjected to numerous shifts to make way for its fellows in the train, and all this costs money.

The car going to Saint Louis, on the other hand, might be one which was delivered at Indianapolis to the company, which would in turn transport it westward by a connecting road. It would go to Saint Louis as part of a through train, and arriving there would be hitched to a train which would take it on to Kansas City. There would then have been none of the expense of extra handling or of demurrage on account of loss of time in using the car, as in the first case, and the cost of transportation would necessarily be much less, though the car was actually hauled two miles farther than the first one. Should not some portion, at least, of this expense be borne by the shipment which caused it?

So that in adopting this principle to remedy the particular evil complained of by the Senator from Kentucky, who is seeking to prevent a recurrence of the very great discrimination of which he speaks, we are really striking a class of cases in which there is no discrimination that any one can complain of or that any one ever has complained of—striking recklessly without due regard for the whole effect.

There is another feature of this general proposition to which I wish to call attention and which is embraced in this same section. It is the prohibition of both pooling and competition. Pooling is affirmatively prohibited, and competition is made impossible. And why? Because a schedule of rates has been established, taking the New York Central, we will say, as one continuous line from New York to Saint Louis for the purposes of this bill with rates between New York and Saint Louis and to intermediate points which can not be changed except on five days' notice. Now, it occurs very often that there is not 10 per cent. of the business doing from Saint Louis to employ the existing means of transportation. During this time a shipper reaches Saint Louis with one or a dozen cars of wheat which he desires to transport to New York, and naturally seeks to avail himself of the opportunity to get a low rate. The river boats can cut their rates to take the freight from the railroads, but the roads can not cut rates as against the boats or against each other, notwithstanding they may be willing to do the business at much less than usual rates in order to keep their men employed even if they make no profit. They can not enter into competition, for the moment they break the Saint Louis to New York rate for even a single shipment every single local rate on the line from New York or from Saint Louis to intermediate points must at once be lowered to meet the competing rate fixed on this single shipment from Saint Louis to New York.

So I say, if this bill is to be adopted or if this principle is in any way to be embodied in what we may finally do, it must be modified in some sensible degree in order to preserve the benefits arising from healthy and proper competition, and also to preserve in any degree that flexibility which is a necessity of modern business.

I am aware, Mr. President, that the amendment which I propose will, if adopted, defeat the cherished and illy-disguised object of the section under consideration. This object was frankly stated the other day by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] as that of compelling the railroad companies to charge more for the long haul, more for the grain and merchandise transported to and from distant points, in order that persons living more convenient to one or the other or both of the terminal points of the railroad may have a better rate on what is called the short haul. That is to sacrifice the interest and the advantage which portions of the country remote from the seaboard now have. Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Minneapolis, are to have higher rates imposed on them in order that points farther east may have better rates.

But, Mr. President, the bill does not even give assurance of this result. The long haul may be put at a higher price, but there is no assurance that the shorter haul will have a lower one, for the bill by fair implication authorizes the same charge for a short haul as for a long one.

The people of the West, of Kansas, of Texas, and other remote States, have an advantage which they ought not to have, that ought to be ascertained in some authentic way; we ought to know by the testimony of somebody, that of shippers, a board of commissioners, some experts, somebody who has investigated the question, that these advantages are unconscionable, that they ought not to be continued. But it has not been alleged here or elsewhere in the discussion of this bill that the people living in these remote sections of the country have an advantage which they ought not to have under the existing condition of things; and yet it is this at which the bill is aimed. It is the design in some way of those who have done the most to frame this bill to see that that rate of freight which exists now between extreme portions of this country shall in some way be modified or abrogated or increased in order to accomplish something, nobody really knows what.

The question of the difference between the long haul and the short haul, the question of the right of a community living nearer to one of the terminal points of a railroad to the advantage growing out of its geographical position—all these questions have been the subject of controversy and of consideration by the railroads and by the community, out of which has grown the present system; and if it is wrong, there ought to be somebody to show it and show wherein it is wrong, and to propose a remedy for it, and not strike, as I think this bill does, blindly and in the dark. There has been no allegation anywhere that I have seen that remote communities are getting benefits too greatly to their advantage. But the animus was disclosed by the Senator in the position taken as I have just stated.

I think, therefore, the least that can be done is to provide that in determining this question of the charge to be made as between the short and the long haul, we should say that all the circumstances and the conditions under which the transportation occurs should be taken into consideration in determining the basis for the adjustment of the rate. There are evils of discrimination which call loudly for remedy, but in removing them we should not risk the creation of greater ones.

I note that in another place in this bill the rate of carriage of persons is to be 3 cents a mile and no more. That has no effect so far as Kansas is concerned, or I suppose in reference to most of the States, because the rate is 3 cents per mile or under. But take the State of Colorado, the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. In the State of Colorado the rate which may be charged according to law is 7 or 8 cents per mile. That is to say, that much is permitted to be charged. A rate of 8 cents a mile is permitted to be charged in New Mexico. And yet if a citizen of Colorado were to go from La Junta, in that State, to Deming, in New Mexico, while he can not travel one single mile in either State or Territory for less than 7 or 8 cents a mile, he could, by purchasing a through ticket, and by reason of the fact that he crossed the State line, travel for 3 cents a mile.

It would pay a citizen of Santa Fé desiring to go to Deming to go back to La Junta, in Colorado, and there buy a through ticket, board a train, and go back down to Deming in order to get the advantage of this 3 cents a mile. That is not, perhaps, of any very great consequence; but it illustrates how crude, unwise, and unadapted to the existing condition of things this legislation is.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator state what the rate is in the State of Kansas?

Mr. PLUMB. Three cents a mile.

Mr. VAN WYCK. How long has it been that?

Mr. PLUMB. About two years.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What reduced it to 3 cents a mile?

Mr. PLUMB. The law.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; the very same thing that is proposed here is done in the State of Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, Mr. President, but the trouble is that we can not make uniformity in this way. Under our power to regulate interstate commerce, we give certain persons accidentally situated the power to avail themselves of advantages which are unconscionable by comparison with those enjoyed by the great body of people whom we can not reach. If we could cut down the rates in Colorado and New Mexico, that would be a different thing. But I only speak of this as an illustration of the lack of consideration which this question has received.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? I desire to call his attention——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield?

Mr. PLUMB. Oh, yes.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply want to inquire whether the Senator is not talking to the House bill and not to the Senate bill.

Mr. PLUMB. There are some other provisions of the bill which in case the Senate bill is not substituted for it I shall have occasion to present to the attention of the Senate hereafter.

Mr. BECK. I desire that amendment be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment to the amendment is to add "under similar conditions and circumstances."

Mr. BECK. I do not believe that "similar conditions and circumstances" could be found in very many cases that could be imagined. One day differs from another; to-day there is rain, to-morrow sunshine, or snow, or sleet, or somebody is sick. The effect of such a provision would be simply to make lawsuits interminable and cause continual contests, each company seeking to show that the circumstances and conditions were not exacely alike, but varied somewhat——

Mr. INGALLS. The amendment does not say that.

Mr. BECK. The law does not apply unless the circumstances are similar.

Mr. INGALLS. "Similar." There may be differences, and the cases may be similar.

Mr. BECK. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] illustrated it to me a moment ago by saying that an individual in Buncombe County, N. C., when he was a boy, rushed into the market-house or public square on court day and swore he could whip any man there, their conditions and circumstances all being equal; he was 45 years of age; lame in one leg, blind in one eye; married twice; had four children by his first wife, three by the second; two had died and three then had the measles; and if anybody was similarly situated he was ready to fight him. [Laughter.] That fellow was pretty safe; and the railroads would be pretty safe if this could be got in. They never would have any "similar conditions or circumstances," just like the gentleman's friend in Buncombe when he was spoiling for a fight.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] says that it is pretended that the country wants this bill and that the people are clamoring for it, while there is nothing in it that any man who knows anything about it wants. Why, sir, the provisions in this House bill amended as I think they ought to be in some regards correspond with the constitutions of ten States of the Union in regard to their State commerce. It is in accordance with the laws of thirty States of this Union. All that it says is, "You shall not make unjust discrimination between one man and another in doing the same work." The proof was made abundant before the committees of the House and before the New York Legislature that the Standard Oil Company alone had made discriminations amounting to $10,000,000 in eighteen months as against all their competitors. Ought not that to be remedied? The Senator from Kansas says no; if one man can make a better bargain with them than his neighbor, he ought to have it, and it is folly to talk about passing a bill that will prevent that being done! That is the first proposition.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator claim that this provision of section 4 will prevent what he has spoken of?

Mr. BECK. I have given the first proposition; now we will come to the second. I say that from Omaha, on the way to San Francisco, the Union and Central Pacific Railroads have been in the habit of charging seven or eight hundred dollars a car-load to Virginia City, while if that same car, loaded exactly in the same way, as nearly under similar conditions and circumstances as can be imagined, were carried to San Francisco, eight hundred miles farther, they charged only $300. That ought not to be permitted. That is what my amendment proposes to prohibit. Ought that to be allowed?

Mr. PLUMB. Is that what it proposes to do?

Mr. BECK. That is what this one amendment proposes to do, and all it proposes to do.

Mr. PLUMB. Suppose the station at Virginia City was two and a half miles off, within sight of San Francisco, instead of being, say, four hundred miles off.

Mr. BECK. Yes, you may suppose this, and suppose that, and suppose the other, and make out any proposition you please; the actual fact is that there is eight hundred miles difference in distance. The proof made before the committees was, further, that from Memphis to New Orleans they hauled cotton at a dollar a bale, and from Winona, one hundred miles nearer to New Orleans, they charged $3 a bale. Ought that to be allowed? These are facts, not suppositions. When the gentleman is driven to the wall in meeting plain facts and plain outrages committed on the way travel, he resorts to suppositions. Mr. Fink himself, whose testimony was read by the Senator from Alabama on Friday, admitted that the way travel, the local travel, and the local freights of the roads were the main business; the through freight was merely an incident. He conceded that all roads had to depend upon their local travel, their local freight, their way business, to maintain them, and the great bulk of their business is the way business. The Senator, in order to make a case, had to take the Saint Louis bridge, one point in the whole country where an anomalous condition of things exists, to show that the railroads ought to charge more to East Saint Louis than they would to Saint Louis, because they had to take off and detach only one car on the east side of the bridge. The Saint Louis bridge, I believe the Senator knows, not only as to railroad charges but as to postal charges, stands as an independent corporation, and he himself was one of a subcommittee one or two years ago—for I was with him at the time—and we had to make a separate arrangement to get our mail cars passed over that bridge, because it was a separate incorporation, and was not connected with any other. Is not that the fact?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes; but I did not make any point to the effect that the Saint Louis bridge cost more per mile than any mile of road.

Mr. BECK. But it stands as a separate and complete corporation, over which even the mails can not be carried under any contract with any railroad; but a separate contract has always had to be made with it, and one exists to-day for service over that bridge different from and larger than any other. Is not that the fact? That being the fact, the Saint Louis bridge is no illustration of the case. It is the only one he could give to get even the shadow of a semblance for making an inequality.

The Senator went on to say that there could be no competition under the bill, because the roads were obliged to keep up the schedule, and that would prohibit pooling and also prevent competition. I have an amendment to offer, that I gave notice of, that would obviate that; which is, in section 5, after the word "substituted," in line 36, to insert this proviso:

That there may be a reduction of rates prior to the posting of such new schedule, but in such case the new schedule shall be posted as aforesaid within five days after a reduction is made, and such schedule shall also specify the date on which the reduction commenced.

It was to prevent such suggestions as the Senator from Kansas has made that they can not by this iron rule of five days meet the competition that might come against them that the amendment was drawn which I had the honor to suggest and propose to offer as soon as this is passed upon. It is to prevent that very allegation from being made.

Why, sir, there is nothing in the bill of the House, as I understand it, that has not met the approval of the country and of the lawmakers of the country. Ought a great body of men owning 125,000 miles of railroad, representing six or eight thousand million dollars of capital, the largest combination of men of wealth in the world perhaps, to be wholly without any regulation of law in their interstate commerce? Ought they not to be required to work for one man as cheaply as they work for another? Ought they to be allowed to give the Standard Oil Company back $10,000,000 in eighteen months so as to break down all competition? Ought they to charge a man twice or three times what the service is worth over any part of a line in order to enable them to gamble at the extremities and drive off competition? Ought they to be allowed to enter into combinations among themselves whereby they will not haul anything for any one unless the price they see fit to demand is exacted?

These are the simple propositions of the House bill. It needs no commission to say that the things prohibited are wrong. The constitutions of ten States have said they are wrong and have prohibited them. This bill does not say what roads are State roads or are engaged in interstate commerce. The man who is aggrieved will go to court and have that determined, and have it determined in the fair, plain way before the courts of the country, organized to do him justice and to do the railroads justice. The Senate bill, getting away as far as possible from the House bill, proposes to put all this in the hands of a body of experts, a body of men who will be owned by the railroads in less than sixty days in all probability, and they are to tell a man whether he is to go into court or not, and he can not go into court unless they say he may go. Why not let the man who is injured appeal to the courts of the country, as he can do in all the States, as against the roads that are carrying on State commerce? That is all the House bill proposes to allow him to do. If he is wrong he will pay the costs; if he is right the court will say so. That is the manly, fair way to meet the question, and not allow any intermediate body of men, however respectable, to tell him whether he shall or shall not, or to be investigating in advance and making reports unfavorable to him if they happen to be railroad men, as they all get to be as soon as they have control of these corporations.

I think the most disreputable exhibit I ever heard made in a public body was made the other day by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] in regard to a man whose book I read with great pleasure, Mr. Charles Francis Adams, whose opinions when he was not employed as a railroad man were in accordance with the Reagan bill, in accordance with the legislation we are now demanding, and the very moment he became a railroad magnate, with their money in his pocket and became their servant, we find him denouncing the very measure that he himself had formerly advocated. So it is with all of them.

The testimony of Mr. Fink was read the other day. As able a man as he is, no abler perhaps than Mr. Adams, when you come to take his testimony it develops that the railroads are cheating each other, they are guilty of all sorts of fraud; and he has organized a voluntary court in New York with subordinates around him, and if Congress will just give him the power to punish the rascals he can regulate them, but he is against the right of the citizen to go to the courts of the country to do the very thing that he, Mr. Fink, and his subordinates say they think they ought to have the power to do and are demanding that Congress shall give them the power to do!

I do not want either Mr. Charles Francis Adams or Mr. Fink or any other employé of the railroads to tell a citizen when aggrieved whether he shall have rights or not. The courts of the country are open to him, and I do not want any commission to be determining when he shall go into court and when he shall not go into court. If he is a competitor of the Standard Oil Company and has proof that they have been paid $10,000,000 in rebates he ought to have the right to go into court and he ought to have a right to prove the fact, and the men who broke down the business of the competitors of the Standard Oil Company ought to be fined and imprisoned to deter others from being guilty of like offenses. If a man living at Virginia City is charged three times as much as a man living in San Francisco for hauling over the same road he ought to have a right to go into court and prove that fact and punish the men who are guilty of it, and he ought not to be required to call upon any commission, no matter how made up, to tell him what he should do.

I confess that I am not seeking to deal with all these things. I am not seeking to break down any railroad. I believe that these plain, simple provisions should be passed, declaring to the railroad corporations, "You shall not discriminate; you shall not charge more over a part of the road than you charge for the whole; and you shall not change your rate secretly so as to prevent the men of the country from knowing what they will have to pay for transportation, because the problem of transportation is the problem of profit and loss; you may reduce, for that is in the interest of the shipper, but you shall not increase without five days' notice; if you have competition you may come down if you like; no shipper objects to that; it gives that much more to the man who produces and that much more to the man who ships the freight; but you shall not secretly increase." When those three things are done, I am willing to stop for the time being.

I desire the railroads to understand that we have the same jurisdiction over interstate commerce that the States have over State commerce, and that we can punish them when they are guilty of flagrant wrong. As I said the other day, no man will assert that any State has the power to control great lines of railroad running from New York to San Francisco or vice versa. There is not a State in the Union that could give a remedy to the men in Nevada who are compelled to pay three times as much for hauling half the distance to Virginia City that is charged from Omaha to San Francisco. Congress is derelict in its duty if it does not pass a plain, simple law, saying that the man aggrieved shall have the right to complain, and the man who is guilty of that discrimination shall be punished, and let the citizen and the corporation settle that in the courts of the country.

I do not intend to make any more speeches about it, but it strikes me as a plain case.

Mr. PLUMB. Extravagant instances can be found to support almost any theory or any proposed legislation, and I am compelled to believe that the Senator from Kentucky is without any knowledge of any discrimination except the two cases that he has mentioned or he would have named them. They are sufficiently gross to be remedied and should be, but not by injuring other and unoffending communities.

In regard to the case that he has specially laid stress upon, the one of the charge from Omaha to San Francisco as compared to that from Omaha to Virginia City, I ask him to observe that Congress has power over every single mile of those roads—they are not one road, but two roads—but that heretofore Congress has especially exerted itself about the collection of its debt, and has appeared entirely willing that those roads should charge the people along their line anything they were pleased to if only they might thereby be enabled to pay their debt to the Government. We have not done our duty to the people living along that line of communication in dealing with this great question upon the one single basis of the ability of the Government to collect the last penny of the bounty or subsidy that it gave for the construction of those roads.

But, Mr. President, one swallow does not make a summer, nor does one example nor do two examples necessarily make the basis for legislation. I do not limit myself to the example between Indianapolis and Saint Louis as showing the wrong of the proposed rule. The cost of the Saint Louis bridge is no factor in the example I did make. Take the case of Independence, within ten miles of Kansas City, in the State of Missouri. Will the Senator say that a railroad company might not under some circumstances be entitled to charge more for taking a car-load of freight from New York to Independence than it charged for taking a car-load of the same kind of freight to Kansas City, ten miles farther from New York?

The car itself, after being unloaded at Independence, would probably have to be hauled empty to Kansas City. It would probably be sent from Saint Louis in a local train, which traveled only ten or twelve miles an hour, and would be required to stop at all the way stations, for the purpose of depositing freight, unloading cars, setting cars out upon sidings, &c. It might cost two or three times as much money to take that car-load of freight from Saint Louis to Independence as to take it to Kansas City.

I do not say there are not abuses in the system as now carried on. No doubt there are, and the law should correct them. The case which the Senator from Kentucky cited of the haul from Omaha to Virginia City is probably one, and a gross one, but I am not willing myself to enter upon this general legislation for the purpose of correcting a single abuse. I believe the Senator from Kentucky cited also the case of the Standard Oil Company. I think that abuse is not alleged longer to exist, but whether it does or not, if it is an abuse and does still exist it is provided carefully for in the Senate bill. However, I am not discussing now the merits of the two bills. To take one case as a basis for legislation in regard to all the 125,000 miles of railroad transportation in this country, ten or twelve hundred different corporations, it is, it seems to me, an entirely insufficient basis for legislation of the drastic character that is proposed.

The power of Congress not only to fix the rate but to do so irrespective entirely of the cost can not be doubted. We may say also that if the companies do one man's business for nothing you shall not charge another man to make it up; and this would be just. But to make the inflexible rule which says that without reference to conditions, without reference to the character of the haul, with reference to nothing, the cost of railroads or anything else, you shall not charge for hauling four hundred and forty miles more than you do for four hundred and forty-one or four hundred and fifty is a measure that is entirely too sweeping, and one that in my judgment will accomplish nothing useful. There is no necessity for it. It is competent for Congress, and quite easy also, to ascertain the elements of cost in each case and adjust the price of carriage thereto. When we know the facts we can make discriminatinsc or other rates as we see fit. But we shall then be acting with knowledge and not taking a leap in the dark.

I repeat that the bill prohibits competition, and this entirely apart from the question of the posting of the schedules, for whether posted or not, schedules of rates must exist and goods must constantly be delivered under them. Any instantaneous change of rate would practically be impossible, and yet if a reduced rate is made at a competing point, all local rates for points nearer the terminal point must instantaneously be changed. All the freight which is being delivered, all the freight en route, must at once accommodate itself to the competing rates thus given, or the railroad company renders itself amenable to the punitive provisions of the bill. I say therefore the bill does prohibit both combinations and competition, and for my part I can not imagine a condition of business in which one or the other of those principles is not in operation.

It is not necessary that a power which exists should be exercised unwisely. The very magnitude of the case should be considered; the fact that we are entering now upon this legislation for the first time; that we must necessarily, in order to produce that perfect harmony which ought to exist and that absolute justice which is the function of the law, act in co-operation with the various States of the Union, in order that the through rates may be properly adjusted to the short haul, and the charges upon interstate commerce, added to those upon local business within the power of regulation by the States, may conjointly produce a fair return upon the capital invested and no more.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, it seems to me that this principle would operate very injuriously upon the portions of country situated in the Mississippi Valley particularly, or the center of this continent. There the people must get their commodities to the seaboard east or west. In the city in which I live we are already importing teas through San Francisco to Saint Paul. We are transporting freights from Saint Paul to Portland and to the Pacific coast. The vast body of our freight is our material wealth transported from Saint Paul to the Atlantic seaboard, shipments to New York or to European ports.

If we should be compelled to follow the principle laid down in the bill it would deprive the portion of country situated in the Mississippi Valley from the benefit of any competition at the terminal points on either coast. For instance, if we were shipping freights to New York where all the great trunk lines terminate and come in competition, we could have no benefit of a through-freight rate on either of those lines, because all the intermediate rates must be regulated by the terminal rates. The great trunk lines pass through different portions of the country. They pass through great cities where they do not come in competition, and they would be compelled to regulate their through freight by these intermediate rates. For example, freight carried from the Mississippi to Philadelphia would regulate the freight to New York, so that the through lines would give no benefit of competition at New York to the shippers from Saint Paul or Minneapolis, the great points for the shipment of the flour and wheat of the Northwestern country.

In addition to that, there is an element which puts us at a positive and irretrievable disadvantage. Very soon a transcontinental line of railroad will be completed from the waters of Lake Superior to the waters of Puget Sound entirely through British territory. The Canadian Pacific road is already constructed from the shore of Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains, and it will be completed to Puget Sound—or to Georgian Bay, the head of it—within eighteen months, so that there will be a line of transportation wholly through British territory across this continent, and we shall have no control whatever of that line.

How are we to enter into competition with transportation upon the British line if we shall be limited by this provision in the bill? They strike our line of transportation on the great waters of the lakes. From New York goods can come to Lake Superior and take the Canadian Pacific road at its eastern terminus and go to the head of Puget Sound. They can regulate their own freights; they can carry freights both east and west; and we are not in a position to take any benefit of competition arising from that line. Coming in competition at the terminal points at both oceans, yet we can not reduce our rates for through carriage at either of those terminal points without regulating and conforming those through rates to whatever may be charged at the intermediate points. Trunk lines are built and running in connection with the Canadian Pacific road, coming down to the headwaters of the Mississippi at Saint Paul; so that in every direction we shall be brought in competition with that line over which we have no control and are put at a positive disadvantage. As has been suggested by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], the Grand Trunk road through Canada is already in competition with our transportation lines to the Atlantic coast.

This principle affords no benefit to the shipper. There is no regulation of a standard here by which freights shall be charged. The railroads can charge any unreasonable rates for any of the intermediate points. There is no standard laid down by which freights shall be regulated. They may charge an unreasonable rate for any intermediate point, and that is the standard and the limitation by which through freight is to be determined.

As I understand the bill, it would put us at a disadvantage which would destroy transportation from the center of the continent either east or west, while in the Cullom bill a standard is laid down and a supervision is provided for which would prevent unjust charges either on through freight or upon freight to intermediate points, and no transportation company is permitted to charge an unreasonable rate for any distance.

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator from Minnesota sits down I wish to say that he must be aware of the fact that neither the House bill nor any amendment proposed to it professes to limit the right of any railroad company to charge what it may see fit along the whole length of its line. The competition with the Canadian line may be sharp, and if they should have to reduce their rates they would have a perfect right to do that.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Kentucky will observe the principle upon which the bill proceeds. Suppose freight is shipped from Saint Paul or Minneapolis to Portland, it there comes in competition with the carriage by the Canadian Pacific. Suppose that the rate at any intermediate point on the Northern Pacific road is greater than the Canadian Pacific sees proper to charge for its freight rate, then the Northern Pacific road must regulate its freight by its charge to intermediate points, and the Canadian Pacific may reduce it for the purpose of taking the freight and preventing the Northern Pacific from carrying any of the freight from Lake Superior or from any portion of the continent. The Canadian Pacific could compete successfully and prevent our road from carrying a pound of freight. The Senator from Kentucky is quite familiar with the location there and the interests which would be affected by such a provision if it were incorporated in the bill.

Mr. BECK. It was because I was afraid the Senator from Minnesota did not quite comprehend the meaning of the House bill and its amendment that I rose to make the suggestion I did. We do not pretend to limit the charge. We say, "If you haul half way you may charge as much as you do for the whole way, but you shall not charge more." Surely that is fair. There is another question I wish to make. No road can be seriously damaged by not taking the freight that it loses money on. Can it?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir, it can.

Mr. BECK. It can?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It may, certainly. But the Senator from Kentucky will perceive that if the Northern Pacific Railroad were to carry freight to Wallula Junction at what would be a living rate, enabling the company to live and pay a fair interest upon its investment, the Canadian Pacific road could make its through rate to Puget Sound a much less rate than that for through freight, and the Northern Pacific road would be compelled to charge for its through freight whatever was charged to Wallula Junction, and it would be an utter destruction of all the transportation from the middle of the continent to either seaboard, I care not which.

So far as the State which I have the honor in part to represent is concerned the transportation of the Minnesota Valley is vitally interested. The interest there involved is the transportation of wheat and flour to the New York and Liverpool markets. The vast amount of freight shipped for these ports I can not at present state, but it is very large. Loads of flour go out daily from the mills at Minneapolis and the city in which I have the honor to live. It would be utter destruction to all those interests if a principle were adopted which would prevent us from having the benefit of the competition at the terminal point on the coast.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I do not wish to interfere at all with the bill, but if we are to sit it out to-morrow we need not continue the session longer to-day. I hope we shall finish the bill to-morrow, and I shall stand by the Senator from Illinois to-morrow and stay as long as he asks us to do.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, I will repeat what I said at the beginning of the discussion of the bill this afternoon, that if the bill should not be finished to-day I shall ask the friends of the bill to-morrow to remain here until the interstate commerce bill, or some bill on the subject, is passed by the Senate. I hope Senators will take notice, so that they may be prepared to come here and stay as long as may be necessary to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 2, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore). Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCCORMICK, for to-day, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of F. A. M. Kreps, of Pittsburgh. These are papers relating to his enlistment and discharge and other papers connected with his military service.

Mr. RANDALL. To be withdrawn under the rule of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. There is no adverse report in this case.

Mr. RANDALL. But it had better be done under the rules of the House, which prescribe the method.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well; there is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ALASKA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Supervising Architect relative to the fitting up of a Government building in Alaska for the use of the civil government; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, before the regular order is proceeded with to-day, to withdraw papers in the case of Jethro M. Boyd, now before the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that it is usual to file these requests in writing in order to prevent errors or mistakes. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Indiana will be granted.

Mr. RANDALL. Under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course, under the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. I make this statement for this reason that sometimes these papers are asked to be withdrawn when it is well understood that the claim will be reported upon adversely.

Mr. STEELE. In this case there is no such report; but a general bill has been passed covering the case, and it is only desired to withdraw these papers now in order that they may be properly referred to the Department under the general law.

Mr. RANDALL. But in all cases papers should only be withdrawn under the general rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Indiana will be granted, the Chair requesting that he file his request in writing.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

R. G. P. WHITE AND OTHERS.

Mr. BALLENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 646, for the relief of R. G. P. White, Peter Hanger, and L. T. Green, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Dr. R. G. P. White, of Pulaski, Tenn., the sum of $1,250; to Peter Hanger, of Little Rock, Ark., the sum of $20; and to L. T. Green, of Chattanooga, Tenn., the sum of $51; the said sums being for the rent of property belonging to them, respectively, and occupied by the United States under contract, and for which vouchers were given by the United States to them.

Mr. WELLER. I hope the gentleman will give a statement in regard to the thousand and some hundred dollars payment contemplated by this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has this been reported by any committee of the House?

Mr. BALLENTINE. Yes, sir. It is reported unanimously from the Committee on War Claims, or rather I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that there is a bill precisely similar to this Senate bill on which a favorable report has been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend from Tennessee send up the report accompanying the House bill and have it read?

Mr. BALLENTINE. Certainly; I will forward the report to the desk.

Mr. WELLER. I desire it to be understood that the right to object is not waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The right of objection will be considered as reserved.

The report (by Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas) was read, as follows:

That the facts in the case appear to be correctly set forth in a report of the Senate Committee on Claims, first session of Forty-eighth Congress. As the examination by your committee has led them substantially to the same results with those arrived at by the Senate committee, they do not think it necessary to recapitulate the facts, but refer to that report and herewith annex a copy for information.

Your committee recommend that the bill referred to them do pass.

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 646) for the relief of R. G. P. White, Peter Hanger, and L. T. Green, having carefully considered the same, report as follows:

"R. G. P. WHITE.

"R. G. P. White was the owner of two two-story brick stores in Pulaski, Tenn., during the years 1862, 1863, and 1864. One of these buildings was occupied as a military post-office from the 15th of November, 1863, to the 16th day of November, 1864. The other store was occupied by Federal military authorities from the 15th day of November, 1863, to the 23d day of September, 1864. On the 30th day of August, 1865, Col. Elisha Mix, commanding, issued an order convening a board of officers at Pulaski 'for the purpose of assessing the rent of certain houses and public buildings in the possession of the military authorities of this place.' The board so appointed met, found the preceding statement as to occupancy, and stated the rent of both buildings for the time mentioned $1,250. Thereupon a voucher for that amount was issued to the claimant by M. O. Hall, lieutenant and quartermaster. The voucher was duly presented to the accounting officers, but was disallowed, being barred by the act of February 21, 1867.

"PETER HANGER.

"The claimant was the owner of a blacksmith-shop at Little Rock, Ark., which was occupied by United States troops from January 1, 1865, to February 28, 1865. A voucher was regularly issued to him for the sum of $20 for the rent of the said shop. Payment of this voucher was refused by the accounting officers on the ground that it was barred by the act of February 21, 1867.

"L. T. GREEN.

"The claim of L. T. Green is for the rent of a house of three rooms from August 1, 1865, to October 31, 1865, both days inclusive, at the rate of $15 per month, amounting to $45, and for the rent of one house of one room for three months at the rate of $2 per month, amounting to $6. Both houses were situated in Chattanooga, Tenn., and were occupied by the Federal forces. A voucher was issued by the proper officer. Payment was refused upon the same ground upon which the preceding cases were rejected.

"The committee, following the rule which it has always consistently followed, recommend the allowance of the claim and the passage of the bill, there having been a contract made in each case by competent authority."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to raise any objection, but in order to enable the Committee on War Claims to examine further, I ask that by unanimous consent this matter be passed over until to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal, and then be considered by the House.

Mr. BALLENTINE. I have no objection to that.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference to appropriate committees. Under this call resolutions of State and Territorial Legislatures are in order for reference, and also resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of Executive Departments.

ISAAC STINNETT, SR.

Mr. PRYOR (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8147) for the relief of Isaac Stinnett, sr., of the county of Limestone, in the State of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BUDD submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas it is alleged that the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of January 14, 1884, issued, as a circular to the collectors of customs, the following regulations and instructions among others:

"5. Chinese subjects, not laborers, desiring to come to the United States from countries other than China, may do so on production of a certificate corresponding to that required by section 6 of the act of July 5, 1884, to be issued by a Chinese diplomatic or consular officer, if there be one at the port of departure, countersigned by a United States consular officer, or, if there be no such Chinese officer stationed at such port, on a like certificate to be issued by a United States consular officer.

"6. Section 6 of the act of 1884 does not apply to Chinese persons other than laborers lawfully in the United States. Such persons are by treaty entitled 'to come and go of their own free will and accord,' and when they leave the United States are entitled to re-enter on any evidence satisfactory to the collector that they are not Chinese laborers.

"For the convenience of such persons and of the customs officers and others, such persons who may desire to depart from, and return to, the United States, may enter the United States on production of a certificate corresponding to that required by section 6 of the act of July 5, 1884, to be issued by the collector of customs of the port of departure, which certificate may be prima facie evidence of a right to enter the United States.

"8. Chinese persons who may be compelled to touch at the ports of the United States in transit to foreign countries may be permitted to land under the regulations of January 23, 1883 (section 5044), so far as may be applicable, such persons to take passage by the next vessel leaving for their destination or the voyage of which may form part of the route necessary to carry them to their destination."

And whereas, if issued, such instructions and regulations are in violation of the act of July 5, 1884, relating to Chinese immigration, and are therefore a practical nullification of an act of Congress by one of the Executive Departments of this Government; and

Whereas Congress by the act of July 5, 1884, intended to, and did, by express terms prohibit all Chinese, whether laborers or merchants, former residents or new arrivals, from entering the United States of America without the certificate required by such act and issued by the officers and in the manner therein provided: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to this House, at the earliest possible date, what, if any, regulations and instructions relating to the rights of Chinese to enter the United States of America have been issued by the Treasury Department since July 5, 1884; under what law for the regulation or prohibition of the coming of Chinese to this country such regulations have been issued; and if any instruction has been issued that a United States consular officer might issue the certificate required by the act of July 5, 1884, to be issued by a foreign government, or if any other instructions or regulations such as above set forth have been issued, to specify under what section and clause of any law relating to the rights of the Chinese to enter the United States the same are authorized.

ACCOMMODATIONS OF CAPITOL.

Mr. ROSECRANS introduced a bill (H. R. 8148) to create a commission to devise plans for increasing the accommodations of the Capitol, &c.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

REAPPROPRIATION OF UNEXPENDED BALANCE.

Mr. HENLEY introduced a bill (H. R. 8149) to reappropriate the unexpended balance of an appropriation made by former acts of Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEYOR-GENERAL'S RECORDS.

Mr. BISBEE introduced a bill (H. R. 8150) to authorize certified copies of the records of the office of surveyor-general of any State or Territory to be admitted in evidence; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES JOHNSON.

Mr. STEELE introduced a bill (H. R. 8151) for the relief of James Johnson, late of Company I, One hundred and first Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM D. FARNSWORTH.

Mr. SHIVELY introduced a bill (H. R. 8152) for the relief of William D. Farnsworth; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PRISONERS IN CONFEDERATE PRISONS.

Mr. SHIVELY also presented concurrent resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, requesting its representatives in Congress to favor the passage of House bill No. 420, providing for the granting of pensions to prisoners of war who were confined in confederate prisons during the late war; which was referred to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

PURITY OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOLMAN (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8153) to maintain the purity of the ballot-box, prevent bribery and corruption in elections, and punish perjury for violations of its provisions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK LOUSTER.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8154) granting a pension to Frederick Louster; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ADDIE L. MOORE.

Mr. HOLMES introduced a bill (H. R. 8155) granting a pension to Addie L. Moore; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES CLARK.

Mr. TALBOTT introduced a bill (H. R. 8156) for the relief of James Clark, late a private in Company C, First Maryland Volunteer Cavalry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK LOWNDES.

Mr. HOUSEMAN introduced a bill (H. R. 8157) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Lowndes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARY A. WASHINGTON.

Mr. ELDREDGE introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 324) referring the title of Mary A. Washington to property referred to in the case in 94 United States Reports, page 716, to the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

KATE M. MACOMBER.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (H. R. 8158) granting an increase of pension to Kate M. Macomber; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DEPUTY MARSHALS AND SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. DOCKERY submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the House of Representatives what has been the total amount of expenses incurred under the law providing for the appointment of deputy marshals, chief supervisors, and supervisors of elections, and in what States the money has been expended; showing the separate amounts expended in each State, and also the accounts for such services which remain unadjusted.

SIMMONS W. HARDEN.

Mr. WEAVER introduced a bill (H. R. 8159) granting a pension to Simmons W. Harden; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK A. LEONING.

Mr. WEAVER also introduced a bill (H. R. 8160) granting a pension to Frederick A. Leoning; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ANIMAL INDUSTRY LAW.

Mr. WEAVER also presented resolutions of the house of representatives of Nebraska, asking Congress to amend the animal-industry law, as recommended by national cattle-growing associations; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CASSIDY introduced a bill (H. R. 8161) granting all United States lands, excepting mineral lands, in Nevada to the State of Nevada for irrigating purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 4244 OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. FERRELL introduced a bill (H. R. 8162) to amend section 4244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SPECIAL AGENTS IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. McADOO submitted the following resolution of inquiry; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the House of Representatives a list of the names of the persons who were borne on the rolls of the Department as special agents on the 1st day of November, 1884; also, a list of those on said rolls as such special agents on the 2d day of February, 1885; said lists to include the names of those borne on what is known as the fraud-rolls of said Department. Also to specify the names of those removed or discharged between said dates, and the cause or causes of said removal or discharge; also the names of those discharged and reinstated between said dates, and the reasons for their reinstatement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Mr. McADOO. I would like to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection.

DYNAMITE IN LONDON.

Mr. BELMONT offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to forthwith inform the House, provided such communication be not deemed incompatible with the public interest, whether or not any representations have been either formally or informally made to this Government by the British Government growing out of the use of dynamite in London. If such representations have been made in writing, then to transmit to the House complete copies of all communications that have passed between the two governments on the subject; but if the representations or communications have been verbal, then a statement of their tenor and purport.

THE CONGO CONFERENCE.

Mr. BELMONT also offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to cause the originals or copies of all communications which have been received respecting the Congo conference, and especially copies of the text of the commissions or powers sent by the Government to each of the three American plenipotentiaries or agents, to be immediately transmitted to the House.

ANNIE BAGLEY.

Mr. JAMES introduced a bill (H. R. 8163) for the relief of Annie Bagley, widow of Robert Francis Bagley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS IN SAGINAW BAY.

Mr. GREENLEAF introduced a bill (H. R. 8164) to confirm the title to certain lands in the Saginaw Bay, in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL LIEUTENANTS.

Mr. SLOCUM introduced a bill (H. R. 8165) authorizing the attachment to the Army as additional lieutenants of graduates of the Military Academy in cases where no vacancy exists; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CENSUS BUREAU.

Mr. COX, of New York, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 325) abolishing the Census Bureau; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEDICATION OF WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 326) to provide suitable accommodations for the public at the dedication ceremonies of Washington Monument; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

ADJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

Mr. KEIFER presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, requesting the passage of House bill No. 110 to authorize the adjustment of accounts between the United States, the several States and Territories, and the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PURCHASE OF PORTRAITS.

Mr. JORDAN introduced a bill (H. R. 8166) to authorize the purchase of certain portraits to replace those presented by the French Government and destroyed in the burning of the Capitol in 1814; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

TRADE-DOLLARS.

Mr. ERMENTROUT presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, requesting the repeal of the act of July 22, 1876, abrogating the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

FOREIGN CONTRACT LABOR.

Mr. ERMENTROUT also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, asking for the passage of the foreign-contract-labor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. A. HERR SMITH presented a resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in favor of the passage of the bill known as the foreign-contract-labor bill; which was referred to the Committee on Labor.

THE TRADE-DOLLAR.

Mr. A. HERR SMITH also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, urging the repeal of the act of Congress of July 22, 1876, repealing the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION.

Mr. ATKINSON introduced a bill (H. R. 8167) to exempt the property of the Young Men's Christian Association of Washington, D. C., from taxation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

J. D. BOND.

Mr. McMILLIN introduced a bill (H. R. 8168) for the relief of J. D. Bond and brother, of Wilson County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MECHANICS' LIEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BARBOUR (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 8169) to amend the law concerning mechanics' liens in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

THE SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. CABELL introduced a bill (H. R. 8170) for extending the benefits of the Signal Service to the farmers of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THEOPHILUS J. COCKE.

Mr. CABELL also introduced a bill (H. R. 8171) for the relief of Theophilus J. Cocke, late a private in Company C, Fourth United States Artillery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL B. COE.

Mr. RAYMOND introduced a bill (H. R. 8172) granting a pension to Samuel B. Coe; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PROBATE COURTS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. RAYMOND also introduced a bill (H. R. 8173) to increase the jurisdiction of probate courts of Dakota Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The States and Territories have all been called, but with the consent of the House the Chair will recognize for the introduction of bills and resolutions gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

LAND GRANT OF NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. GEORGE presented a joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, for the forfeiture of the unearned portions of the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad in Oregon and west of Wallula, in Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

UMATILLA RESERVATION.

Mr. GEORGE also presented a joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, for the opening of the Umatilla reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LAKE SUPERIOR SHIP-CANAL, ETC.

Mr. LACEY presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, requesting legislation by Congress for acquiring the rights of the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company and Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-Canal and Railroad Company, &c., for the purpose of promoting the commerce of the lakes and securing a harbor of refuge on Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IMPORTATION OF CONTRACT LABOR.

Mr. LACEY also presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, in favor of the passage of House bill 2550 to prohibit the importation of contract labor; which was referred to the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of States and Territories has now been completed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to move to suspend the rules to pass the bill which I send to the desk.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that on the first Monday of last month a motion was made to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 1339. The bill was then read, and is now before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the Journal and RECORD fail to show that the previous question was applied to the bill referred to; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has now, in the judgment of the Chair, no superior advantage.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I was recognized by the Chair and the bill was read. It now comes up, as I understand, as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not so regard it. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have sent to the Clerk's desk a Senate bill (S. 674), now on the Speaker's table; and my motion is to suspend the rules in order to take that bill from the Speaker's table and pass it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not understand that the suspension of the rules to-day prevents me from calling up as a privileged matter the report from the Committee on Rules providing for an amendment of the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be competent for the gentleman to call up the report to which he refers.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, however, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that in the judgment of the Chair that report would be subject to the question of consideration, to be determined by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course; I understand that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania move to take up that report from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. RANDALL. I ask to take up the resolution providing for a change of the rules, as reported by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am willing to give way for that.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it will take a great while.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am willing to withhold my right and give way for the consideration of that report, as it is very important, provided it does not prejudice my right to the floor afterward.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his motion; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania now calls up the report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry. When the gentleman from Illinois has the floor under the rules upon a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill, what right has he to give up the floor to any one else?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that upon the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania the gentleman from Illinois withdrew his motion; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania rose to call up a privileged report.

Mr. THOMPSON. Has the gentleman from Illinois the right to give way and afterward claim the floor again?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman reserved any rights at all. The gentleman from Illinois withdrew his motion, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania called up the privileged report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I distinctly stated that I yielded the floor for the purpose only of accommodating the House on this very important question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a privileged report of the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. THOMPSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is seeking to oppose other gentlemen who have meritorious measures they desire to bring up to-day.

A MEMBER. Let the report of the Committee on Rules be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has so directed.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry, if the Chair will indulge me a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to know whether it is in the power of other gentlemen of the House in this list to-day to suspend the rules and antagonize the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that he has no information as to any list at all.

Mr. THOMPSON. Is it in order now for me to make a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is not in order for me under the rules of the House to make a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not. The gentleman rose to state a parliamentary inquiry and not to make a motion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] was in possession of the floor and has asked to call up a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is not privileged against a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules and chain of decisions a report made from the Committee on Rules regulating the order of business in the House is a privileged report, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has called up that report.

Mr. BAYNE. But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to have order in the House so that it may be able to hear the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to raise the point that the Chair can not entertain at this time any other motion than that relating to the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I make the point of order against any other proposition than that involved in House bill 1339, to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Pittsburgh, Pa., and I wish to state the facts to the Chair. On the first Monday of last month——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to time being taken up in this way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is entitled to be heard on his point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. On the first Monday of last month I rose in my place and was recognized by the Chair to make a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill 1339 to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Pittsburgh, Pa. The bill was read, and was therefore before the House. To have made a motion for the previous question would have been out of order, because the motion contemplated by a suspension of the rules did not require any ordering of the previous question. The call of the previous question was subordinated, as were all the other rules of the House, to the motion I then made to suspend the rules and pass the bill. Under the rules of this House on the first Monday of each month a motion is in order for suspension of the rules of this House. On the first Monday of each month a motion is in order for suspension of the rules by any member recognized by the Chair. It is within the discretion of the Chair to recognize any gentleman on the floor he may see fit; and I contend that the recognition having once been made and the subject-matter of that recognition having been before the House, no other business can interpose before the disposition of that motion on the next day in which such business is in order, and I ask for the ruling of the Chair on that point.

Mr. HOPKINS. Allow me also to call the attention of the Chair to the ruling made on the same point by the Speaker of the House in the case of the Keokuk bill at the last session of Congress. The bill had been read under a motion for a suspension of the rules when the motion to adjourn prevailed. On the following day for motions which involved suspension of the rules the Chair ruled that the Keokuk bill came up as the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Reference to the RECORD shows the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the ruling of the Chair is altogether accurate. The House did adjourn pending the motion the gentleman made, and it was the gentleman's right this morning to call it up. The previous question had not been called, but the motion was pending when the House adjourned, and it was the right of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to call it up as the first business in order when the hour arrived for motions to suspend the rules.

Mr. COX, of New York. There was no previous question.

The SPEAKER. It has not been called.

Mr. COX, of New York. It could not be called on a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course not. It was the gentleman's right to call it up, but the gentleman did not.

Mr. BAYNE. I beg to say——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] took the floor.

Mr. BAYNE. I beg to say to the Chair that the moment, the very moment, the Chair announced the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills had ceased I rose in my place and addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as conclusive, and states to the House that under the rule the gentleman was entitled as the first in order to complete the unfinished business of the day to which he has referred. It was the gentleman's right, and it was the fault or oversight of the Chair it failed to find the gentleman asserting his rights. The gentleman's point of order is well taken, and the bill to which he refers is first in order, and in the judgment of the Chair is fairly now to be considered.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask for its consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask whether my recognition will come in immediately after the consideration of that subject which seems to have in the judgment of the Chair—and properly, no doubt—precedence?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will answer and say yes. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman to call up the unfinished business.

PUBLIC BUILDING, PITTSBURGH, PA.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the unfinished business of to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business coming over to-day is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 1339) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask that the bill be again read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the United States Government at Pittsburgh, Pa., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $1,500,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building.

SEC. 2. That the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are authorized and required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making contracts for the erection of said building.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask for a second to the motion of the gentleman to suspend the rules.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask by unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule thirty minutes is allowed for debate, fifteen minutes on one side and fifteen minutes on the other. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I will occupy but five minutes of the time allowed to me under the rule in explanation of this matter as well as I can, and then yield the remainder of the fifteen minutes to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS], through whose energy and attention this measure has been reported from the committee, and whose report fully sets forth the facts which justify the passage of the bill.

A site was purchased at Pittsburgh in 1871 or 1872, at a cost of about $350,000, by the Government for the erection of a public building in that city. The Government appropriated $300,000 for that purpose, and the citizens of Pittsburgh made up about $50,000, the remainder of the amount then deemed to be requisite. In the last Congress a bill was passed authorizing the construction of a building at a cost of $750,000; but upon an examination of the plans proposed it was found that that building would be wholly inadequate to answer the purposes of the immense business connected with the Government offices in that district. There are, Mr. Speaker, in that district thirty-two counties; there are two courts held almost regularly within the district—the United States circuit and district courts. The population of Allegheny County is about 400,000, and the population of the cities of Pittsburgh and Allegheny, with the surrounding boroughs, will reach in the neighborhood of 300,000. The amount of internal revenue collected at Pittsburgh since the internal-revenue act went into force amounts to more than $100,000,000. The amount collected in the cities of Allegheny and Pittsburgh in 1883 was $2,738,790, while the amount derived from the post-office reached $344,000.

The number of Government officials in that county is about from two hundred and fifty to two hundred and seventy-five. There are first the United States courts, district and circuit courts, which, as I have said, are held almost continuously; there is in that district the twenty-second internal-revenue office and also the twenty-third internal-revenue office, as well as the pension office, and the post-office, being one of the largest in the country. I believe it is the fourth or fifth, in amount of revenue derived from it, of the post-offices of the whole country.

The work has been in part completed, but when it was found that the building to be put up with a limitation of $750,000 would be wholly and entirely inadequate to the wants of the community, the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh passed a resolution asking for the suspension of the work on the existing plans until a larger limit should be obtained and a more suitable building erected by authority of Congress in order to give larger facilities to the business wants of that community. A delegation came here which presented the facts to the Secretary of the Treasury, who caused a stoppage of the work until Congress might consider and take appropriate action upon this question.

That is the state of affairs at Pittsburgh; and I yield now the remainder of the time to my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. REAGAN. Before the gentleman from Pennsylvania sits down will he allow a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask if the gentleman thinks it right to appropriate a million and a quarter of dollars for the construction of a court-house at Pittsburgh and refuse three-quarters of a million to provide adequate commerce for a country half as large as the original thirteen States?

Mr. BAYNE. In reply to the gentleman from Texas I will state that if you give me equal assurances that an appropriation of $750,000 for Galveston Harbor will result as surely to the advantage of the United States and its people as that this increase of appropriation will be of advantage to the Government as well as to the city of Pittsburgh and the surrounding country, and that it will result in a tangible, substantial good for the interest of the public, I will vote for your appropriation in one minute. I harbor no feeling whatever toward Galveston or its people except that there shall be success in whatever works are undertaken for the improvement of that harbor and that will be for the interest of the people. I have never introduced throughout my eight years of service in this House the sectional issue once upon this floor. I have never raised my voice in that direction, and no man can point to a word or syllable in the RECORD that will indicate that I have ever done so. I want Galveston and the city of Pittsburgh and all other points in this great country to be benefited by any measure that comes before Congress, but I want all such measures to stand upon their own footing, and go through if right, and be voted down if wrong.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if I can get his attention, whether or not the appropriation that is now asked is going to complete this building, or if there is any assurance from any quarter that it will complete it?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMPSON. Have the plans been altered to conform to the increased size of the building?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

I will say that my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] can inform the gentleman from Kentucky more briefly on this point than I can, since he is thoroughly familiar with the subject.

Mr. THOMPSON. I was simply asking for information, and if the gentleman's colleague can give it, it will be satisfactory to me to have him answer the question now.

Mr. HOPKINS. I had intended to reserve the time to reply to any gentleman who might find fault with or feel disposed, if there are any such, to oppose the bill; but I shall be glad to answer any question I can.

In reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, I have here a letter from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, which I ask to have read from the Clerk's desk, and which will answer the question of the gentleman completely.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
January 30, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th instant, asking that at my earliest convenience I give you an estimate of the probable cost of the construction at Pittsburgh, Pa., of a building suitable to the needs of the community and adapted to the necessities of the public business.

In view of the information furnished me to-day as to the needs of the various public offices to be accommodated, I am satisfied the amount specified in bill H. R. 1339, increasing the limit of the cost of the building, namely, $1,500,000, will be required for the construction of a suitable building for the accommodation of all the public offices, and judging from the proposals received for the stone work for a portion of the building, the work can be entirely completed within that sum.

Very respectfully,

M. E. BELL, Supervising Architect.

Hon. JAMES H. HOPKINS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, that answers the question as to whether this appropriation is needed, and whether it is sufficient to complete the building. The Supervising Architect answers the building can not be completed for less than that, and that it can be completed for that amount.

Mr. CURTIN. I ask my colleague how long will it take to complete it?

Mr. HOPKINS. The length of time will depend very much on the energy applied and the amount of money appropriated each year. There is now an unexpended balance of the former appropriation. This is simply to enlarge the limit so that the building can be erected according to the plans. We are not asking for a dollar of appropriation during the present Congress. There is an unexpended balance of a former appropriation, which I think is ample to run the work during the current year.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask a question for information. I understand the gentleman's colleague to say that a million and a quarter was desired. I see the estimate is a million and a half.

Mr. HOPKINS. A million and a half is the limit fixed by the bill. I want to call the attention of the House to two or three points illustrating the amount of business done in Pittsburgh for the Federal Government. There are received from duties upon imports at Pittsburgh alone about half a million dollars a year; and in the internal-revenue district at Pittsburgh alone there are $2,000,000 of receipts. My colleague referred to the fact that the courts of the western district of Pennsylvania embraced nearly two-thirds of the entire State; and hence it is that the business of the Federal courts at Pittsburgh surpasses that at Philadelphia. There is an average of three hundred and ninety-seven cases tried in the circuit court at Pittsburgh per annum. The district and circuit courts hold there their regular terms and special terms; so that one or other of those courts is in session one-half the year, sometimes both in session at the same time; thus requiring not only two court-rooms, but requiring facilities far beyond what is provided by the plan of construction if the present limit is not enlarged, which would simply give a little more space than that now provided for the use of the Federal Government.

At present three of the large offices of the Federal Government have to occupy rented houses. The custom-house, pension office—and, by the way, there are $3,000,000 paid in pensions, the number of pensioners on the rolls being 16,000—the custom-house, the pension office, and the internal revenue all occupy rented houses because of the insufficient capacity of the present structure; and if the new building is erected on the modified plan they will still be cramped for space and still require to rent other buildings, and it will be a matter of no benefit to the community and no advantage to the public service.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the present time the thousands of idle workmen in Pittsburgh demand that the Government should do something toward giving them employment; not for the sake of charity, not for the sake of benefiting idle labor alone, but because the Government needs this structure and can be benefited itself at the same time that it confers a blessing on the workingmen.

The statistics, I believe, were referred to, although I could not hear all the remarks of my colleague in regard to the internal revenue of the various districts that are embraced in the western district of Pennsylvania, each of which has its separate internal-revenue office, all of which have their judicial business transacted at Pittsburgh when they have cases to try in the Federal courts. Let me allude to one other fact, that the county of Allegheny is now erecting a court-house of its own.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will be understood by the Chair that all the time is not to be consumed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] on behalf of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BAYNE. Will my colleague yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. Was not this bill unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and further, has it not been favorably reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. HOPKINS. The bill was fully discussed by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and was favorably recommended by a vote of 141 to 31.

I was about to call attention to another fact: that the county of Allegheny is now erecting a court-house of its own at a cost of $2,500,000. Now, surely the great Government of the United States can afford to expend one million and a half. Surely the magnitude of its business and its dignity and its wealth and its power would justify an expenditure of two-thirds of the amount that the county of Allegheny is expending for the accommodation of its public business. The proportion would justify the erection of a building at a much greater cost than that asked for by the pending bill.

If I have any time remaining I reserve it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The fifteen minutes allowed for the affirmative side have expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. It has seemed to me, all along, that the amount recommended for the increase of this public building is excessive; and I have been unable to see in the discussion that has gone on, either to-day or in the Committee of the Whole, an adequate reason for the increase recommended. I rise, however, more particularly to protest against one argument that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] has urged in behalf of making an increased appropriation; and that is that the Government of the United States owes it to its citizens to do so because many of them are out of employment and need the work.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman misunderstood me if he supposed that I stated that as a reason why the work should be done. I spoke of it as an incident.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, whether it comes in incidentally or directly, it seems to me that it is not an adequate or proper reason; and, with all due deference to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS], who is remarkable for his accuracy, I do not think that it enters as a legitimate consideration into legislation providing for a public building. The very same reason can be urged for a public building in every town and hamlet in the United States, for distress is not only widespread but almost universal. We have undertaken to do so much for the laboring man by legislation that we have well-nigh by legislation crushed him to the earth. Strikes are prevailing everywhere. Stringency is characteristic of every community in the land, and the United States Government can not by making appropriations directly or indirectly from the public Treasury relieve that state of things. The best way to help the laborer is to take some of the taxes off of him. The true theory, the real duty of Government, as I conceive it, is to protect the citizen in life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness; and beyond that let him work out his own salvation. After Government has performed that duty, then, if legislation will only keep its heavy hands off the workingman, he will do better than he will if the Congress of the United States attempts to keep him on stilts. Beyond this, the less man is governed the better he is governed.

I have said this much, Mr. Speaker, because I have thought it proper to protest against the excessive appropriation that is recommended in this bill, not with any hope that it will be defeated. A half million, a million, or five millions, or ten or twenty millions seem to make but little impression here, and if all the recommendations for appropriations that come before us are adopted we shall soon have no surplus in the Treasury to be held up as a tempting bait for legislation of this kind.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. If the gentleman were convinced that it would require every dollar of this $1,500,000—every dollar up to the limitation in this bill—to accommodate the immediate necessities of Pittsburgh and the western district of Pennsylvania, the Government having already expended on this building upward of $200,000—would he refuse to appropriate the sum required to give the necessary accommodations to the business of that district?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would not, of course, hesitate to make any such necessary appropriation.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I assure my friend from Tennessee, with full knowledge, that those are the facts, and that not one dollar less than this amount will give adequate accommodation for the present business of that district.

And I assure my friend of another fact: that the United States circuit court is held now in a small room; and I call upon my colleague [Mr. BOYLE], who practices frequently before that court, to state whether he has not had to go into a private chamber to attend sessions of that court in cases involving hundreds of thousands of dollars?

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the gentleman forgets the fact that the court will no longer be held in that kind of a place after we have spent even the $750,000 in the erection of a public building.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes; it will.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has asked his question and I have answered it. I state further that in legislating here I hope I have the spirit to meet every exigency that may arise, and to vote for whatever appropriations are really necessary for the public service, but do not want to vote for a dollar more than is essential to good government. Amounts do not startle me when there is no question about the propriety of the appropriation. But now I want to ask my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] a question: You came here one or two years ago and asked for an appropriation of $750,000. How is it that your demand has doubled in one short year?

Mr. BAYNE. I will answer the question. It is because after the bill was introduced and the plans of the Supervising Architect were made it was found that a building could not be put up for the amount of money appropriated that would accommodate the business of that district.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The Supervising Architect ought to have known what he was doing when the first appropriation was asked for, if he was the one who first made the estimates. You came here and asked for $750,000 and got it, and now you come and seek to double the amount. The custom of getting a building begun on a small basis and increasing the appropriation afterward is entirely too common.

Mr. BAYNE. There is another thing I want to say to the gentleman, if he will yield to me a moment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. My time has expired, or I should be very glad to yield further to my friend from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] has expired, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, if I understand this question correctly. $300,000 was expended for the purchase of the site for this building, I ask my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] to tell me whether I am correct in that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Three hundred and fifty-one thousand dollars was expended for the site; of which the Government paid $300,000 and the citizens of Pittsburgh the remainder.

Mr. HOLMAN. So the Government has paid $300,000 for the site of this building, and the limit of cost is therefore now over a million, including the cost of the site. There was $800,000 appropriated for the building prior to December, 1884, and in addition to that $300,000 for the site.

Mr. RANDALL. Not in addition.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, not in addition to the amount for the site.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is to say, the whole amount authorized up to this time for site and building is $1,051,000.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the limit, but only $800,000 has been appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the limit now for the building and the site together is $1,051,000?

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

Mr. HOLMAN. And now it is proposed to extend that limit to $1,500,000.

Mr. REAGAN. I think the gentleman from Indiana has got that wrong. According to the statement made here, as I understand it, there has been about $350,000 appropriated, and this bill appropriates one million more.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill increases the limit for the building alone from $750,000 to $1,500,000. In addition to the site, the building is to cost $1,500,000, and the cost of the site is $300,000, making the whole cost to the Government $1,800,000. That is the proposition.

Mr. BAYNE. That is not the proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is it, as I understand it.

Mr. BAYNE. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will allow me to make a suggestion, I will inform him that when they dug out the foundations for this building they found that there was a leak and the water ran in, and they had to put in a concrete foundation, which necessitated the expenditure of an additional seventy or eighty thousand dollars—money that was not expected to be expended at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that to be the fact, but now, instead of that $70,000 or $80,000 being asked for, it is proposed to appropriate $750,000. [Laughter.] If the gentleman will amend his bill so as to appropriate merely the amount of that additional expense, resulting from an unforeseen cause, I will vote with him; but to appropriate $750,000 additional on the ground that a mistake was made of $70,000 or $80,000 in the original estimate is hardly reasonable.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] yield for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have only three minutes altogether.

Mr. YOUNG. I wont take this out of your time. [Laughter.] My question is this: If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] thinks that $400,000 is only a sufficient and reasonable appropriation for a public building in a town of 30,000 inhabitants, Evansville, in his own State, does he think that $1,500,000 is too large a sum for a public building in a city of 400,000 inhabitants?

Mr. HOLMAN. The State-house of the State of Indiana, now in progress of construction and approaching completion, one of the finest buildings in the great West, is to cost but $2,000,000, and I am quite sure that it will cost nothing beyond that—a State-house in a great city, the capital of a great State. But here, after obtaining authority for an expenditure to the amount of $1,051,000 for a site and a public building for Government offices in a city of the magnitude of Pittsburgh, it is proposed to run up the limit to $1,500,000 for the building. The main trouble about these appropriations for public buildings is their extravagance; that is what excites the indignation of our people—the extravagance of these appropriations and the way in which they are made, placing Congress at the mercy of your Supervising Architect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Seven minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, when I called for a second on this motion it was in order that the House might be informed as to the condition of the building for which this appropriation is now asked. I do not know that I am competent to pass upon the question whether any further expenditure of money upon this particular building ought to be made, as proposed by this bill; but, Mr. Speaker, we have seen heretofore in reference to various public buildings which have been undertaken that a great amount of extravagance has crept in, especially where by subsequent legislation the expenditure has been enlarged beyond that fixed in the original bill. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] has called the attention of the House and of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the bill for the construction of a public building at Evansville, Ind., $462,000 having been spent to erect there a building to be used for custom-house purposes, when not one dollar of customs revenue has ever been collected there.

A MEMBER. We understand you voted for it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Indeed I did not. The building was authorized and erected before I was elected a member of Congress.

Mr. HOPKINS. Did the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] vote for that bill?

Mr. THOMPSON. I really do not know whether he did or not.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I did not support the measure. I was not here. At any rate, extravagance in Indiana would not justify this extravagance in Pennsylvania.

A MEMBER [to Mr. THOMPSON]. Three hundred and sixty-three thousand dollars was the amount.

Mr. THOMPSON. Possibly the gentleman is correct. I only called attention to this matter for the purpose of showing that appropriations ought not to be made for these public buildings without due and careful consideration. Take the case of the public building at Cincinnati! I remember having once investigated that matter. A building was started which was to cost, as originally stated, $1,750,000. More than $5,000,000 has already been expended upon that building, and it has not been completed. This is the history of many of these public buildings scattered all over the country. Hence the House can not be too careful before committing itself to this extravagant, or at least apparently extravagant, expenditure.

Mr. DUNHAM. What was originally proposed as the cost of the building now under consideration?

Mr. THOMPSON. The original proposition brought before this House, as I understand, was to expend $300,000 to buy the site, $250,000 of which was given by Congress and $50,000 by the people of the city of Pittsburgh. In addition to that, $750,000 was to be expended in the erection of the building.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is proposed now as the total cost?

Mr. THOMPSON. The proposition now pending is to increase the expenditure for the building alone from $750,000 to $1,500,000.

Mr. DUNHAM. Making the expenditure nearly $2,000,000 altogether.

Mr. THOMPSON. Making an aggregate expenditure of nearly $2,000,000.

Mr. HOPKINS. Less than that county is paying for its court-house.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it not the fact that a great many private buildings, erected for instance by large corporations, are started to be put up for a certain amount of money, which however is finally exceeded, because it is found impossible to do the work for the sum originally estimated?

Mr. THOMPSON. I can not speak as an expert upon that matter. Very possibly the fact is as the gentleman's question would intimate—that almost every one who attempts to put up a building finds it to cost ultimately more than he expected when he set out.

Mr. DUNHAM. I know that the building in Chicago for the board of trade was started upon an expected expenditure of $1,000,000, but it has already cost $1,700,000.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the rule laid down by gentlemen who ask the House to pass this measure is an unsafe rule. They claim that $100,000,000 of internal revenue has been collected in that city since our internal-revenue system was established. If you calculate the amount collected yearly, it will be found a very insignificant sum, no more than we collect in our State annually without any public buildings for the purpose whatever. In Lexington, Ky., there is no public building, yet internal revenue to the amount of nearly $5,000,000 is collected in that city alone. If we now agree to the pending motion and pass this bill, I fear it may be found that we have acted, as in many other cases, without due consideration and in the absence of any public necessity for the expenditure.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to say against the erection of a public building at Lexington. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate on this motion has expired. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has been read.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 133, noes 53.

Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. ELDREDGE, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 162, nays 78, not voting 83; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to, and the bill was passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

During the roll-call,

Mr. NICHOLLS said: I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCCORMICK], but being satisfied that he would vote in the affirmative, I have taken the responsibility and have voted in the affirmative.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

On all political questions, until further notice;

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. KELLOGG.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. FYAN with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. ELLIOTT with Mr. VALENTINE.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, with Mr. SKINNER, of New York.

Mr. GARRISON with Mr. BARR.

For this day:

Mr. HURD with Mr. OCHILTREE.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, with JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. HOLTON.

Mr. CLAY with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. MCCORMICK.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. HOUK.

On this bill:

Mr. PERKINS with Mr. HOWEY.

Mr. BREWER, of New York, with Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. BREWER would vote "ay" and Mr. MCCOMAS "no."

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I rise to a question of privilege, and ask extracts (which I have marked) from a newspaper published in this city be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Representative MUTCHLER, chairman of the House Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, has been instructed by his committee to make an adverse report on the bill to prohibit the removal of any honorably discharged Union soldier, sailor, or marine, or widow or dependent relative of any deceased Union soldier, sailor, or marine, from any office in the civil service of the United States except for specified causes.

* * * * * * *

The bill referred to was introduced by Hon. J. D. TAYLOR, of Ohio, on December 4, and was then referred to Mr. MUTCHLER'S committee, where in turn it was placed in the hands of a subcommittee, consisting of the chairman, Mr. BARKSDALE and Mr. LYMAN, two Democrats and an Independent. At the meeting of the committee, at which this report was adopted, notices had not been sent to all the members. So far as can be learned the Republican members received no notification, and were consequently not present. It is not therefore a majority report, though necessarily no notice has yet been given of it.

* * * * * * *

Representative MILLARD, one of the Republican members of the committee, was seen last night and asked about the report.

"I should not like it to go out," he replied, "that it was a report of our committee, or at least a unanimous one. I, for one, was not notified of the meeting, though I have been of every other meeting, and have attended them all. I knew nothing of the report having been made until after adjournment."

Mr. MUTCHLER. If the paragraphs read were a reflection upon me alone——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania claims that there is a question of privilege arising out of the newspaper paragraphs which have been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not informed whether that constitutes his question of personal privilege or not. The gentleman rose claiming to rise to a question of personal privilege, and asked to have read by the Clerk what has been read in the hearing of the House. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. MUTCHLER. If this were a reflection upon myself individually and included no other member of the committee, I should not trouble the House by asking its indulgence while I make a few remarks in explanation of the matter charged. If it were not for the fact the charge reflects upon a majority of the committee, charging them with official misconduct, and particularly the clerk, based upon a statement purporting to have been made by a member of the committee, I should not ask to be heard.

I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that when the bill was referred to the committee the author of it asked it should receive consideration at the hands of the committee at the earliest possible moment. For the purpose of considering the bill a meeting of the committee was called on last Thursday one week ago. At that meeting a quorum failed to attend. However, there were as many Republicans at the meeting as Democrats—I believe at least three or four of them were there. It was understood a subcommittee should take the bill and make a report on it. The bill was referred to a subcommittee, of which I myself was chairman, and after the subcommittee had agreed upon its report, notice I believe was given to every member of the committee there would be a meeting on Saturday last, the regular day for the meeting of the committee. The committee met on last Saturday, the hour fixed being 11 o'clock. A quorum appeared at half past 11, and that was only obtained by the clerk coming upon the floor of the House in search of members of the committee and requesting them to go to the committee-room in order to make up a quorum. Now it so happened that there was but one Republican, Colonel LYMAN, of Massachusetts, who was present at that committee.

Mr. DUNHAM. It is doubtful about his being a Republican.

Mr. MUTCHLER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will answer in that regard for himself.

The notices were sent through the post-office, or were delivered at the House post-office to go through the mails; at least I got mine in that way and suppose every other member of the committee got his notice.

Now, so far as the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] is concerned, upon whose statement this attack upon the committee seems to have been founded, it appears, as I learned this morning, that his notice accidentally got into the mail of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING], who I believe lives at the same hotel; and Mr. KING informs me that after the meeting of the committee had taken place, in going through his mail he discovered Mr. MILLARD's notice bound up with it.

Mr. KING. I wish to say that that is entirely correct.

Mr. MUTCHLER. So, Mr. Speaker, there was no motive in failing to give members notice of the meeting, nor was there any attempt made to keep Republicans away from that committee meeting.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MUTCHLER. Certainly.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I wish to ask if it was not the regular meeting day of the committee?

Mr. MUTCHLER. It was the regular meeting day fixed by a resolution adopted February 21, 1884, and every member of the committee, so far as I know and so far as the clerk knows—and I may say here he is a very efficient clerk, a gentleman of honor, who would not be guilty of such a practice as is charged in this newspaper—I say so far as he knows every member of the committee was supplied with a notice; and if any member of the committee failed to receive his notice it certainly was not owing to any negligence or improper action by the Democratic members, or any improper action on the part of the clerk of the committee.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, in justice to myself and the Republicans on the Committee on Civil Service Reform, I desire to state that in the earlier days of this session the Representative from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] introduced a bill, the substance of which was that no Union soldier should be removed from the service of the Government without cause before the expiration of his term. Mr. TAYLOR came to me and asked if the bill which he had introduced could not have a hearing before the committee? I saw the chairman of the committee [Mr. MUTCHLER], and he said he thought the committee could be got together, and that the bill might be considered by them. Subsequently he notified me that a meeting would be called, and I attended that meeting, as I had every other meeting of the committee during this Congress.

At that meeting he stated that he would appoint a subcommittee to consider and report the bill to the full committee. I will state that I subsequently understood a subcommittee had been appointed, consisting of himself, Mr. BARKSDALE, of Mississippi, and Mr. LYMAN, of Massachusetts, which subcommittee made the adverse report. I had thought the Union soldier entitled to have a Republican on that committee, and I think so still.

I have the greatest respect for my friend from Massachusetts, but I do not understand that he is a Republican or that he claims to be one.

But let that be as it may, it appears that there was a meeting held on Saturday last, at which was present no Republican of the committee, and of which I had no notice. As I came into the Capitol Saturday morning I met at the elevator Mr. COX, and somewhere in the lobby I saw Mr. LYMAN, who reproached me for not being present at the meeting. I told them that I had no notice of the meeting or I should have been present.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLARD. I stated to the gentleman that I had no knowledge or intimation that a meeting was to be held on that day; that if I had received such information I should certainly have attended, because Mr. TAYLOR had represented to me that the bill was an important one and that it should receive the full and careful consideration of the committee. I did not therefore attend the meeting; and I say to the House, if I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman, he now concedes that the notice did not reach me.

Last evening, Mr. De Witt, of the Republican, came to my hotel and asked the question: "Was I present in the committee-room when this matter was considered and a report made adversely to the bill offered by Mr. TAYLOR?" I said: "No, sir; I was not present." The question was asked: "Why were you not there; I understand that you were friendly to the bill or to the spirit of the bill, which is in the interest of civil-service reform, preventing the removal of Union soldiers, holding Government positions, before their time expires?" I replied, "I had no notice whatever of the meeting." The question was then asked: "Are you willing that I should make that statement?" I responded: "Yes, sir; entirely willing." Again the question was asked: Would I have voted against that report? To which I replied: "Yes, I should have voted against the report. I believe that all soldiers in the Departments at Washington, occupying subordinate positions, should retain their places and not be removed so long as they continue efficiently to perform the duties to which they are assigned." [Applause on the Republican side.]

That, Mr. Speaker, is substantially what took place between us. I will say here, however, in justice to the chairman of the committee, that I do not think he intended to keep the notice from me. If I had received the notice I should have been present at the meeting.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question, whether it is not the fact that that was the regular meeting day of the committee?

Mr. MILLARD. I do not understand that it is. It was not the usual day on which meetings were held, not the regular meeting day of the committee.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Well, the chairman of the committee says it was.

Mr. BINGHAM. Saturday is ordinarily the day on which the committee meets; but it is not the regular meeting day unless members are notified.

Mr. MILLARD. The first meeting called was that at which the subcommittee was appointed, and then the last meeting was the meeting held when this report was presented.

Mr. HORR. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STOCKSLAGER] claim that this meeting was not called specially by the gentleman from New York for this purpose?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I do not know anything about that. I asked the chairman of the committee a moment ago if that was the regular day of meeting, and he said it was.

Mr. MILLARD. But it was not.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. If it was, it was the gentleman's duty to be there.

Mr. HORR. Has the committee been having regular meetings?

Mr. MUTCHLER. No, sir.

Mr. HORR. Was this meeting called at the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MUTCHLER. The first meeting was called at the request of the gentleman from New York and the author of the bill.

Mr. HORR. When?

Mr. MUTCHLER. Last Thursday a week ago. The bill went into the hands of a subcommittee, and on last Thursday the entire committee was notified of a meeting on Saturday.

Mr. MILLARD. Sir, this was an important matter, and strictly in the interest of civil service reform—a bill that should have been considered by the full committee. It was not so considered, and the adverse report does not reflect the unanimous judgment of the committee. I do not claim that because a man happens to be a Union soldier he is entitled to an office or to be continued in the service of the Government if found to be unqualified for the position, but I do claim that the men who fought the battles of their common country and endured the hardships of camp and field ought not to be removed without cause before the expiration of the term for which they were appointed.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that no question of personal privilege is pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. RANDALL. I now call up the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That each morning during the remainder of this session, immediately after the approval of the Journal, there shall be set apart thirty minutes for motions to take up and consider such bills or resolutions on any of the Calendars of the House, or on the Speaker's table, or bills favorably reported from the Calendars undisposed of, as the member making the motion may designate. And the bills or resolutions so designated shall be immediately considered, unless objected to by at least five members. But no bill or resolution taken up for consideration under this order shall be debated for more than ten minutes, which time shall be equally divided between the supporters and the opponents of the measure. If the yeas and nays shall be ordered on any such bill or resolution, or on any proposed amendment thereto, and the call of the roll shall be commenced before the expiration of the said thirty minutes, the same shall be completed before the regular order of business is entered upon: Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RANDALL. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] calling up the report has the floor and will state his motion. The Chair will thereafter hear the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now hear the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WELLER. I desired to make the parliamentary inquiry at a time when it would be of some advantage to me. I desired to inquire if it would be proper to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was not in the power of the gentleman to do that when the gentleman from Pennsylvania had the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing the House shall know what the gentleman from Iowa desires; and if the House wishes to adopt his view, then it can vote down the call for the previous question.

Mr. WELLER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania consent or can I have unanimous consent to present and have considered pending the amendment which I send to the desk?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks consent to have his amendment read for information.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman who is in charge of this report. At the time this report was made there was some understanding that there were to be two propositions voted upon, one to strike out "five" and insert "ten," and another to strike out "thirty minutes" and insert "one hour."

Mr. RANDALL. I was not present at the meeting of the Committee on Rules when this report was adopted; but if that be a fact, I, of course, will conform my conduct to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair, having had charge of the report now in the hands of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, will state that in the absence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania the agreement stated by the gentleman from Ohio was reached.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I adhere to it in letter and in spirit.

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman then allow these amendments to be included in the operation of the previous question—first to strike out "five" and insert "ten," and then to strike out "thirty minutes" and insert "one hour?"

Mr. RANDALL. Whatever was the agreement I will conform to.

Mr. KEIFER. I am suggesting that the gentleman should demand the previous question subject to those two amendments being admitted as pending.

Mr. RANDALL. I modify my demand for the previous question in accordance with the agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks the previous question on the adoption of the report subject to the two amendments which have been stated by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to make a statement.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not believe this resolution will meet the approbation of the House, even though amended as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, unless there be some proposition made or adopted as to designating the members who shall have the privilege of offering these bills. There are various ways in which that can be done. You can call the roll alphabetically or you can adopt what I think is a better method. I think the only fair mode of amending the rule so as to work off business in the remainder of this session is to allow the names of the members to be placed in a box, and in half an hour or an hour a page can draw the names out as we draw for seats; and then let the Chair designate the members, in the order in which their names have been drawn, to offer their bills. No harm can be done by that method; no blame can attach to any one. There can be no charge of favoritism attached to anybody.

Mr. CASSIDY. Might not a lucky man have his name drawn twice?

Mr. COX, of New York. I have guarded against that. When a name is once drawn it shall not be placed in the box again till the whole list is completed. I ask to have my amendment read.

Mr. KEIFER. This is simply a proposition to be read for information, not to be considered as pending.

Mr. WELLER. I desire the same favor to be granted to me to have my proposition read for information.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will be read for information.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to inquire whether we are proceeding under the regular rules of the House applicable to the first Monday in the month or not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that proceeding is being had under the order of the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] was recognized, and yielded the floor upon unanimous consent being given him that, after the bill called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] should have been disposed of, the floor should be restored to him for the purpose of calling up this privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which has been done.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to inquire further, whether it requires unanimous consent that this proceeding shall occupy this Monday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. HERBERT. Has the House made an order on the subject?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has made the order, and it is now proceeding to execute it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the amendment that I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read, for the information of the House, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the names of the members of this House shall be placed in a box and shall be drawn therefrom as provided in Rule XXXII for the drawing of seats; and the member to be designated to make the motion herein provided for shall, if present, be designated by the said drawing, and any name once drawn is not to be again returned to the box until the list of members therein is exhausted.

Mr. WELLER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the amendment that I have presented read.

Mr. STEELE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made to the reading of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Wr. WELLER.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks the pervious question on the adoption of this report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] yield to me for a moment to offer an amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say, with reference to the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], that the Committee on Rules recognized the fact that these recognitions are always within the absolute and exclusive control of the Speaker of the House, and it was not deemed necessary to interrupt that privilege that he has, because the committee believed that he was in a relation to the House whereby he could more equitably execute such an order than could be done by a resort to chance.

Mr. COX, of New York. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I beg to say that my proposition implies no reflection whatever upon the Speaker. [Calls of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. This debate is proceeding simply by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] demands the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw that demand for a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether he withdraws his demand for the previous question?

Mr. RANDALL. I should lose the floor in that way.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not at all.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to yield for the gentleman's proposition to be read for the information of the House, so that if the House prefers to adopt it the demand for the previous question can be voted down.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I offer an amendment which I ask to have read.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I shall object to the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] unless the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER] is allowed to be read also.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is on the floor demanding the previous question has he not the power to yield the floor to another member?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. While the demand for the previous question is pending no other proceeding can be had except by unanimous consent. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know at what time I may make a motion to recommit this report with instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may make that motion either before or after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I make it now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is in order at this time.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX, of New York. I want to ask the Chair whether the previous question will not cut off my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair most certainly thinks that it will.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I was not trying to debate, but simply to state my proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the gentleman's proposition. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], pending the demand for the previous question, moves to recommit this report to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My motion is now in the hands of the Clerk and I ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit the report to the Committee on Rules, with instructions that the said committee shall report it back with the following amendment:

"It shall be in order, immediately after reading the Journal, to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bills with Senate amendments which amendments under the rules of the House require consideration in that committee."

Mr. WELLER. I desire to know if the motion which is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to amend so as to instruct the committee to strike out the words contained in the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and insert my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Such is the confusion in the Hall that the Chair can not hear the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] offered no amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. Then I move to amend the instructions by striking out his proposition and inserting mine.

Mr. WELLER. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa has a right to move a substitute.

Mr. WELLER. Then I move as a substitute what I send to the desk, and I ask that it be read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point of order that the motion to recommit with instructions is not amendable.

Mr. KEIFER. It is not, under Rule XVII.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the rule be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. At the request of the gentleman from Illinois a portion of Rule XVII will be read, after which the Clerk will read a ruling made on this subject by the permanent Speaker of the House.

The Clerk read as follows.

It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read from the Journal of June 12, 1884, the ruling of the permanent Speaker of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CALKINS made the point of order that the said motion of Mr. WHITE to commit with instructions was not amendable.

The SPEAKER held the motion to be amendable for the reason that, being a special rule permitting a motion to commit with or without instructions pending the demand for or after the previous question was ordered, the said motion to commit was subject to amendment, as provided by the rules of the House; and amendments could only be precluded by ordering the previous question on the motion to commit.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he can apply the previous question to the motions pending, which are his own motion, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER]. Upon these pending motions the gentleman from Illinois asks the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is upon the substitute of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER].

Mr. WELLER. I ask that it be read for the information of the House. It has not yet been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to come in after the word "designate," at the end of the fifth line, as appears in RECORD, page 1057:

"The order for recognition by the Speaker shall be the same as in a call for a yea-and-nay vote in the House; and no member shall be recognized for the second time, or bill or resolution allowed to be presented for the second time under this resolution, until the entire roll has been called in the order named, and each member thus permitted recognition; and no other recognition for unanimous consent to consider for passage any bill or resolution shall be entertained while this rule thus amended is in force."

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. This, I understand, is an amendment to the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To the motion of the gentleman from Illinois the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] offered an amendment; and the gentleman from Iowa now offers the substitute which the Clerk has read.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, it is not germane to the proposition of my colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is admissible under the rules. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The substitute was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 7619) to release the reversionary right of the Government of the United States to certain lands in the city of Detroit and State of Michigan;

An act (H. R. 1565) to authorize the appointment of a commission by the President of the United States to run and mark the boundary lines between a portion of the Indian Territory and the State of Texas in connection with a similar commission to be appointed by the State of Texas; and

An act (H. R. 181) to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize suits for damages where death results from the wrongful act or neglect of any person or corporation in the District of Columbia, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of Senate Mr. HARRIS, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. RIDDLEBERGER.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1884, for distribution by said Superintendent.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Several MEMBERS. We object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. COX, of New York. I will amend my proposition by inserting "to report back within three days."

Several members objected.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to ask if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York is an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is a substitute for it.

Mr. DINGLEY. If it be an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, then I should like to have the amendment read as it will be if amended.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No; his proposition is a substitute for mine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to understand, as my colleague tried to ascertain, whether this proposition of the gentleman from New York is an amendment to or a substitute for the proposition offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and whether if the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois prevails the effect of it will be to bring the Mexican pension bill before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not called upon to answer. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, in the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is the intention.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is the intention, unquestionably.

Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to another question: Whether the amendment of the gentleman from New York is germane to that of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has so ruled and it has been admitted before the House.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. COX, of New York.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 104.

Mr. HENLEY, Mr. SUMNER of California, and Mr. GEORGE D. WISE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. It is utterly impossible to hear what is going on in the House. Gentlemen will resume their seats, and the Chair will recognize nobody until order has been restored in the House.

Mr. WELLER. I ask the Chair to recognize me for a parliamentary inquiry when order has been restored.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky has been recognized, but the Chair will hear nobody until the members resume their seats and order is restored.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, in the confusion which has prevailed on the floor of the House it is next to impossible for us to hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMPSON. The parliamentary inquiry I desire to make is this: Whether or not the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is to strike out the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and is a substitute for it.

Mr. COX, of New York. That is it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Or is it to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That same parliamentary inquiry has been made and answered more than once, and the Chair will not undertake to answer further.

Mr. THOMPSON. But, Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what the Chair says, or anybody else for that matter, in the confusion which prevails on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is satisfied that the House has not failed to hear. The Journal shows that the gentleman from New York offered his amendment in the nature of a substitute for that offered by the gentleman from Illinois. Of course, the Chair assumes every gentleman on the floor knows what the effect of the adoption of the amendment as a substitute now pending will be. It is offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. The previous question has been called, and the House has ordered the yeas and nays to be called, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. THOMPSON. May I ask a further parliamentary inquiry: Whether if the amendment of the gentleman from New York is adopted by the House will any vote be had on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There will, under the rule, be a vote on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is, if the amendment is adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; if the amendment should prevail. The Clerk will now proceed to call the roll on the amendment in the nature of a substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX.]

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 129, nays 124, not voting 70; as follows:

So the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. BEACH. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. RANDALL. I must object; because there have been a great number of changes and gentlemen had better see whether or not they are properly recorded.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. FUNSTON with Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin, for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the motion to recommit the report to the Committee on Rules as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from New York just adopted.

The question was taken, but before the announcement of the result of the vote Mr. COX, of New York, said: I beg pardon of the Chair, but I think the House does not exactly understand the motion on which it is called to vote.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes, they do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion has been already stated as plainly as the Chair can state it.

The question is on the motion to recommit the report to the Committee on Rules as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 143.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask for a vote on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the previous question is voted down, will it be in order to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that but a motion to recommit, with or without instructions, is in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Chair did not understand my question. I ask if the demand for the previous question—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has a right to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will not state it unless gentlemen cease crying "Vote! vote!"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to know if the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania shall be voted down—if the previous question is not ordered—whether it will be in order to offer an amendment to this report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that in that event the report will certainly be open for amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are two amendments already pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question subject to the two amendments proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107.

Before the negative vote was announced,

Mr. TOWNSHEND said: I call for the yeas and nays

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 35 members only voting therefor—not being one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 129.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 192, nays 68, not voting 63; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. WELLER and Mr. MOULTON objected.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. BURLEIGH, on all questions, for this day.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, for the remainder of this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Ohio, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. KEIFER. The first vote is on the amendment changing the time for the consideration of such measures as may be called up from thirty minutes to one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 of the resolution, strike out the words "thirty minutes" and insert "one hour;" so that it will read:

"Resolved, That each morning during the remainder of this session, immediately after the approval of the Journal, there shall be set apart one hour for motions to take up," &c.

Mr. WELLER. Would it be proper to move an amendment to that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not be in order, the previous question having been ordered by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman upon the opposite side who offers this amendment wishes to be heard in support of it I shall desire to say a few words in opposition.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman desires to debate it, for myself I have no objection; but I suppose no debate is in order as the previous question is now operating.

Mr. THOMPSON. I make the point of order that debate is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I only wanted to say that if gentlemen on the other side desired to advocate the proposition I wanted the same length of time in opposition to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that debate is not in order.

Mr. KEIFER. There seems to be some misapprehension among gentlemen as to the effect of this amendment. This does not extend the time for debate on any proposition called up under this resolution, but simply extends the time in which such measures may be entertained from thirty minutes to one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been read.

The question was taken; the House divided; and there were—ayes 136, noes 57.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 40 members voting therefor—being more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 175, nays 77, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—175.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The names of members voting were read.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. PHELPS, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, with Mr. FUNSTON, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE with Mr. MORGAN, on this vote. If present, Mr. VAN ALSTYNE would vote "no" and Mr. MORGAN would vote "ay."

Mr. HOLMAN with Mr. RYAN, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. KEIFER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I now ask for a vote on my amendment, to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "ten" where the resolution mentions the number of members who are to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], which will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "five" and insert the word "ten;" making it read: "Unless objected to by at least ten members."

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and I do it for the purpose——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

Mr. COLLINS. On that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 74, noes 109.

Mr. MOULTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 53 members voting therefor.

Mr. HAMMOND. Before the Clerk proceeds to call the roll I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. If the House shall now adjourn, will not the resolution for the amendment of the rules be in order to-morrow morning as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the previous question has been applied to the resolution by order of the House; and, in the judgment of the Chair, this report would come up as unfinished business to-morrow after the reading of the Journal and before the morning hour.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 157, not voting 65; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. MOULTON and others objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the names of gentlemen who have voted.

Mr. MOULTON. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. WELLER. I object.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent was asked that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But objection was made.

Mr. GIBSON. The objection was withdrawn by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MOULTON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has been made also by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER]. The Clerk will report the names.

The Clerk read the names of members voting.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. MOULTON. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MOULTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 74, noes 89.

Mr. MOULTON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BEACH. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. HAMMOND. I object.

The Clerk read the names of members voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. BREITUNG, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. KELLEY, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. BROADHEAD with Mr. CANNON, for the remainder of the day

Mr. GIBSON with Mr. WAIT, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. GLASCOCK with Mr. JONES of Texas.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MOULTON. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. COLLINS. I make the point of order that that motion has been already voted down.

Mr. MOULTON. But other business has intervened.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that a motion to adjourn is "other business" within the meaning of the rule. The Chair therefore thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. COLLINS. I move that the House do now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] moves that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow. Pending that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] moves that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next. The latter motion takes precedence.

Mr. GIBSON. I offer an amendment, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet this evening at 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must inform the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] that his motion is not in order under the rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to inquire whether there is any filibustering on that side of the House? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that it is called upon to answer that question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Perhaps some other gentleman on that side of the House might volunteer the information.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HAMMOND, that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I move that the House do now adjourn.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] moves that the House do now adjourn. Pending that motion the Chair asks the consent of the House to submit the following messages from the President of the United States.

There was no objection.

APPEAL OF FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of January 28, 1885, "that the President be respectfully requested to transmit to this House a copy of the recent appeal of Fitz-John Porter, together with the accompanying papers," I transmit herewith a copy of a communication from Fitz-John Porter, addressed to the President, from Morristown, N. J., under date of October 14, 1884, together with copies of the accompanying papers.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 2, 1885.

REPORT OF NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on the Public Health, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, the report of the National Board of Health for the year 1884.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 2, 1885.

SURVEYS OF RIVERS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of a preliminary examination of Puyallup River, Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Chief of Engineers of a preliminary examination of Lewis River, Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of a preliminary examination of Willahpah River, Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for the rest of the day, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MURRAY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw papers in the case of Abram S. Galbraith.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that the House adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House should vote down the motion to adjourn will the next question be upon the motion for a recess? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be determined when the House shall have disposed of the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, that the House adjourn, there were—ayes 82, noes 88.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 53 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 69, nays 104, not voting 150; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, on this vote.

Mr. WARD with Mr. O'FERRALL, on this vote.

The following were announced as paired for the remainder of the day:

Mr. STEELE with Mr. HUNT.

Mr. WORTHINGTON with Mr. SHIVELY.

Mr. DIBRELL with Mr. LYMAN.

Mr. VANCE with Mr. SMALLS.

Mr. HANBACK with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. BLANCHARD with Mr. LACEY.

Mr. RICE with Mr. STOCKSLAGER.

Mr. OATES with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. LEWIS with Mr. HENLEY.

Mr. SWOPE with Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey.

Mr. HOBLITZELL with Mr. STRUBLE.

Mr. PERKINS with Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, with Mr. WINANS, of Michigan.

Mr. GEORGE with Mr. LANHAM.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. ROCKWELL with Mr. DOCKERY.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. CLARDY.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. COLLINS. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that has been voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is not well taken. A motion was made that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next. That was voted down and a motion to adjourn was rejected, but a motion was interposed that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Thursday next, which was disposed of, when the motion to adjourn was again in order. That motion to adjourn until Thursday next constituting business within the meaning of the rule, the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order.

Mr. COLLINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLLINS. If a motion be made to adjourn and it be voted down, is it in order to make identically the same motion immediately thereafter?

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I rise to object. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. COLLINS. If a motion be made that when the House adjourns it adjourn to a day certain, and that be voted down, can it be renewed as many times as the House pleases, no other motion to adjourn intervening?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It may be renewed at the pleasure of any member of the House, provided business has been transacted by the House. The Chair held a moment ago it could not be renewed when nothing had transpired except a vote by yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn, because there is an unbroken chain of precedents declaring a motion to adjourn does not, in contemplation of the rule, constitute intervening business; but a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn does constitute intervening business, and the gentleman from Missouri is therefore in order, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. HISCOCK. I take the floor, Mr. Speaker, to ask whether——[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. RANDALL. I take exception to the statement there has been an unbroken precedent in that direction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not mean to say there have not been rulings in other directions, but the Chair can not remember any Speaker who has presided over any House of Representatives, since he has been a member, that has not ruled in accordance with the ruling of the Chair now. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 22.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 63.

Mr. COLLINS demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is this filibustering?

The House divided; and there were ayes 43.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair there is a sufficient number to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Count the other side.

The other side was counted; and there were noes 58.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he thinks it is possible to accomplish anything here to-night. If not, why then should we be compelled to stay here?

Mr. COLLINS. All things are possible in a sensible assembly.

Mr. HISCOCK. You know we can not accomplish anything if we stay here until midnight.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts if he is a sensible man he will vote to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeasan d nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 84, not voting 174; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. COBB and Mr. WELLER objected.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, on this vote.

The following gentlemen were announced as being paired for the remainder of the day:

Mr. KING with Mr. LACEY.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. PAIGE.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, with Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MCCOMAS with Mr. MULDROW.

Mr. REED, of Maine, with Mr. HEMPHILL.

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. ANDERSON.

Mr. TULLY with Mr. CONNOLLY.

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. LONG, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that this House do now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I made the point of order that no quorum had voted. [Cries of "Regular order."]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not been able to hear the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I made the point that no quorum had voted.

The Chair has announced the pending motion to be the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the House take a recess. I submitted a motion to the House that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Wednesday next. Pending that the gentleman from Georgia made his motion that the House adjourn; which vote has just been taken, and on which no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the gentleman make the point of order that no quorum had voted.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that I did make it in the hearing of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair accepts, of course, the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, but the point was waived by the subsequent motion of the gentleman from Georgia, to wit, that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. My motion was that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that there has been a motion for a call of the House, and pending that the motion was made to adjourn. Would not the motion recur on the question of a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no information that a motion for a call of the House was made.

The Chair will state again that the point of no quorum was not heard by the Chair when made by the gentleman from Missouri. The Chair, however, regards the point as having been waived and yielded by the gentleman when the motion of the gentleman from Georgia was made that the House do now adjourn. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri to make the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Less than a quorum can adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not intimated or ruled that that question was not in order in the absence of a quorum. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Missouri to make the point of order. The Journal shows that the last vote was taken upon a motion to adjourn, which motion was made pending a motion that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Wednesday next. The Chair will state that that motion would not now be in order.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Then I make the motion now, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize that motion as being in order.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to ask a parliamentary question. If this means to promote the delay of business, or if it means to promote the business of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think the gentleman submits a parliamentary inquiry. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that the House do now take a recess, and pending that motion the gentleman from Missouri moves that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next at 12 o'clock.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 32, noes 67.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, and Mr. BEACH. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, and Mr. COLLINS were appointed tellers.

Mr. BLAND. Pending the vote by tellers, I move that the House do now adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ELLIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELLIS. Was not the last yea-and-nay vote on a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will answer the gentleman that the last yea-and-nay vote was taken upon a motion to adjourn.

Mr. ELLIS. I make the point of order that no intervening business has been transacted by the House which will warrant the repetition of the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state that in the mean time, since that motion was submitted to the House, what is recognized as intervening business under the rules of the House has taken place.

Mr. ELLIS. What business has taken place?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A vote vive voce on a motion that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Thursday next and after that a division on the same motion.

Mr. ELLIS. But that has determined nothing. We are now endeavoring to ascertain whether we can do anything by the presence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must overrule the question of order.

The question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 61.

Mr. ELLIS and Mr. COLLINS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 63, nays 71, not voting 189; as follows:

YEAS—63.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. JOHNSON with Mr. HOWEY, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, with Mr. DINGLEY, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas, with Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, with Mr. STONE, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, with Mr. HITT, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. FORNEY with Mr. RYAN, for the remainder of the day.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before announcing the result of the vote just taken the Chair will submit the following personal requests:

The Clerk read the request of Mr. WEAVER for leave of absence on account of sickness; and

The request of Mr. ANDERSON to be excused from attendance during the remainder of this day's session on account of important business.

Mr. PRICE. I object to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] being excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask if there is any objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER].

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced as above stated.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending motion is that of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the House adjourn immediately.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GUENTHER. And upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will allow the gentleman from Illinois to state his request for unanimous consent, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to state his question of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. At 1 o'clock to-day, at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], I gave way that the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules might be brought up. I now want to have the rules suspended and a very little bill passed for the benefit of my constituents.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I knew some crank would object to this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the right of the gentleman from Kentucky to interpose an objection.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask that the words of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] be taken down.

Mr. SPRINGER. I take them back.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I insist that they shall be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any member of the House has the right to withdraw words used in debate.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. He has not the right to uselanguage unbecoming a gentleman on this floor, and then skulk to his corner and withdraw them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided that the gentleman had a right to withdraw the language objected to.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I insist that the words shall be taken down, or that, as a dog, he shall withdraw them in the presence of the House.

Mr. RYAN. Those words should be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is not in order. The gentleman from Illinois has a right to withdraw the words, and has withdrawn them. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next; and on that question the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 23—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Count the other side.

The negative vote being counted, there were noes 73.

Mr. CLARDY. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. DUNHAM. Pending the demand for tellers, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 71, noes 65.

Mr. COLLINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered—49 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 66, nays 75, not voting 182; as follows:

Mr. ALEXANDER with Mr. MILLARD.

Mr. LOWRY, with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. MAYBURY, with Mr. WINANS, of Michigan.

Mr. WOODWARD with Mr. PRICE.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. COLLINS. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and I move a call of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order (under paragraph 2 of Rule XVII) that a motion for a call of the House is not in order unless the Speaker has counted the members present and ascertained the fact for himself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has announced the vote, which shows the number of members present. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 58, noes 44.

Mr. COLLINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 62, nays 65, not voting 196; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. ALEXANDER with Mr. JEFFORDS, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. BARKSDALE, upon all questions in relation to adjournment.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. WEAVER, for the remainder of the day.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FIEDLER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the remainder of this day on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS], who moves a call of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. We are operating under the previous question; and it will be necessary for the Speaker, before entertaining the motion for a call of the House, to make a count of the House himself, under paragraph 2 of Rule XVII.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the rule to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] refers, but begs the House to note that there has been on a call of the yeas and nays a vote of 62 to 65, showing by the best evidence the House may have that a quorum is not present. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] moves a call of the House; and in view of the report made by the Clerk on the call of the yeas and nays the Chair holds the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to be in order and submits it to the House.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COLLINS for a call of the House, there were—ayes 68, noes 52.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, Mr. BLOUNT, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 46 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. NEECE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BENNETT. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask the Speaker to direct the enforcement of the rule which forbids smoking on the floor of the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is well taken, and the Speaker requests the Sergeant-at-Arms to see that the rule of the House is enforced and obeyed.

Mr. MOULTON. I hope the Committee on Ventilation will give us a little more fresh air. [Laughter].

The SPEAKER pro tempore proceeded to take the question on the motion of Mr. NEECE, and announced 53 votes in the affirmative.

Mr. COLLINS (before the negative vote was announced). I raise the question of order whether the motion to adjourn is now in order. The last motion which was acted on by the House was a motion to adjourn, and no business has intervened since that time. [Cries of "Too late!"] No; it is not too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the question recurred upon his motion for a call of the House——

Mr. COLLINS. But no action was taken upon that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division was had, and the yeas and nays were ordered; which, in the judgment of the Chair, constitutes intervening business. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I think, if the Chair will remember, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] rose and demanded a call of the House. Upon that the vote was taken, and the motion prevailed. Just at that juncture the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] rose to a question of privilege. I now make the point of order that when the House had ordered a call of the House a motion to adjourn was not then in order, but it was only in order to execute the call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the shortest way to express its opinion, the Chair will ask the Clerk to read what it is hoped will be sufficient to inform the House upon the point of order on which the gentleman from Kentucky seems disposed to insist.

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion to adjourn may be repeated, although no question has been put or decided since the former motion—Journal 1, 23, page 651—but there must have been some intervening business.—Ibid., 1, 31, 1092. [Another motion submitted, progress in debate, or reading a paper by the Clerk, an order to the yeas and nays, &c., has been considered such "intervening business" as will authorize the repetition of the motion to adjoin].

Mr. ELLIS. Is that a rule of the House or a ruling of some preceding Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is the ruling of Speakers of the House.

Mr. ELLIS. It is not a rule of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not a rule of the House. The Chair overrules the point of order. On the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to adjourn the ayes are 53, the noes 57.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 38 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 66, not voting 193; as follows:

Ryan,	Sumner, D. H.	Ward,

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call,

Mr. LORE. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, objected.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Speaker's desk:

Mr. CONNOLLY with Mr. TULLY, for the balance of the day.

Mr. COBB with Mr. SUMNER, of California, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] for a call of the House, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Chair begs leave to submit some personal requests of members before the roll is called.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. BEACH, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. NICHOLLS, for one day, on account of sickness in his family.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 72, nays 57, not voting 194; as follows:

So the House ordered there be a call of the House.

During the call of the roll Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey, moved to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. STORM objected, but afterward withdrew his objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I move to reconsider the vote ordering a call of the House.

Mr. COLLINS. I move that motion be laid upon the table.

Mr. HARDEMAN. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. I make the point that it is not in order to receive the motion to adjourn while the House is voting to complete the question to which we agreed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The Chair overrules the point of order under the precedents which have been established.

Mr. COLLINS. I rise to a point of order. How could I be taken off the floor when I made the motion to lay upon the table and still occupied the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's motion to lay upon the table took him off the floor. The motion to lay upon the table is not debatable.

The question recurred on the motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 54.

Mr. BLAND demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 57, nays 74, not voting 192; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

On motion of Mr. NUTTING, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. GREEN with Mr. BEACH, for the remainder of this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. ELLIS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). The question recurs upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, which is to lay upon the table the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered a call of the House.

Mr. HARDEMAN and Mr. BLAND demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BLAND. Pending that, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COLLINS. I raise the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The motion is in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call the attention of the Chair to the language of Rule XVIII, where it is laid down that—

> Where a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report, a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, or to take a recess, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and therefore any member may call it up for consideration: Provided, That such motion, if made during the last six days of a session, shall be disposed of when made.

Now, I make this point: that the gentleman from Massachusetts moved to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider which was entered by some gentleman on the other side, I do not now remember by whom.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. And thereupon the motion was made that the House adjourn. That motion has been made and lost; and I insist, Mr. Speaker, with all due deference to the expression of the Chair a moment ago, that under this rule the gentleman from Massachusetts has a right to demand a vote on the motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky on the point of order, the Chair will cause for the second or third time to-day to be read the only answer he proposes to submit, showing that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order. The Clerk will read from the Digest of the House on this very subject, showing the uniform decisions made heretofore.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A motion to adjourn may be repeated, although no question has been put or decided since the former motion—Journal 1, 23, page 657—but there must have been some intervening business. [Another motion submitted, progress in debate, or reading a paper by the Clerk, an order for the yeas and nays, &c., has been considered such intervening business as will authorize the repetition of the motion to adjourn.] * * * Where less than a quorum is present a motion to take a recess is not in order; and no motion is in order except for a call or to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair entertains the appeal of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I believe that I have some rights in regard to that appeal. I would like to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The appeal is debatable in the pleasure of the Chair; and it is the pleasure of the Chair to hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is already one question of order pending.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire simply to raise a question of order that the appeal is not debatable when there is a pending previous question. The previous question has been ordered and there is no debate in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is correct.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. On what is the previous question pending?

Mr. KEIFER. On the report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLAND. I move to lay the appeal on the table; and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I should like to have the indulgence of the House for a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be glad to give the gentleman an opportunity of being heard, if it is the wish of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will withdraw the appeal if I can not be heard upon it. If the rules of the House are so iron-clad that I can not be heard upon it, I withdraw the appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The appeal being withdrawn, the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 56, noes 74.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 73, not voting 190; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. CRISP with Mr. BARKSDALE, for the balance of the day, on questions of adjournment.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before announcing the result of the vote just taken the Chair asks permission to submit to the House a personal request. Mr. SINGLETON asks to be excused from further attendance at this session, on account of feeble health.

There was no objection.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced as above stated.

So the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MILLARD, by unanimous consent the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. BOYLE, for the remainder of the day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before announcing the result of the vote the Chair asks consent of the House to submit a personal request.

The Clerk read the request of Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, for leave of absence for the remainder of the day.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I object. We are trying to get a quorum here now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the Chair will submit the request to a vote of the House.

The question being taken on agreeing to the request of Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, it was decided in the negative.

The result of the vote on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of the House is now ordered, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I desire to be heard upon that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not desire to hear any argument upon it. The House has ordered by a yea-and-nay vote that its roll shall be called, and a motion to reconsider that vote has by a yea-and-nay vote been laid on the table. The motion to adjourn has been entertained and rejected.

Mr. HARDEMAN. There has been intervening business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House by a yea-and-nay vote has ordered that the roll shall be called.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asks the consent of the House to submit certain personal requests of members. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Is there objection to the submission of the requests? [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. COLLINS. I offer a resolution which I ask to have read.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order, Mr. Speaker!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution is not in order at this time. The Chair will announce the result of the vote. Upon this call 151 gentlemen have answered to their names.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to send for absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will execute the rule.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will execute the rule if gentlemen will permit. The Doorkeeper is directed to close the doors.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order now. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the proper time. The Clerk will now call the names of members who have not answered, and as the names are read excuses will be in order.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain that motion at the proper time, but it is not now in order. The call is not concluded. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will proceed to call the names of absentees. As the names are called excuses will be in order.

The Clerk proceeded to call the names of members who had not answered, as follows:

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois: No excuse offered.
Mr. AIKEN: No excuse offered.
Mr. ALEXANDER: No excuse offered.
Mr. ANDERSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana: No excuse offered.
Mr. BRUMM: No excuse offered.
Mr. BUCKNER: No excuse offered.
Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York: No excuse offered.
Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania: No excuse offered.
Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CAMPBELL, has been called home to Ohio by sickness in his family, and I move that he be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] will be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON: No excuse offered.
Mr. CLAY: Absent with leave.
Mr. COOK.

Mr. WELLER. My colleague, Mr. COOK, is absent by leave of the House, on account of important business in Iowa, and I ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the time for which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COOK] was granted leave of absence has expired; but his colleague [Mr. WELLER] asks that he be excused. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the gentleman is not excused.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that my colleague, Mr. COOK, be excused.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 37, noes 16.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum voting. [Laughter].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Iowa that under the rules a quorum is not required. The ayes have it, and the motion to excuse the gentleman's colleague [Mr. COOK] is agreed to.

Mr. COVINGTON: No excuse offered.
Mr. COX, of New York: No excuse offered.
Mr. CRISP: No excuse offered.
Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas: No excuse offered.
Mr. CULBERTSON, of Kentucky: No excuse offered.
Mr. CULLEN: No excuse offered.
Mr. CURTIN.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with Mr. CURTIN, and he requested me this evening to state, in the event of a call of the House, that he was not feeling well, and to ask that he be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection. the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] will be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. DARGAN: No excuse offered.
Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri: Absent on leave.
Mr. DIBRELL.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. DIBRELL be excused. He is unwell and unable to be here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DIBRELL] will be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. DUNN: Absent on leave.

Mr. FINERTY: No excuse offered.
Mr. FUNSTON: No excuse offered.
Mr. FYAN: Absent on leave.
Mr. GARRISON: Absent on leave.
Mr. GEDDES.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to state that the health of my colleague, Judge GEDDES, is very delicate, and I therefore move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE: No excuse offered.
Mr. GIBSON: No excuse offered.
Mr. GLASCOCK.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the gentleman from California [Mr. GLASCOCK] be excused on account of serious illness in his family.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN: No excuse offered.
Mr. HAMMOND: No excuse offered.
Mr. HANCOCK.

Mr. WELLBORN. My colleague, Mr. HANCOCK, is suffering from a very sore foot, and it is a matter of difficulty for him to get out. On account of this indisposition I move that he be excused.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order at this time to move that the Congress adjourn sine die to get out of the malaria of Washington?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair could hardly hold that motion to be in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN] that his colleague be excused for the reason assigned.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARMER: No excuse offered.
Mr. HART: No excuse offered.
Mr. HATCH, of Michigan: No excuse offered.
Mr. HAYNES: No excuse offered.
Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa: No excuse offered.
Mr. HENLEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. HEPBURN: No excuse offered.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama: Absent on leave.
Mr. HISCOCK: No excuse offered.
Mr. HITT: No excuse offered.
Mr. HOBLITZELL: No excuse offered.
Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. COBB. I ask that my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] be excused. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Several MEMBERS. On what ground?

Mr. DUNHAM. Let the gentleman state the reasons for making this request.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I am sure if the gentleman's colleague were here he would object. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COBB, it was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLTON: No excuse offered.
Mr. HOOPER: No excuse offered.
Mr. HOPKINS: No excuse offered.
Mr. HORR: No excuse offered.
Mr. HOUK.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move that my colleague, Mr. HOUK, be excused. His wife is very ill, and he was obliged to be up all last night with her.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 40, noes 8.

Mr. HOWEY.

Mr. KEAN. My colleague, Mr. HOWEY, was called home to New Jersey to-day. I do not know on what account, but evidently on some important business. I move that he be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HURD: No excuse offered.

Mr. HUTCHINS: No excuse offered.

Mr. JOHNSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas: Absent on leave.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama: Absent on leave.

Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that Judge KELLEY be excused.

Mr. KEIFER. His health is not strong.

The motion of Mr. RUSSELL was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG: No excuse offered.

Mr. KETCHAM: No excuse offered.

Mr. KING: No excuse offered.

Mr. LACEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. LAIRD: Absent on leave.

Mr. LAMB: No excuse offered.

Mr. LANHAM: No excuse offered.

Mr. LAWRENCE: No excuse offered.

Mr. LE FEVRE: No excuse offered.

Mr. LEWIS: No excuse offered.

Mr. LIBBEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. LONG: No excuse offered.

Mr. LYMAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCCOMAS: No excuse offered.

Mr. MCCORMICK: Absent on leave.

Mr. MILLER, of Texas.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. I move that my colleague, Mr. MILLER, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania: No excuse offered.

Mr. MILLIKEN: No excuse offered.

Mr. MILLS: No excuse offered.

Mr. MORGAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. MORRILL: No excuse offered.

Mr. MORRISON: No excuse offered.

Mr. MORSE: No excuse offered.

Mr. MULLER: No excuse offered.

Mr. MURPHY: No excuse offered.

Mr. MURRAY: No excuse offered.

Mr. MUTCHLER: No excuse offered.

Mr. NELSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. NICHOLLS: Absent on leave.

Mr. OATES.

Mr. FORNEY. My colleague, Mr. OATES, is sick. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OCHILTREE: No excuse offered.

Mr. PAIGE: No excuse offered.

Mr. PAYSON.

Mr. BREWER, of New York. I move that Mr. PAYSON be excused. He has been confined to his house by sickness for two weeks. He was, to be sure, on the floor to-day, but was compelled to return home. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS: No excuse offered.

Mr. PHELPS: No excuse offered.

Mr. POLAND.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that Mr. POLAND be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. RANKIN is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. ELLIS. Was the name of Mr. PRYOR called?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is marked as present, and the Chair will further say that he is present.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I move, on account of the gentleman's age, that Mr. PRYOR be excused from further attendance during this day's session.

Mr. ELLIS. I hope that will be done.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRYOR. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I answered distinctly when my name was called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And it is so recorded. By order of the House the gentleman has been excused from further attendance at this day's session.

Mr. RAY, of New York: No excuse offered.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire: No excuse offered.

Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move that Mr. REAGAN be excused for his absence from the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICE.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. RICE] is suffering from a bronchial affection, which renders it unsafe for him to trust himself in the night air, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I have in my pocket a letter from the governor of Ohio, stating that JAMES S. ROBINSON had resigned at 11 o'clock on the 12th day of January, 1885, his seat in this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that he has no official information of the gentleman's resignation. Does the gentleman move that he be excused?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then no motion is made and the gentleman is not excused.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York.

Mr. COLLINS. I move that Mr. ROBINSON be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York: No excuse offered.

Mr. ROWELL.

Mr. THOMAS. I move that Mr. ROWELL be excused.

Several MEMBERS. For what reason?

Mr. THOMAS. He is quite unwell.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RYAN: No excuse offered.

Mr. SENEY: No excuse offered.

Mr. SHAW.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think my colleague has an indefinite leave of absence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that no leave has been accorded to his colleague.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move that he be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He has not been present during the session.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY: No excuse offered.

Mr SINGLETON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York: Absent on indefinite leave.

Mr. SLOCUM.

Mr. JAMES. General SLOCUM has been suffering for several weeks from rheumatism, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. A. HERR SMITH: No excuse offered.

Mr. STEELE: No excuse offered.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas: No excuse offered.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER: No excuse offered.

Mr. STONE.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE I ask that Mr. STONE be excused. His health is delicate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STRUBLE: No excuse offered.

Mr. COBB. The temper of the House seems to be better now than it was awhile ago, and I ask if it be in order to move that my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN, be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to renew his motion.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER, of Wisconsin: No excuse offered.

Mr. TALBOTT: No excuse offered.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. NUTTING. I move that Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR be excused on account of ill health.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON: No excuse offered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that my colleague be excused. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] He came to my desk at 5 o'clock this evening and said he was called home on account of sickness in his family. I know there has been serious illness in his family for more than a week.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I am informed that my colleague, Mr. HART, left the Hall some time during the early evening quite unwell, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COBB. Does it take unanimous consent to move to excuse my colleague, Mr. HOLMAN?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion having once been voted down, the Chair knows of no other way except by unanimous consent or a motion to reconsider.

Mr. TUCKER: No excuse offered.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, be excused. He left the Hall at 6 o'clock this evening on account of a severe cold almost threatening pneumonia, and it would be unsafe for him to turn out at this late hour in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr TURNER, of Kentucky.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the gentleman from Kentucky be excused from further attendance on this day's session.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 28.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. VALENTINE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. VANCE.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. VANCE has been quite unwell for two or three days, and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN EATON: No excuse offered.

Mr. WADSWORTH: No excuse offered.

Mr. WAIT.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WAKEFIELD: No excuse offered.

Mr. WARD.

Mr. COBB. I move that he be excused on account of a bad cold.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN: No excuse offered.

Mr. WEAVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. WILKINS: No excuse offered.

Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that he be excused. His wife is sick at the hotel.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINANS, of Michigan: No excuse offered.

Mr. WINANS, of Wisconsin: No excuse offered.

Mr. YAPLE.

Mr. WELLER. I move that he be excused.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 63.

Mr. WELLER demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. YORK.

Mr. BREWER, of New York. I move that Mr. YORK be excused on account of ill health.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOODWARD. I move that my colleague, Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin, be excused. He was called home by illness in his family.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, be excused.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BENNETT, has been in attendance on the House all day. He says he is too ill to remain any longer, and I ask, therefore, that he be excused from further attendance on the House during this day's sitting.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. If it be in order I will move to amend the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina by excusing every member of the House who has been filibustering on that side of the House. I offer that as an amendment—to excuse all members of the House from further attendance to-day who have been engaged in this filibustering proceeding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky of course knows that his motion is not in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I presume I can make it in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What motion does the gentleman offer?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina by adding that we excuse all of the members who are sick of the proceedings on that side of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman is not in order.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to excuse his colleague, Mr. BENNETT.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I move that Mr. SHIVELY be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the call of the roll of absentees.

Mr. YOUNG'S name was called: No excuse offered.

Mr. COBB. I move that my colleague, Mr. STOCKSLAGER, be excused on account of important business. [Laughter.]

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COLLINS. I now renew the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WEMPLE. I move that Mr. EATON, of Connecticut, be excused from further attendance on this day's session of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri as soon as the Clerk has reported the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are now absent without the leave of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 72, noes 46.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. I call for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Too late!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman made the demand too late.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. I made the demand immediately upon the announcement of the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman demand the yeas and nays immediately on the statement of the result of the vote?

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina. I did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUDD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUDD. Has a gentleman whose name is not recorded as being present the right to vote on a question as to whether or not the yeas and nays shall be ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that no gentleman is entitled to vote who is not present as shown by the record.

The yeas and nays have been ordered on the adoption of the resolution which has just been read; and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 69, nays 53, not voting 201; as follows:

YEAS—69.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri. I now renew my motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Pending that motion, I move that the House do now adjourn. It is evidently useless to sit here and go on with these proceedings any longer. If gentlemen are determined to filibuster, of course we can do nothing in the way of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken. Before the announcement of the vote,

Mr. DUNHAM said: Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that members who are now in the lobby, but were not present on the call of the House, be allowed to come in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair). That motion is not now in order while the House is dividing on a motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 52.

Mr. COLLINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 41 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 66, nays 68, not voting 189; as follows:

YEAS—66.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, said. I call the attention of the Chair to the rule which requires members to absent themselves from the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. The rule does not permit members to be about the Clerk's desk during the call of the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I change my vote from "no" to "ay," because I think there is no use of punishing the members any longer. We have excused so many members—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (rapping to order). The gentleman is not in order. The gentleman from Kentucky changes his vote from "no" to "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 49, noes 57.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms is supposed to be in the process of executing the order of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COLLINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLLINS. I wish to inquire whether the motion to adjourn is in order pending the execution of the order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair answers that it is in order.

Mr. COLLINS. I am sorry to hear it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proceeding has intervened of a motion to dispense with all further proceedings under the call. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] is in order.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 57, noes 53.

Mr. COLLINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 44 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 65, nays 66, not voting 192; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana on my right [Mr. STEELE], who is now present, having come in voluntarily, and I ask that he be excused, in order that he and I may vote on the second roll-call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT] is not in order at this time.

Mr. POST. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. POST. I desire to be informed by the Chair whether members who have been reported absent, and who have come in since the doors were ordered closed, have a right to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. POST] the Chair will state that those members have not the right to vote, and the Chair is not aware that any one has been permitted to enter the Hall since the doors were closed under the rule.

Mr. POST. I ask that the proper officer be called upon to report whether any members reported absent on the call of the House have been admitted since the doors were closed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that no member reported as absent when the doors were closed has voted.

Mr. MUTCHLER. Mr. Speaker, I have voted, but, under the decision of the Chair, I withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MUTCHLER] is withdrawn.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, after a member gets into the Hall has he not a right to vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule governing proceedings on a call of the House any gentleman who is absent when the roll is called has not the right to vote, nor the right to enter the Hall except in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. DUNHAM to adjourn was announced as above stated. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will enforce the regular order under the rule.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House, having in custody Mr. ADAMS of Illinois, Mr. HISCOCK, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. TUCKER, Mr. STEELE, and Mr. MUTCHLER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I left the House about 7 o'clock this evening, thinking that it was about to adjourn, and having been previously paired with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLER]. I was not well, so I went to my hotel and went to bed. Hearing a short time ago that a call of the House had been ordered, I came here voluntarily.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move that my colleague [Mr. ADAMS] be excused.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 61, noes 27.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. HISCOCK, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I went to my hotel, thinking that no business was to be transacted here for an hour or two [laughter], returned, and have been in the lobby for some time. I came back voluntarily, not under arrest, and am here ready to respond to all calls of the House.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that my colleague [Mr. HISCOCK] be excused.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 43, noes 29.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. JOHNSON, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I left the House about half past 5, as I was obliged to go out of town. I returned at 11.50, and, seeing a light in the Dome I came at once to the House and have been awaiting orders ever since.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that my colleague, Mr. JOHNSON, be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. TUCKER, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I had an engagement to go to the city of Baltimore this evening. [Laughter.] I went to Baltimore at 6 o'clock and returned at a quarter before 12. I saw a light in the Dome of the Capitol. I rushed to this Hall to represent my constituents, but was excluded from it, and for the first time I have the honor to appear in this position. I trust that it will be the pleasure of the House to excuse me and to admit me to the duties that I desire to perform. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I move that my colleague [Mr. TUCKER] be excused.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] has stated that he left the city for Baltimore. The House was in session at the time. It does not appear that he was excused. He now comes back to the House, and while standing in the area in front of the Speaker violates clause 7 of Rule XIV, which is in this language:

> During the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House.

A MEMBER. He is not smoking.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. As is obvious to the view of every member present the gentleman has a cigar in his hand, in utter disregard of the rules of the House. He has confessed that he left the city without leave. I therefore think he ought to be fined to the full extent of the law.

Mr. TUCKER. So far as the cigar is concerned, it is not lighted; but I have no objection to handing it over to the gentleman from Kentucky. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GEORGE D. WISE] that his colleague [Mr. TUCKER] be excused.

The motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 59, noes 10.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. STEELE, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, after having voted twice in favor of adjournment I paired with the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUNT], and went to my boarding-house. Discovering about half past 11 o'clock that this House was in session I came here voluntarily, and as soon as the Sergeant-at-Arms would admit me I came into the Hall. I ask the House to excuse me.

Mr. LOWRY. I move that my colleague be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. MUTCHLER, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. MUTCHLER. Not a very good one, Mr. Speaker. I was here until 7 o'clock voting on every roll-call. About that time I left the House under the belief that it would soon adjourn. It was near 11 o'clock before I discovered that the House had not adjourned. I then came up here; and finding the doors barred against me I took a seat in the gallery, and witnessed the proceedings of the House with a great deal of dissatisfaction until I was admitted to the floor. I ask to be excused.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that my colleague be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House having in custody, in obedience to its order, Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, and Mr. HOBLITZELL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. RAY, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire. I left here about 6 o'clock, under an engagement that I accepted last week to dine with a friend in the western part of the city. As I passed the Capitol I inquired whether the House had adjourned, and understood it was voting on a motion to adjourn, which would probably be carried. I paired with a gentleman who was voting in favor of adjournment, while I was opposed to it. [Laughter.] I went and dined with my friend, and have been compelled to walk to this Capitol a distance of about two miles. Perhaps if I had mistrusted what was going on here I might have gone in some other direction. But I saw the light, and it rather attracted me here. I have come now to perform my duties for the remainder of the day.

Mr. COSGROVE. As the gentleman was seeking "light," I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 41, noes 11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. HOBLITZELL, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. HOBLITZELL. Mr. Speaker, I left the Hall about 6 o'clock, after voting twice to adjourn. I have been very much indisposed for three weeks. I left here sick to get my dinner. After dining I went to my room, where I have been ever since until notified that I was wanted here. I am sick now; and I ask to be excused.

Mr. FINDLAY. I move that my colleague be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLAND, there were—ayes 70, noes 57.

Mr. COLLINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MATSON. Pending that, I move that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MATSON, there were—ayes 70, noes 58.

Mr. COLLINS, Mr. DORSHEIMER, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 41 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 67, not voting 183; as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 3, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented the credentials of William M. Evarts, chosen by the Legislature of New York a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1885; which were read.

Mr. HOAR. I ask permission to say, having had occasion to examine the subject as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that in my judgment a certificate from the executive, the proper certificate officer of a State, saying simply that A B on a certain day was duly elected a Senator of the United States from that State for the term mentioned is a sufficient credential under the usages of the Senate and the laws of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that this paper contains no certificate from the governor whatever, as required by the act of Congress. The paper will be placed on file, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the paper be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That order will be entered, if there be no objection.

THIRD INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS CONFERENCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith to the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, submitting, at the request of a delegate from the United States to the third international conference of the Red Cross, held in September, 1884, a copy of the preliminary report of that conference.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 2, 1885.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, the report of the National Board of Health for the year 1884.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 2, 1885.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the National Academy of Sciences, transmitting, in compliance with the act of Congress of March 3, 1863, a report of the operations of the National Academy of Sciences during the past year; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Printing.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 737) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. 8037) to amend the tenth section of the act to remove certain burdens on the American marine, &c., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 1339) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Pittsburgh, Pa., was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection this bill will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I suggest that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made, if there be no objection. As the bill provides for the increase of an appropriation the Chair was of the opinion that it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 653) for the relief of John B. Davis;
A bill (H. R. 2158) for the benefit of John C. Herndon;

A bill (H. R. 8132) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Rachael A. Queen; and
A bill (H. R. 8133) granting a pension to Thomas McGill.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of E. W. Oyster, president, and J. F. Billingsley, secretary, on behalf of the labor unions of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. 2507) to amend the law concerning mechanics' liens in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented the memorial of A. W. Parker and H. R. Morgan, of Pleasant Valley, Wis., urging such legislation as shall prohibit railroads between States from charging more for a short than for a long distance; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of Hon. John Owen, A. Y. Lindsay, E. C. Walker, and 48 other citizens of Detroit, Mich.; the petition of Moffat Tazline, Capt. Darius Cole, M. S. Smith & Co., Friend Palmer, and 50 other citizens of Detroit, Mich.; the petition of Merrick Esselslyne & Co., Capt. S. B. Greenwood, George W. Brady, Willard Parker, and 48 other citizens of Detroit, Mich.; and the petition of David Carter, E. L. Small, Alfred Russell, and 50 others, of Detroit, Mich., praying that the Government provide for the purchase of the two canals crossing Point Keweenaw, Lake Superior, Michigan, as recommended by the Secretary of War; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania favoring the repeal of the act of Congress of July 22, 1876, by which the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar was abrogated. I also present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania favoring the passage of the measure known as the foreign-contract-labor bill. I believe the trade-dollar bill has been reported since I was last present in the Senate, and the other bill also, I think, is before the Senate. I therefore move that the resolutions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of 325 officials and business men of Allegheny, Pa., the petition of 125 citizens of Parker's Landing, Pa., and the petition of 624 workmen and owners of works at Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the Allegheny River; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented two memorials of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, a memorial of the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Board of Trade, and a memorial of 52 citizens of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Lumberman's Exchange of Williamsport, Pa., praying for an appropriation for the improvement of the West Branch of the Susquehanna River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the creation of the so-called cattle trail across the State of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of George H. McKinney, of Lincoln County, Kentucky, praying for an increase of facilities in the Patent-Office so as to expedite the issuance of patents; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of the Scoville Manufacturing Company and 12 other corporations and citizens of Connecticut, in favor of free canals between Portage Lake, in Michigan, and Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER presented the petition of H. W. Bradley, Dwight N. Lowell, and 16 other citizens of Romeo, Mich., praying for the passage of a bill providing that the overflowed shoal-water lands in Lake Saint Clair, known as the Saint Clair Flats, be set aside and kept for a public resort; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I present the petition of Nicholas White, of Washington, D. C., praying reimbursement for certain property taken by the United States forces during the late war. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Claims, where a bill is now pending for the relief of the claimant.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2447) to remove the charge of desertion existing against Daniel Morris, late of Company F, Fortieth Regiment of New York State Volunteers, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2365) for the relief of First Lieut. Augustus R. Egbert, Second Regiment United States Infantry, to report it adversely and to ask its indefinite postponement. I will state as the reason for the adverse report that a general bill is now before the Senate covering this and all similar cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2609) to provide permanent reservations for the Indians in Northern Montana, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2544) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time of payment of installments to be paid by actual settlers of Omaha and Otoe Indian lands, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of C. W. Minnix, praying that his name be placed on the pension-roll, reported adversely thereon; and the prayer of the petition was denied.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2158) granting an increase of pension to Jesse S. Harrold, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were indefinitely postponed:

A bill (S. 2068) to increase the pension of William Baldwin;

A bill (S. 2010) granting a pension to John S. Williams; and

A bill (S. 2138) granting a pension to Nancy S. Daniels.

Mr. JACKSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2377) granting a pension to James Stockton, to submit an adverse report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be placed upon the Calendar until I can see the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report adversely and to ask the indefinite postponement of the bill (S. 2305) for the relief of Frederick Schwatka. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] introduced the bill; I do not know whether he desires to have it placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the bill (S. 1899) granting an increase of pension to James M. Blades, and the bill (S. 2056) granting an increase of pension to James M. Blades, to report them adversely.

I desire to state that the claimant can get whatever relief he is justly entitled to from the Commissioner of Pensions. I move that the bills be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1365) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O. Sullivan, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry; and

A bill (S. 2514) granting a pension to David T. Hoover.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5565) granting a pension to Theo. Ahrens; and

A bill (H. R. 2692) granting a pension to Sarah Kennedy.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5543) granting a pension to David M. Nagle, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1805) granting an increase of pension to Miles Barber, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLAIR. By direction of the Committee on Pensions I report adversely on the petition of Hugh Bodell, late private Company B, One hundred and ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying to be restored to the pension-roll. The committee report recommending that the Pension Office afford him the benefit of another examination in reference to his restoration, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, and that the report be printed in order that the attention of the Pension Office may be called to it.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2009) granting a pension to Isabella Turner, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Patrick Furlong, of Hinesburg, Vt., praying for a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2610) granting a pension to Patrick Furlong; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6726) granting a pension to Margaret A. Maguire, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (H. R. 6803) granting a pension to John T. Brake; and

A bill (H. R. 6692) granting a pension to David Whittington.

Mr. WILSON. I also report from the Committee on Pensions the bill (H. R. 2485) for the relief of Treadwell Seaman, jr., adversely, on the ground that the case is still pending in the Pension Office. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

WOONSOCKET NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2600) for the relief of the Woonsocket National Bank, of Woonsocket, R. I., to report it favorably and without amendment.

Mr. CHACE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be put on its passage.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas D. W. Gooch, United States pension agent at Boston, Mass., on the 13th day of October, 1884, issued check numbered 301408, on the assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass., payable to the order of Burton Goddard, for the sum of $1,247.60, which said check, it is claimed, was indorsed by said Goddard to the Woonsocket National Bank, Woonsocket, R. I., and by said bank to the Maverick National Bank, of Boston, Mass., and stolen from the safe of the Adams Express Company, Woonsocket, R. I., to whom it had been delivered for transmission to Boston on the 21st day of October, 1884, and has never been received by said Maverick National Bank, nor paid by the assistant treasurer of the United States at Boston, Mass.: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That D. W. Gooch, United States pension agent at Boston, Mass., be, and he is hereby, instructed to issue a duplicate of the above-described check, No. 301408, for $1,247.60, in favor of Burton Goddard, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby instructed to make said duplicate check payable to said Woonsocket National Bank: Provided, That said Woonsocket National Bank shall first execute a bond with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to hold the United States harmless against the double payment of said check.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2611) to revive and amend the act of Congress of August 15, 1876, to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 115) providing for the supply of public documents to certain nations in the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 116) relating to the loan of tents to the association at Mobile, Ala., in control of the interstate drill; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORGAN. In connection with this joint resolution I ask leave to present as accompanying papers a memorial of the Legislature of Alabama and other papers relating to the subject, which I move be referred with the joint resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 117) referring the title of Mary A. Washington to property referred to in 94 United States Reports, page 716, to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ERNEST H. WARDWELL.

Mr. HAMPTON. I ask, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, that the bill (S. 521) for the relief of Ernest H. Wardwell, be recommitted to that committee. It was reported some time ago and indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair finds on reference to the minutes that the bill was indefinitely postponed in April, 1884, at a previous session of the Senate, and the bill is on the files of the Senate but is not present at the Secretary's desk. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate taken in April, 1884, indefinitely postponing the bill, be reconsidered, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOSHUA SHEPARD.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill (H. R. 3691) for the relief of Joshua Shepard, which was reported adversely by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, with the adverse report, on the ground that additional evidence has been filed with the committee, and I think that the evidence—so I am advised—will have weight in determining the decision of the committee to reverse the report that has been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill be taken from the Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order will be entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 646) for the relief of R. G. P. White, Peter Hanger, and L. T. Green.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 327) providing for printing the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John H. Evins, late a Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress from the State of South Carolina; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL SENATE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution on the Calendar authorizing the increase of the force in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate, and will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ three messengers at $1,440 each; two skilled laborers at $1,000 each; two laborers at $720 each; two firemen at $1,080 each; two janitors at $900 each. And the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay the above employés out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. A resolution was passed at the last session directing the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Architect of the Capitol to select convenient rooms for the committees which had no rooms in this building, and also instructing them to rent such building, when they should find one appropriate, with the consent of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. They found a building, and with the consent of that committee rented it. The officers provided for in the resolution are for the purpose of serving the five committees who now have rooms there, and to keep the building in order and to give such force as shall enable the committees conveniently to perform their duties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7163) to regulate the forms of bills of lading and the duties and liabilities of shipowners and others; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Chair fill the vacancies occurring upon committees by the absence of the late Senator Sheffield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to offer at this time an order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely ask that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancies on certain committees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to move at this time that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancies on committees occasioned by the retirement of Senator Sheffield, late a Senator from the State of Rhode Island. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Is there objection to the motion proposed by the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. JONAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 100) relative to the Chinese indemnity fund; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to make a motion now to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business. As the Senate is aware, I gave notice yesterday that I should ask the friends of the interstate-commerce bill to remain here to-day until its completion. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. PLUMB. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment and the amendment to the amendment be read once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky and the amendment offered to it by the Senator from Kansas will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of Mr. PLUMB is to add to the proposed amendment the words: "Under similar conditions and circumstances;" so as to make the amendment read:

Any distance less than the whole length of the line than is charged for similar service over the whole length of the line, under similar conditions and circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to these last words proposed by the Senator from Kansas, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. JONAS (when his name was called). I am paired on the pending amendment with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER] on the bill which came from the other House and on the bill which was reported from the Senate committee. I do not know how he would vote on any of these amendments, and I announce once for the day that if I were not paired I should vote for the Senate bill as it came from the Committee on Railroads without change or amendment. Being paired on the bills, I withhold my vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Sabin,
Blair,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Sewell,
Chace,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike	Sherman.
Dawes,	Lapham,	Platt,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Plumb,

NAYS—20.

Aldrich,	Conger,	Jackson,	Slater,
Beck,	Cullom,	Kenna,	Vance,
Call,	Edmunds,	McPherson,	Van Wyck,
Cockrell,	Fair,	Maxey,	Vest,
Coke,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,	Wilson.

ABSENT—30.

Bowen,	George,	Jonas,	Pendleton,
Brown,	Gibson,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Butler,	Gorman,	Lamar,	Riddleberger,
Camden,	Groome,	Logan,	Voorhees,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	McMillan,	Walker,
Colquitt,	Harris,	Mahone,	Williams.
Farley,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,
Garland,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] as amended, and upon that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, before the final vote is taken upon this amendment of the Senator from Kentucky I desire to submit a few remarks to the Senate.

The struggles of a great abuse to prevent its abolition and reform is one of the most instructive views which a political student can take of our history. It shows better than anything else the strength which power and wealth can exert in resisting simple truth and justice.

Now, sir, I believe without exception everybody admits that great wrongs and abuses have crept into the management of transportation lines in this country; and a few Senators in this body with commonsense instincts believe that it is our duty to try to eradicate those abuses. Others say that it can not be done and therefore it is best not to try; while others again profess to try but with such weak measures that it almost becomes a caricature of legislation.

Mr. President, let us examine for a moment the reasons given by those who obstruct reform in railroad management. In the first place, they say that we are too ignorant on the subject; that the United States Senate does not comprise the ability or the experience or the knowledge sufficient to legislate on this subject. This is said, I believe almost without exception, by all who speak in deprecation of these attempts at reform. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], a day or two ago, avowing his own, alleged the universal ignorance of the Senate on this subject; and he invited us to look for light to one Albert Fink, and to listen to what he said as pointing out the true path of reform—the aforesaid Mr. Albert Fink being one of the chief individuals whose doings it is proposed to reform.

Now, sir, of the intricate details of transportation, and of the complicated rivalries, the conflicting interests of the various lines, I profess myself to have very little knowledge; much less have I any knowledge of the various tricks of the trade, and it is to be hoped at least that all other Senators are in like blissful ignorance. But of the common principles of justice and of right and wrong I do profess to have a reasonable amount of knowledge, and I ask any Senator what it is there that is abstruse and incomprehensible and unmanageable by the ordinary methods of legislation in what is known as the Reagan bill, the House bill, for which it is proposed to substitute the Senate bill.

If I remember aright the provisions of that bill, they provide in the first place that freights shall be reasonable. I can see nothing peculiarly abstruse in that. If it is, we must charge the obscurity upon the common law.

Second. That one man shall pay no more than another man for the same service. Is that beyond the comprehension of any Senator? Is that beyond the comprehension of any page who waits upon us on this floor?

It provides again that there shall be no rebate nor drawback, which is simply another form of stating that all men shall be charged alike for the like service.

It provides again that the arrangement called pooling between these railroad lines or transportation lines of all kinds shall not be permitted—that is to say, that the pooling arrangements, which are intended to smother competition and to keep up prices in despite of the well-known economic effects of competition, shall be forbidden. Is there anything very abstruse in that? Will any Senator say that this is a dangerous subject upon which he feels hesitation to enter?

Again, the House bill provides that greater charges shall not be made for hauling products over a railroad a part of the distance than are made for hauling them over the same railroad the whole distance. If there is anything incomprehensible or mysterious about that which the plain common sense of Senators can not comprehend, I confess that I have been unable to find it. It is as plain a proposition to me as ever was submitted to a legislator; and the abuses resulting from the practices which this portion of the bill seeks to prohibit are as flagrant and as well recognized as any abuses connected with the transportation system.

Again and lastly it requires the rates prescribed by the railroad companies to be printed and posted up in every depot, so that every shipper may know precisely what he has to pay. That may be incomprehensible to some Senators, but it seems to me plain that any man, however innocent, who ever saw a railroad ought to be able to understand it, and how it could affect with a dangerous action or reaction any of the interests of the railroads or the capital invested therein, is something I can not understand.

Again we are told by those who desire to devise means to obstruct these reforms, that it is dangerous to undertake it because of the great number of persons engaged in railroading, the great number of lines of railroads, the great number of miles of railroad tracks that they operate, and the vast amount of capital engaged therein. They say there are over 1,200 separate distinct lines of railroad, covering 125,000 miles of track, and therefore it is dangerous, and it is complicated, and we ought not to attempt to legislate in regard to it. Why, Mr. President, the same thing might be said of larceny; that there were so many people engaged in it and had been at all times, and they were so ramified through all portions of the community that it was dangerous to undertake to legislate to restrain. The same thing might be said of fraud, and of all crime.

Suppose, if you can so imagine, a community of a somewhat Arcadian simplicity where the crime of robbing hen-roosts had come to be something of a nuisance; and suppose the Legislature, listening to the clamors of the rural population engaged in that kind of industry, should undertake to legislate and enact more stringent laws to prevent and punish the offense; and about the time they were ready to proceed, suppose that a delegation from persons engaged in the hen-roost robbery business should appear before the Legislature and should say to them, "Sirs, without meaning to be offensive, we warn you that you are ignorant of this business; we notify you that the robbery of feathered animals that fly is a highly complicated and technical business, differing very much from the ordinary vulgar robbery of animals that walk upon the earth. We assure you that all theoretic and speculative knowledge on this subject is entirely misleading and unsafe. There is a popular error abroad on this subject, and has been from the days of old Moses down. We say that no legislator can have any knowledge of the business except by actual experience. You will do more harm than you will do good by your enactment," continues the address of the delegation to the Legislature, "you will do more harm than good by your laws if you are not very careful; we can not stand inflexible, iron rules; we must be left to the effect of competition and the laws of trade. If you are not careful and your laws become too rigid, you will absolutely force us to go to work, or you will drive us into the pork business, in which case the pig-raisers of the country will have to bear the loss of the short haul on chickens. If you will go into this business, if you will undertake to enact laws about a business of which you are profoundly ignorant, the least you can do is to hear us and our experts and business men and follow our advice. We offer to you, in lieu of your imperfect knowledge, the testimony of one Bill Sykes, who has been in the business for forty years, and, in fact, is an expert. He can tell an old hen from a pullet by starlight in the top of the loftiest apple tree in a farm-yard. Hear him. If you are determined to pursue this course, take Sykes's advice, appoint a committee of constables in every neighborhood to watch us when we go out upon our nightly forays, and see how many fowls we take and from whom we take them, but do not give them any power to arrest us; simply let them throw the light of publicity in upon our doings; perhaps we will quit of our own accord; but we think in fairness to both parties, as you profess to want to do justice to all classes of the community, we ought to have a hand in appointing that commission that is to watch us!"

That is about the sum and substance of the argument used in this case. You are ignorant, they say, of everything connected with railroads; you do not know anything about the complications and ramifications of this transportation business throughout all regions of the country, and all the interests of business people, and how there is action and reaction; and how a single law that you will pass here, simple as it may look, will redound to the ruin of all men who have invested capital in these great enterprises. That is about the argument.

Sir, I am willing to confess my ignorance of the details and tricks of the trade of railroad transportation, and acknowledge that it is perhaps as great as that of any Senator on this floor. But that a public institution, affected with a public interest and chartered by the laws of the land and given peculiar privileges for the purpose of doing certain things, should charge one man more than another for the same service, should be permitted to smother the laws of competition and keep up prices, is something that if I were to confess my ignorance of I would confess my unworthiness to a seat in this or any other legislative body in Christendom.

Now, sir, they tell us that pooling is absolutely necessary; and I call your attention, Mr. President, and that of the Senate to the argument of Mr. Albert Fink, which was read to us the other day and indorsed by the Senator from Alabama, on this subject. Pooling is absolutely necessary! What for? Why, in the first place, to keep up the charges upon the long haul, or from competitive points to competitive points. Well, what good does that do? That enables the railroad companies, they say, to keep down the charges on the short haul or on the local freight. It seems to me that I have heard that argument before on another subject. It seems to me that I have heard it said on this floor that a high protective tariff would enable the manufacturers to pay their workmen higher wages; and that is very true, but I call your attention to a distinction between the ability of men to do things and the disposition of men to do things. They are able to pay their workmen higher wages; but do they do it? That is the question. If the rates on the long haul were kept up I acknowledge that it would enable the railroad men to reduce the freight on the short haul; but would they do it? That is the question. Have they ever done so? I have never known the local freight charge upon people who were in the absolute power of the road, and who could not patronize another, to be reduced, let the long haul be higher or lower.

Well, they say again that it is necessary to permit pooling for the reason that the rates in that way can only protect themselves against what may be called competitive strife; and Mr. Fink draws a very nice distinction, which as a lawyer you can understand, between legitimate competition and competitive strife, as he calls it. When the railroads are all at peace with each other there is a legitimate competition between them as to who shall plunder the people most, but when the pools are broken up and competition exerts its natural force, then the competition is as between themselves, and that is what Mr. Fink calls "competitive strife," or "cut-throat" competition, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] termed it the other day.

Mr. President, that argument amounts to this, and nothing more, that if you do not permit the railroads to plunder the people they will plunder each other. That is what it means. If you will permit them to make pools and put up the rates on their long hauls from all competitive points to the injury of the people, they will refrain from injuring each other; but if you do not do that, if you compel them, they say, to meet the force of competition at all competitive points and let the charges for the long haul be reduced, then they will go to fighting among themselves.

This is a candid defense of the policy of pooling at all events, whether it be an acceptable one to the public or not. I should like to ask if there is any reason why competition should not be permitted and encouraged between transportation lines just the same as it is permitted and encouraged and becomes the obvious policy of the law in all other business? But it seems that there is to be a different rule adopted in relation to the transportation companies from that which operates in all other business. Senators will get up on this floor and they will argue very eloquently indeed, and yet do nothing; in fact I believe that the eloquence exhibited here is in inverse proportion to the disposition of the speakers to do anything to remove the evils which are the subject of their eloquence. The moment you undertake to do anything practical to remove the evils they all with one accord begin to make excuses. They will exclaim almost, if not quite, in the language of Scripture: "Touch not mine incorporated, do my profits no harm"—spelling it with two "f's."

In justification of the position that nothing should be done, Senators have undertaken, it seems to me, to change the issue entirely. I have listened to some of the most eloquent speeches that I have ever had the pleasure of hearing in praise of railroads per se. We have been told that they are most excellent things for any civilized community. I listened, notably, to the speech of the Senator from Georgia, in which he told us what benefits they had conferred on the communities that came within his knowledge; how the great and prosperous city of Atlanta, or the ground on which it now stands, had not many years ago been bought for the price of a horse, bridle, and saddle, and now it is covered with great business houses and immense wealth. We have been told, also, how it increases the price of land, and how it causes vast additions to the population and to the business of the country. I listened to these encomiums upon the institution of railroads until I became convinced and well satisfied in my mind that a railroad could actually beat an old dirt-road and wagon for the transportation of freight—let me speak cautiously—I mean for long distances and for heavy loads; and I became satisfied that steam as applicable to water conveyances was absolutely better than the old-fashioned raft, because the old raft had frequently to wait until the river rose, whereas the steamboat, as I have been told, could get up steam, and, if the vessel did not draw too much water, start off just the same as you could start a wagon on the road.

So I was convinced that the railroads were useful things, and I was convinced from the course of the argument that the attempt was made to make the public believe that those of us who wanted to reform the operations of railroads were opposed to those institutions; else if it were not for that purpose it was certainly wasted eloquence. The Senator from Georgia in particular used the term, "a long line of steel rails against which so much has been said." Now I should like to know who has said anything against steel rails. Who has said anything against long lines of steel rails? Who has said anything against the superior advantages of railroads over the old-fashioned methods of conveyance? I have not heard any such thing said on this floor, and I do not remember to have heard any such thing said even by the statesmen who preside over the destinies of the intersections of highways in the rural districts. But because they do all these things is that any reason for refusing to control those who manage them?

We are told again that freights are cheaper now than they ever have been. That is no doubt true. We are told that this fact is due to the railroads. That is undoubtedly true. But that the freights on railroads would be cheaper even than they now are but for the management of the managers of railroads in resisting the clamor of the people for a reform is most true of all. No thanks to railroad managers for cheap freights. We owe thanks to science that has given them superior means of transportation over the old methods. That is where we owe thanks; and whenever the Huntingtons and the Goulds and the Vanderbilts and the Finks et id genus omne come here or anywhere else and claim credit for cheap freights, they claim that which is due to science, and that which has been brought about in spite of their energies to maintain high freights. As well might the sieve claim praise for yielding up the water which was poured into it as for them to claim credit for the charges which they can not get and have tried in vain to get.

Because the manufacturer of cloth, equipped with all the inventions of modern science, can make cheaper cloth than the old hand-loom and cards, are we therefore particularly and specially to adore that manufacturer? Do we owe any of the advantages of civilization arising from cheap literature to the genius of the authors and the art of printing, or do we owe it all to the compositors who set up the type and the pressmen who strike off the work? Do we owe anything to Morse and to science for the telegraph, or do we owe it all to the men who set up the poles and arrange the wires? And because printing has been beneficial to civilization, shall there therefore be no laws against slander, libel, and defamation of character? And because telegraphs are useful, shall there be no laws to regulate them in their dealings with the community? Verily, sir, it would seem not. But, in my opinion, every institution of any kind whatsoever, whose operations affect the public should be made subservient to the laws and the regulations imposed upon them by the laws.

Nor is it true, sir, that we owe any great amount of credit to the railroad corporations of the country for their generous investment of capital for the public good. At least half of all the railroads, if not a majority, with which I have personal acquaintance, were either built by the public taxation of the States or they were built by syndicates who would commence operations with about half the means necessary to finish. They would go through the country and have public meetings called, speeches made, and the public expectation excited, and obtain all the private subscriptions that were possible, all the town and county subscriptions that could be obtained toward building the road; and when they were all received and expended in building the road, and perhaps they would about half finish it, then a mortgage by the syndicate would be placed upon the whole work for its completion, and in due time that mortgage would be foreclosed; the private stock, the town and county stock, and all the little fellows would be forced out, and the road passed into the hands of the syndicate for half price. That is the history of the roads built in my country; that is the history of the majority of them, perhaps everywhere, especially in the earlier periods of railroad construction. They are not now in the hands of the men whose money was originally put in to construct them; and yet men and the representatives of men who obtained control of these corporate works in this manner are the very loudest in protesting against any laws being passed which shall interfere with their right to do as they please with their property.

It is also worthy of note that much as these roads deprecate any interference of the law with their right to do as they please, they are willing, on the other hand, to obtain some more concessions from the law to strengthen them in their unjust discriminations. Witness the willingness and the anxiety of Mr. Fink and others to obtain laws making their pooling system legal.

The amount of capital invested in railroads in this country, upon the face of the statistics, we find to be about $7,500,000,000, in round numbers, and the gross receipts that they obtain for their operations from the people amount, in round numbers, to $823,000,000 per annum. Therefore it is seen at once that these corporations which it is proposed shall not be controlled by the public levy and collect from the American people about two and a half times more money annually than is levied and collected by the Government of the United States for its support; and these are the institutions which we propose to exempt from all control.

Why, sir, the territory of this country is parceled out for taxation by these railroads in great geographical boundaries, as the Romans parceled out the adjacent world for conquest and plunder, assigning consuls and armies for the purpose. These financial fields are assigned to certain groups of transportation lines which are governed by central associations. Mr. Fink is at the head of one, and the Senator from Georgia informed us the other day that he was at the head of another, and there are still others beyond the Mississippi. I am told that the region of country which each line is permitted to supply is carefully laid out, and any trespass by competing lines on that territory as well as any infringement of the established rates is promptly punished by the central association. So the great syndicates which regulate freights have, in fact, a greater power over the property and fortunes of our people than Congress is invested with, for the taxing power of Congress is limited and defined by the Constitution; but what is to limit or define the tax of the transportation lines either in methods or amount?

Most of our States provide in their constitutions that taxation shall be uniform; but Senators say that it will not begin to do to apply the principle of uniformity to the taxation imposed by corporations. Many of the States provide that taxation shall be ad valorem, but this the friends of monopoly reject on behalf of the railroads; yet the representatives of the people, their powers being limited by the Constitution, are still further restrained by the direct responsibility which they owe to the people, whereas there is no responsibility whatever upon those who regulate rates for transportation. They meet in secret conclave; they are afraid of nobody; they are afraid of no influence. They levy taxation—not according to the ad valorem character of the property on which it is levied, but according to the amount which the product will bear—that is to say, they take the last cent that they can take without stopping the shipment and transportation of the article; and as for the public, they are in a position to say, as it is said one of their greatest men has said, "The public be damned."

And yet Senators say these things must not be changed!

Mr. President, I was wrong. I confess there is a mystery about this transportation business after all. It is a great and incomprehensible mystery to me. That mystery consists in the meek endurance, the long-suffering patience of the American people. That is the most mysterious thing connected with the whole transaction.

It is too late to say that there is no power in the law to control these corporations or to redress the grievances under which we labor. The great lawyers of the country have settled that. They are public institutions; they are subject to public control by virtue of their public capacity. The States within their borders can regulate them, and under the power given in the Constitution to Congress they can be regulated by Congress when their lines extend beyond the State borders. If not, then they are uncontrollable; and as the great wealth of the country consists in the value of its productions, and as these derive all their value from the facility with which they can be got to a market, we might as well surrender at once the property and fortunes of our people to incorporated human avarice.

Candid Senators should look the issue squarely in the face, and should say either that they will or that they will not undertake to regulate these great railroads. There should be no more dodging—if I may be excused the expression; there should be no more doubting as to the power; there should be no more pleas of ignorance of the subject, and that they are afraid of doing wrong, because they permit wrong to be done every hour by failing to act.

As for the Senate bill which it is proposed to substitute for the House bill, however well meant it may have been, I consider it entirely delusive; I consider it absolutely inefficient. Why, Mr. President, it is proposed that nine commissioners shall operate over thirty-eight States and eight Territories, shall control and regulate traffic as far as it is invested with the power to do so over 1,200 railroads and 125,000 miles of lines. That of itself will impress every candid-thinking man in the country with the idea that the purpose of the Cullom bill is to do nothing, that it is the direct progeny of the circumlocution office where the highest effort of British genius was "how not to do it." That is the way, it seems to me, that candid statesmen will be compelled to view it.

What remedy does it give that does not already exist? It is already the privilege of any citizen who feels himself aggrieved to bring a suit against a railroad company for the redress of his wrongs. As the law now stands he can bring it either in the State courts or in the Federal courts, according to the question of jurisdiction. This bill would compel him to bring two suits and to bring both in the Federal tribunal—that is to say, he must first go before this commission. Where will the commission sit? Is it to be a traveling commission, and are its writs, like those of the old English kings, to be returnable ubicunque fuerimus?

After he has brought all his witnesses and employed his counsel and made his case known to the commission, and the commission decides in his favor, then what? Then the commission can do him no good. He is permitted to bring his suit, and he is to have the service of the district attorney of the district for the purpose of bringing his suit, with all the penalties as to costs and all the misfortunes arising from failure that he has now. If these commissioners are invested with the extraordinary powers proposed—not in extent, but in character—to be given them by this bill, I hope that there will be appended as their instructions Dogberry's charge to the watch when he stationed them for the night. Says Dogberry, addressing the watch: "You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch, therefore bear you the lantern. This is your charge: You shall comprehend all vagrom men; you are to bid any man stand in the prince's name. Watch: How if a' will not stand? Dogberry: Why, then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together, and thank God you are rid of a knave."

These commissioners are charged by the bill to comprehend all vagrom railroads, and bid them do justice in the name of the United States, and how if they will not do justice? Well then you are to take no note of them, but let them go and call the commissioners together, and thank God you are rid of a knave. That is the proposition with which grave Senators expect to satisfy the clamor of the country!

Mr. President, let me remind Senators of the story of the Sibylline books. You will remember that when the old Roman king was offered the whole nine at a certain high price he refused to purchase them. The Sibyl went away and burned three, and returned and offered him six for the same price. He still refused. The Sibyl went away and burned three more, and came back the third time and offered him the three for the same price, and by the advice of the augurs the price was paid. Now, sir, let me say to Senators that you will reject the demands of the people now, the honest demands for the redress of these grievances. I have no doubt the corporations have friends enough in this Congress to enable them to defeat a measure that will do any good; but the people will not abate one jot of their honest demands, and at every refusal their favor for the railroads will become less and less, and they will ultimately attain the full measure of all that they ask.

I shall close these few imperfect remarks by repeating what I said in debate some two weeks ago, that the interests of all concerned, railroad men and the public, will be subserved if the corporations will come in with a spirit of fairness and give us the advantage of their technical knowledge, and lead us in the safe and wise way to redress these grievances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky as amended.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say that I shall vote against the amendment I offered because the amendment made to it was evidently intended to destroy it, and I agree that it does. It was voted for generally by the men who intended to kill the House or Reagan bill, so called, and I am content to stand on the provisions of the Reagan bill as they came from the House, rather than vote for an amended amendment which I intended in good faith to be attached to the bill for the purpose of getting clear of many of the things which gentlemen on the other side have always claimed the Senate bill provided for better. In regard to regulating hauls along a line where one haul might be longer than another, it was said there might be terminal difficulties at different points along the line that made it important to charge a little more for a somewhat shorter haul than was charged for a longer one. I looked into the matter and sought in good faith to remove one flagrant evil, an acknowledged evil, and that was to say and to say no more than that the charge for hauling over the whole length of the line should be as great as should be made for a haul over any lesser or shorter part of it.

No man can deny that the proposition is fair and just, leaving all the questions in regard to intermediate hauls, whether they were a little longer or a little shorter, to be arranged hereafter. But when the Senate adds "under similar conditions and circumstances," it is evident that there can be no similar conditions and circumstances between a haul part of the way and a haul the whole length of the line. The conditions and circumstances must differ; the terminal points must be different. The conditions perhaps as to the cost of taking off or putting on freight must be different; and it must open up a series of lawsuits and controversies with the great power and wealth of the combined railroad corporations against the individual man who has the courage or audacity to sue them, by being able to say, "You know the conditions and circumstances were different because the termini were different, and many other conditions were different;" and no individual man will venture to enter into controversies with a system of roads controlling 125,000 miles and $6,000,000,000 of capital.

When my amendment to the first section of the House bill was voted down I saw very clearly what would be the tactics of the enemies of the bill. They did not intend to make it any better or less objectionable than it was when it came from the House. One of their principal grounds of attack was that the House bill limited the passenger charge to 3 cents a mile by providing that the railroads should not charge more than that for passenger travel. I thought that there might be conditions under which it might be proper to charge more than that. I did not desire to go into the question of limiting them as to their passenger charges per mile. Let that be settled by a commission after examination. But most of the enemies of the House bill, who were opposed to the 3-cents-a-mile clause, voted upon a call of the yeas and nays to retain that provision in the House bill. Why? Was it because they desired it to be retained? No; it had been their main point of attack. I was seeking to divest the House bill of that objection and of other provisions, such as distinctions between one short haul and another shorter haul, neither of which extended over the whole length of the line, which was another of their points of attack, so as to make the House bill as little objectionable to them as possible. And yet upon a call of the yeas and nays the RECORD will show that a large majority of the men who are opposed to the House bill, nearly all who desire to do nothing but to allow the railroads to continue the absolute control over the commerce of the country which they have now in the interstate roads, all who desire that Congress should adjourn and have the Senate get away as far from the House as possible and leave the conferees nothing to confer, certainly nothing to agree about, placed themselves on record to maintain in the House bill the very provisions they had contended made it unconstitutional, and therefore vicious legislation.

No higher evidence can be given to prove to the country that they do not intend to consider the House bill or to make it correspond with the views they profess to entertain. Now, when they have added an amendment to my amendment, by which I in good faith sought to make the bill more acceptable to the men who were opposing some of the provisions of the House bill by saying we will not go into the question of charges between different short hauls over portions of the road, but will simply deal with one great question, which is that the maximum charge for any service upon any road shall be the maximum charged over any part of it, leaving the other matters to be considered hereafter, they oppose it. I illustrated yesterday that it was an outrage to charge $800 per car to Virginia City, Nev., and only $300 for an eight hundred miles longer haul to San Francisco over the same line, on the same train, for the same class of goods; and when I called that to the attention of the Senate, and also alluded to the charge from Memphis to New Orleans of $1 a bale, and from Winona to New Orleans, a shorter haul by one hundred and twenty-five miles, at $3 a bale, the Senator from Kansas said there were only two or three cases of that sort, as if there had been more the Senator from Kentucky would have mentioned them. There are hundreds of such cases; there may be thousands of them. In the city where I live within a very few years we have paid more to get freight from Cincinnati to Lexington than it cost to bring the same freight from New York to Cincinnati. I have before me the argument of Judge Black, of Pennsylvania, wherein he showed that some years ago coal which was hauled from the mines of Pennsylvania through the city of York, Pa., for sixty miles farther along the same line on the same train to Baltimore was delivered to the purchasers in Baltimore at a dollar and a half a ton less than it was delivered to men in York, on the same line of road, sixty miles nearer the mine. Thus, men living in York, Pa., carrying on blast-furnaces for example, could not compete with men living in Baltimore carrying on the same business, because their coal costs them a dollar and a half a ton more in York than it does in Baltimore, though the coal that went to Baltimore was hauled sixty miles farther over the same road on the same train that left it at York.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask him if the two cases which he has mentioned, one of the transportation to Baltimore and to York and the other the transportation from Cincinnati to Louisville and Lexington, are not cases of unjust discrimination?

Mr. BECK. Obviously.

Mr. PLUMB. Then are they not specifically provided for in the Senate bill?

Mr. BECK. The Senate bill provides for nothing except through the action of a commission of doubtful constitutionality. There would not be a railroad in the country that would not attack the legality of that commission, both for its semi-legislative powers and semi-judicial powers, and keep all questions made against them in the courts of the country for five years to test that question. If it is not unjust discrimination, why not let the man affected go to the courts of the country where he can have a hearing without let or hindrance or appeal to any commission or to any other body of men to control his action?

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator advise me as to the particular provision of the Constitution which is violated by the appointment of this commission?

Mr. BECK. Congress has the power to regulate commerce among the States, but we have no right to invest any body of men with the power of a court by our appointment for a term of years, for one, two, three, four, five, or nine, as this commission is. Judges must be appointed for life or good behavior. Have we, I ask the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think we are creating a court to do that.

Mr. BECK. Then what do we create the commission for?

Mr. PLUMB. We create a certain agency to act under such instructions as may be from time to time given to them by Congress in regard to this matter?

Mr. BECK. If you will read your own bill——

Mr. PLUMB. That is to say, we shall have done that if this bill shall pass. If we have not the right to do this through any agency of that kind, then of course the only right we have is to dictate specific rates for every kind and character of haul that is transported over a railroad line.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to say one other thing in the same connection. I do not understand that the bill in any wise prevents any one from exercising any right which he is now permitted to exercise. Every person can bring his suit for unjust discrimination under the common law, and I remember a few days ago that a judgment was rendered in the Standard Oil case, which the Senator is undoubtedly familiar with, because he is up in all that class of cases, in the city of Cleveland, where the court held that the discrimination which had been practiced was unjust, and awarded damages by reason of it; and that class of cases and all such cases are permitted to go on as before if the party does not himself choose to resort to the remedies and to the agency provided by the Senate bill.

Mr. BECK. The very object of the House bill is to declare that acts which up to this time have not been unlawful shall be declared unlawful. Could the managers of the roads heretofore be punished for giving back rebates to the Standard Oil Company to the amount of $10,000,000? What law prohibited that? None. We propose to pass a law saying that that shall be unlawful.

Mr. PLUMB. The court in Cleveland, Ohio, in the absence of Congressional legislation, decided it to be unlawful the other day.

Mr. BECK. Undoubtedly under State laws and State authority men can be reached for violation of State law. Why was it necessary for ten States in the Union to prohibit these acts in their constitutions? Why was it necessary for thirty States to enact laws against them if they can be reached without law, and why should interstate commerce remain without Congressional control while all the States of the Union are regulating their common carriers by law? I should like the Senator from Kansas to answer that. If it was necessary for ten States to put it in their constitutions, if it was necessary for the Legislatures of thirty States to put it into their law-books, surely in the far larger class of cases under Congressional control as interstate commerce it is equally necessary to declare what shall be illegal, what shall be extortion, what shall be unjust discrimination, and what shall be the fine and other penalties for the men who are guilty of such acts. Is it not important to say that he shall be sent to jail either for a year, or a day, and be fined not less than a thousand dollars if he is guilty? Would not that be a great restraint and important aid in prohibiting men from committing these offenses?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator evidently has not read the Senate bill.

Mr. BECK. I have read the Senate bill, and I regard it as a very cunning expedient to pretend to do a good deal and to do nothing.

Mr. PLUMB. The House bill is not of that sort!

Mr. BECK. The House bill is not, because the House bill says that unjust discrimination shall be punished by fine and imprisonment, and the man aggrieved may go directly to the courts of the country and demand redress. Is there anything wrong or unusual about that? Is that not the manly and direct way of doing it?

Mr. PLUMB. That is just what the Senate bill says.

Mr. BECK. No; the Senate bill says that he shall go to a commission and lay his papers before them.

Mr. PLUMB. No; it gives him that additional right.

Mr. BECK. And if he does not get consent from them, he can not get much further. Their reports will, of course, be made up in the interest of the corporations, who will dictate who shall compose the commission, just as the men interested dictated the Tariff Commission.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator why would a commission be any more the creature of the corporations than a court appointed by the same authority and confirmed by the same Senate?

Mr. BECK. The court is appointed for life, or good behavior, and is independent of everybody, Republican or Democrat, and can not be disturbed, because they do not pander to power. The Tariff Commission, everybody knows, was made up and controlled by the parties in interest, and men interested were allowed to draw their own schedules, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said in his speech in regard to the cotton schedule, and as we all know was done in regard to the sugar and other schedules. Why did Charles Francis Adams, when he was disinterested, argue in favor of the Reagan bill and every principle of it, and then turn around when employed by the railroads and denounce the House bill and all similar laws? Why did Mr. Fink, with his $25,000 a year, go before our Labor Committee and talk about the folly of legislation unless you gave the power to him? We may as well understand that 1,200 great railroad corporations, with $6,000,000,000 capital, controlling 125,000 miles, are too big almost for Congress to handle, far less a body of three, four, five, seven, or nine men.

But I rose only to say that I would vote against my own amendment, emasculated as it is now by the amendment added to it.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word, and I should not have done that had it not been for the Senator from Kentucky making the statement that the Senate bill is a cunningly devised bill, the purpose of which is to do nothing. I undertake to say, sir, that the House bill is a cunningly devised bill which will result in nothing so far as the public good is concerned, and I want to say that I drew the Senate bill myself, and I did it because I believed as I drew the bill that it was a bill which would operate in the interest of the people against the corporations of this country.

There is no cunning about it so far as protecting or shielding the corporations of the country is concerned; but it is a bill the result of my judgment, having had experience, more I may be allowed to say than the Senator from Kentucky, in dealing with commissions and railroads, and never having an interest to the extent of a 5-cent piece in any railroad on earth. But I believe from my experience that the Senate bill which is now before this body along with the House bill is the bill that will give the country relief from the impositions upon the people alleged by the Senator from Kentucky.

The Senator talks about the House bill as being the remedy for all the evils that exist; but, in my judgment, that House bill would fall to the ground without any sort of consequence to the country at all, because it would not be enforced in practice before the country, and, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] suggests, it is impracticable.

The Senator from Kentucky talks about the action of the States of this Union. It is true that about thirty States of the Union have legislation and some of them constitutional provisions upon this subject, but nearly all of them, about twenty-five of them I believe, have commissions for the purpose of executing whatever laws the States have passed on the subject. When the Senator talks about this being a novel proceeding, something unheard-of, the Senator talks about what is the rule in this country so far as legislation is concerned by the State governments.

I only rose now to say that I desire to call the attention of the Senate to what has been the history of legislation in the British Government as well as in this country on some of the points which have been referred to. I shall refer to some passages in the paper before me. I take out this paper not for the purpose of reading a speech, but simply for the purpose of reading extracts from a report of a select committee of Parliament upon the subjects that are now before the Senate.

The report of this select committee was ordered published by the house of commons in 1882. The committee consisted of twenty-seven members, and they were charged with the duty of looking into the workings of the railway commission established in 1873, and to report any amendments to the laws governing railways and canals. Referring to the railway commission, the committee say:

> The next question is the nature and constitution of the tribunal from which aggrieved parties are to seek redress. Your committee are, first of all, of the opinion that the tribunal should be made permanent as well as special. The railway commission has to a great extent been hindered in its work by the temporary character with which it has hitherto been invested. At the same time your committee are convinced that the establishment of a commission has been of great public advantage, not merely in causing justice to be speedily done in those cases which have been brought before it, but also in preventing differences from arising as between railway companies and the public. Its utility is not to be measured solely by the instances in which it has been called upon to hear and determine, but also by the deterrent and controlling influence of its existence.

Again, they say:

> Representatives of the railway companies—

And I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to this subject—

> Representatives of the railway companies, backed up by legal gentlemen of eminence, have urged upon your committee that it is not desirable to continue the special tribunal in its present form, but that the court should be reconstituted by the appointment of a single judge, to be selected from the bench or the bar, aided by assessors wherever other than legal knowledge is required.

The Senator from Kentucky comes in here and insists that nothing is necessary but to pass an iron-clad law and turn the people over to the courts of the country. This committee of Parliament, consisting of twenty-seven members, after the English Government had had ten years' experience of a commission, say that the lawyers representing the corporations go before them and insist on the repeal of the statute and relegating the people again to the courts as the sole judge having purely judicial control. We say that that does not give the people the relief which we are seeking that they should have in this country, because a simple judicial tribunal is not the kind of tribunal that the people in the mass of these cases can ever go to and get through in securing justice against great corporations. We say that we want a commission created that shall not be far off from the mass of the people that have to deal with these corporations—not that they shall have to go to them, but that the commission, the tribunal specially created, shall go to the shipper and go to the people. So under the bill of the Senate to-day, if it were a law, no shipper having a complaint would be compelled to go out of his county or his town scarcely in making up his case and turning it over to the commission if he desired to do so, and that is the very theory upon which the bill was drawn; it is the very theory given by these twenty-seven members of a committee of Parliament, who say that the lawyers for the railroads want the commission repealed and a judiciary established for the hearing of these cases just like any others that might come before it.

I tell my friends that we can not expect to give any relief to the people against these corporations unless we give them a special tribunal that they can go to or that can come to them in making their complaints, and afford them a tribunal that will look into the complaints, find the testimony, carry it forward, make a decision, and if the corporation does not submit to it then turn it over to the courts and help the district attorney in prosecuting it further. What does the House bill do in this case? The House bill says, it is true, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] said yesterday, that they can go into the courts and sue, and if they recover a judgment they will be entitled to smart-money. So it is; that is the provision of the House bill; but I tell you, sir, that practically no shipper of ordinary means will ever get to the end of a prosecution in the courts. First, he would have to employ a lawyer, pay him a retaining-fee to follow his case, hunt up his testimony, go through two or three courts, and if he lived long enough and had money enough to pay the expenses he would then forsooth be entitled to a little smart-money.

I say, Mr. President, that the interest of the people is in the line of establishing a commission that will go to the complainant, ask him what his grievance is, ask him who his witnesses are, hunt up his witnesses, take their testimony, examine into the facts, make a report, notify the railroad company, and if the railroad company do not pay, then turn it over to the district attorney and aid him in the prosecution of the man's case in the ordinary courts of the country. But the Senator from Kentucky says that we do not allow the shipper to go anywhere else. I say, as the Senator from Indiana said yesterday, that a man has a right to pursue his own remedy as the law exists to-day if he does not desire to allow the commission to look into the case.

But what does the Parliamentary committee say in reference to the people? It says:

From the traders and the general public, on the other hand, no demand has come for such a change. On the contrary, the general tenor of their evidence exhibits satisfaction with the services rendered to the public by the existing railway commission.

* * * * * * * *

Your committee can not see any reason for reversing the legislation of 1873 and returning to the purely legal tribunal which, as the court of common pleas, was tried from 1854 to 1873 and then abandoned.

* * * * * * * *

Your committee further consider that the jurisdiction of the railway commissioners should be extended, and that they should have power to enforce in the interests of the public the provisions of general and special acts affecting railway companies (exclusive of questions touching the safety of passengers), to enjoin and enforce obedience and to give redress in any case of illegal charges, including power to order payment of damages for any injury already sustained.

These paragraphs, Mr. President, are some of the expressions of the committee of Parliament in 1882, after more than ten years of trial of a commission, showing the judgment of that committee as to the importance of the commission and favoring its retention with an enlargement of its powers. In England maximum rates are fixed by law. The question of equal mileage—and I desire to ask the attention of the Senate to this—is discussed in the committee's report, which involves the question of charges for long and short hauls. The House bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in interstate commerce to charge more for the transportation of property for a shorter than for a longer distance. The Senate bill says nothing about long or short hauls, but leaves the commission charged with the duty of protecting the people from extortion and unjust discrimination. Now, sir, what does the committee of the British Parliament say after years of experience? They say:

The form which the proposal for a fixed standard of charges has usually taken is equal mileage—i. e., a charge for each class of goods and passengers in proportion to the distance for which they are carried. This point was urged before the royal commission, and is so effectually disposed of by their report that it seems scarcely necessary to dwell upon it further. They say it would prevent railway companies from lowering their fares and rates so as to compete with traffic by sea, by canal, or by a shorter or otherwise cheaper railway, and would thus deprive the public of the benefit of competition and the company of a legitimate source of profit.

It would prevent railway companies from making perfectly fair arrangements for carrying at a lower rate than usual goods brought in larger and constant quantities, or for carrying for long distances at a lower rate than for short distances.

It would compel a company to carry over a line which has been very expensive in construction, or which from gradients or otherwise is very expensive in working, at the same rate at which it carries over less expensive lines.

They further say that—

The proposers of equal mileage have admitted that there must be numerous exceptions where there is sea competition, where low rates for long distances will bring a profit, or where the article carried at low rates is a necessary, such as coal. It is scarcely necessary to observe that such exceptions as these, while inadequate to meet all the various cases, destroy the value of equal mileage as a principle or the possibility of applying it as a general rule.

Mr. President, I have quoted enough to show at least that the committee of Parliament, after long investigation, after years of legislative control of the railways of the kingdom, were unqualified in their declaration that it would be injurious to the business interests of the people to pass a law on the theory of equal mileage rates. On the question of legislation in relation to agreements between railway companies—in other words, in relation to pooling—the committee say:

As to the conference of companies for the purpose of mutual agreement, such as the English and Irish traffic conference, your committee would point out that such associations are inevitable and find place in almost every branch of trade.

Now, Mr. President, from what has been shown does it not seem wiser to leave out of any bill we may pass these provisions which are dangerous to the business interests if put into a statute and enforced, and instead to pass a bill making extortion and unjust discrimination a crime, provide a commission of able and honorable men to enforce the law, and while doing so furnish all the information possible for our guidance in the enactment of any further legislation to secure absolute protection to the people in dealing with transportation companies?

The principle of Government inspection with a commission to enforce equitable treatment is safest and, in the long run, more effective. The people in many of the States are well supplied with railroad facilities. You may traverse the continent enjoying almost the comforts of home. Freight is shipped with great expedition from one side of the continent to the other, a fact which I may say is in a great measure due to the consolidation of roads resulting in unity of management. There is no complaint, then, on account of lack of facilities or promptness or convenience. There are portions of the country where there is still a lack of railroad facilities, and we should be careful to avoid any legislation the effect of which would be to put a stop to the further investment of capital in the construction of railroads in sections of the country where greater facilities are needed. Let us then favor only such legislation as will secure the people against extortion and unjust discrimination, allowing only reasonable charges by transportation companies. The principle that transportation charges should be made in exact proportion to the exact distances over which goods are carried, known as the pro rata or mileage principle, is recognized as correct in the abstract, but it can not be made of universal application, because a tariff should be based on the cost of transportation, cost of road, quantity, and many other considerations that must be counted as factors in determining the expense of the transaction. A law to prevent the exercise of business judgment in any case, and that makes no allowance for the conditions that cause rates to vary, will, in my opinion, be a bad law, and we would be called upon very soon to repeal it. Grain and fuel and the necessaries of life should be carried at the lowest possible rates, and the profits made by higher rates on luxuries.

Mr. President, it has often been said in this Senate that the question of regulating commerce among the several States is a great and important one, and yet there has seemed to be a little disposition to avoid its consideration. The subject of the transportation of freights and the mode of securing its transportation at the cheapest rate possible is engaging the attention not only of the people of this nation, but of many of the great nations of the world. We have about as many miles of railroad as all the rest of the world. They represent a nominal capital of $7,000,000,000 and a real capital of between three and four billions. The value of our internal commerce is said to amount to $15,000,000,000 per year. The railroads carry the greater part of the internal commerce of the country, by far the larger portion, and hence the attention given by the people to the subject of Government regulation of interstate commerce. The vast amount of capital invested in these roads, furnishing facilities to the people for carrying them and their products to market, should not be depreciated in value nor the rights of the roads disregarded. And in the performance of our constitutional duty to regulate commerce between the States we should treat these corporations as we do other interests, with fairness. The people should be protected from imposition at the hands of these transportation companies. There should be no real antagonism between the carrier and the customer, and in my judgment the way to avoid such antagonism is to pass a bill providing against extortion and unjust discrimination, and providing for the punishment of its violation, and to place the whole matter in the hands of a commission for enforcement.

I have shown the position of Parliament and the English law on this subject. We are not safe in going further than the present law of England goes. The best we can do will in a measure fail in satisfying the whole people, and do the best we can in relation to the regulation of interstate commerce we shall still be unable to secure the transportation of freights as cheaply as we hope they may finally be carried. While we are working in the interest of fair dealing between the railroads and the people and finally to reduce the rates, we shall be compelled to do as other nations are doing—not only regulate commerce on railroads, but give our attention to the improvement of all our water ways as well. While England is now controlling and regulating her railways, she is at the same time entering upon a system of canals which it is said will cost $350,000,000, notwithstanding the fact that traffic by rail has been reduced to the minimum of cost. Germany also is about to spend in the same way about one hundred millions; France about eighty millions outside of the Panamá Canal, which has not unfrequently been referred to of late.

I will not take up time longer in reading further passages from the report of the committee of the British Parliament which go to show that after the long experience they have had there legislating to control the railroads of that country for about thirty years, finally in 1873 they adopted the commission plan and refused to legislate on the subject of long and short hauls, or upon the subject of pools, and they in their report say that it is not in the interest of the public that either of those things should be fixed by statute, but that they had better be left to a commission whose exclusive business it should be to deal with the transportation companies in the interest of the people, and see to it that the people have fair play as between them and the corporations of that country. And that is what I have been seeking and what the Committee on Railroads of the Senate have been seeking by the report of their bill.

The Committee on Railroads are just as anxious as the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Texas or the Senator from North Carolina to do whatever is best in the interest of the public in regulating these great transportation companies of the country, and I insist that the apparently persistent effort on the part of those distinguished Senators to create the impression on this floor that every man who is not in favor of the House bill belongs to the corporations and is simply trying to do nothing, is not justified or true as a matter of fact; and I honestly believe that if the Senate bill were to pass it would prove to be more in the interest of the people than the bill of the House of Representatives which is now under consideration would prove to be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] as amended, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COKE (after having voted in the negative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I remember now that I was paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague [Mr. LOGAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. PLUMB (after having voted in the negative). I voted under a mistake. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] whenever his colleague says so; I do not know how he would vote on this amendment. If at liberty, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—6.

Bayard,	Hawley,	Van Wyck,	Vest.
Conger,	Platt,

NAYS—41.

Allison,	Fair,	McMillan,	Sabin,
Beck,	Frye,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Blair,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Call,	Harris,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Sherman,
Chace,	Hoar,	Miller of Cal.,	Slater,
Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,	Williams,
Cullom,	Jackson,	Morrill,	Wilson.
Dawes,	Jonas,	Palmer,
Dolph,	Kenna,	Pike,
Edmunds,	Lamar,	Pugh,

ABSENT—29.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Bowen,	Garland,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Brown,	George,	Lapham,	Vance,
Butler,	Gibson,	Logan,	Voorhees,
Camden,	Gorman,	Miller of N. Y.,	Walker.
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Morgan,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Pendleton,
Coke,	Hill,	Plumb,

So the amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Kentucky has another amendment he wishes to propose.

Mr. BECK. I propose to amend in section 5, line 26, by adding after the word "substituted" the following proviso:

Provided, That there may be a reduction of rates prior to the posting of such new schedule. But in such case the new schedule shall be posted as aforesaid within five days after such reduction shall be made, and said schedule shall also specify the date at which the reduction commenced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the essential distinction, as I understand it, between the Senate bill and the House bill is whether or not the grievances complained of by the people as to the action of the railroads shall be investigated by a commission without authority of law to hear and determine, or whether the grievances complained of shall be set forth and declared misdemeanors and submitted to the courts for adjudication, like any other misdemeanor or grievance.

It has been said that the Senate bill provides against pooling. The system of pooling is one of the gravest and most serious objections the people have to the present railroad management. I insist that the Senate bill does not provide against pooling, but that it admits the principle of pooling. It does it in a qualified way, but it admits the right of the railroads to pool, and the effect of pooling is a monopoly of all the railroads by a combination of some of them; and what they regard as an equitable distribution of the profits arising from transportation on any one of the roads in the combination is made for the common good of all. That is pooling. It is making a corner upon transportation; it is forestalling the market upon transportation. The House bill, in unqualified terms, makes that unlawful. The Senate bill makes it lawful.

Is not this so? Let us see. The Senate bill, in section 11, page 10 of the last print we have, declares one of the objects to be:

For the prevention of such pooling arrangements and agreements to refrain from just competition as may tend to impose unreasonable burdens upon said commerce among the States.

That is, the commission is to determine what arrangement and agreement will tend to impose unreasonable burdens upon the commerce among the States. That is a question which according to the Senate bill is not to be determined judicially, but to be passed upon by the commission, and when passed upon by the commission no remedy whatever can be applied by the commission to redress that grievance.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe the Senator was reading from the Senate bill at section 11.

Mr. MAXEY. I was, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. That section has no legislation in it any further than an instruction to the commission to examine into the question of pooling, as well as every other question named there, and to report to a future Congress.

Mr. MAXEY. That is precisely the objection which I have to the whole theory of the Senate bill. You create a commission, and you clothe that commission with power to go out into the country and hear complaints, and after they have heard the complaints they are powerless to afford a remedy for those complaints. That is the objection which I have to the whole theory of the bill. It is a promise to the ear to be broken to the hope. On the contrary, the House bill in terms declares:

And it shall be unlawful for any person or persons carrying property as aforesaid to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination for the pooling of freights, or to pool the freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion of them.

This distinction is as broad as the difference between sun in the noonday heavens and the darkest midnight. One tolerates and agrees to the propriety and the right of the pooling system, and then says that any arrangement which shall tend to interfere with commerce shall be reported. Who reports it? The commission. When it is reported what good does that do? Who determines it? Then you go through all the machinery of laying the matter thus reported before the district attorney, and after a while, if you can work up a case, it goes to the courts. In other words, a man who is really aggrieved has to go before the commission and have his case looked into by the commission, with all the expense accompanying that investigation, and after he has done that it is laid before the district attorney, and if there is enough in it to make a case for a bill in equity or an indictment, then you have to send that to United States commissioners to take up the proof, and again comes in this double expense.

The effect of it is in its very nature and necessarily to deter any man who is really aggrieved from ever making an effort to have a remedy for his grievances, whereas the House bill is both a square and manly measure. It declares pooling, which is a monopoly, which is a contract in restraint of trade, which is a forestalling of the market, to be unlawful. It merely repeats what has been known to be the common law for centuries, and makes that a part and parcel of the law of the land.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have had more difficulty in dealing with this question than any of the important questions presented at the present session of Congress. The people of Ohio are very largely interested in railroad transportation. We have 7,200 miles of railways, probably as large a number of miles in proportion to the extent of our territory as any State in the Union. Our people are largely interested as owners and managers of railways, the capital and debts of such corporations amounting to over $500,000,000. Therefore it is that the people of Ohio take the deepest interest in the proposed legislation by Congress. I can safely say that, without division of party, the people of Ohio are in favor of strong, just, and liberal legislation upon the question of transportation and the management and control by Congress of interstate commerce.

There is no doubt expressed anywhere but that Congress alone has the power to deal with this question. The interstate commerce extends to the great body of the commerce of this country. The local commerce within the limits even of a State so large as Ohio is comparatively small. Nearly all the surplus productions of Ohio are shipped to States beyond our limits, and nearly all that is consumed not the products of Ohio has been the subject of interstate commerce. So that I may say that the body of the commerce of the State is interstate. It so happens, too, that nearly all the great leading lines of railway in the United States cross that State; certainly all the four great trunk-lines running from east to west, and some of those running from north to south. So our people are deeply interested in this question, and I have no doubt but that both my colleague and myself would agree that the people of Ohio are more intensely interested in the subjects embraced in the bill than in any other bill pending before Congress.

In respect to the power of Congress over the subject, as I have said, it is indisputable. We find it plainly written in the Constitution:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States.

It is a broad and exclusive power that has not yet been fully exercised as it was expected to be by the framers of the Constitution. It is only asserting a trite fact when I say that but for the necessity of regulating commerce with foreign nations and among the States the Constitution probably would not have been formed at the time it was. In the very first movements to form the National Government the importance of regulating commerce among the States was declared to be the leading motive for the formation of the National Government.

It must be remembered that at that time commerce among the States was but a very small item compared to what it is now. All the States were located along the line of the Atlantic Ocean. Our commerce with foreign nations then was immensely greater than our commerce among the States, but the enormous development of this country has changed the whole order of things. Now our foreign commerce, exports and imports together, embraces about $1,500,000,000, and our internal commerce is estimated at $15,000,000,000, or ten to one. It is pretty difficult indeed to estimate what is the extent of our interstate commerce. It is so vast that figures seem to fail to express the immense extent of it.

It is affirmed that the navigation along the Ohio River and the Mississippi River is greater than our whole external commerce. It is said that the navigation of the lakes far exceeds our commerce with all foreign countries. So the question we are dealing with is not only with greater amounts than any other problem before us, but affects every class of our people in the broad extent of our country.

Under these circumstances, I have felt it my duty, without heretofore taking any share in this debate, not being a member of the committee which framed the bill, to examine it with all the care and attention I could give to it, and I shall express my opinions in as few words as possible as to the choice to be made between the two bills.

We have two propositions before us, one called the Reagan bill, which has been debated and passed by the House of Representatives, and another called the Cullom or Senate bill, framed by one of our committees, and which has been debated here in antagonism to the Reagan bill. We are called upon to choose between them. I would vote for either if the other was away. It is, therefore, a mere choice between the two measures; and I propose now to give the reasons why I think on the whole the Senate bill is the most conservative in its character, the most wide-reaching in its effect, the most beneficial to the people of all the States interested, the most beneficial even to the people of Texas and to the regions where the Reagan bill seems to have the greatest strength.

If I can convince any Senator, as I have convinced myself, that this will be the effect of the Senate bill as against the Reagan bill, then I shall have at least justified the vote that I shall give in favor of the Senate bill, and I shall have justified my conduct to my constituents who are writing to me in great number to act upon this question promptly. That general public opinion has been in favor of the Reagan bill solely because it proposed legislation controlling railways, but, as a matter of course, the people have not yet studied or examined the details or provisions of the Senate bill, so they have not been able to give any opinion on one as against the other.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator states, and I was very glad to hear him say so, that he would vote for either bill if the other was out of the way. Now, I ask him as a practical legislator with a great many years' experience, if there is not a far greater probability that if the Senate votes for the Reagan bill it will become a law rather than if the Senator should vote for the Senate bill it can become a law? As a question of practical legislation, would it not be better for the Senator to support the Reagan bill in order to procure a law on the subject?

Mr. SHERMAN. If I shall be able to show that the Senate bill is better than the Reagan bill the Senator ought to join with me in passing the Senate bill, and the House, I have no doubt, would agree to it. I know the feeling in the House, because I have conversed with members of the House of both political parties who voted for the Reagan bill, and they are not entirely satisfied with its provisions, but with the expectation and hope that the Senate would make such changes as would make it more wide-reaching, comprehensive, and effective than the Reagan bill, they gave it their support.

The reason why Congress has not heretofore acted upon this question is very palpable. Our whole commerce is changed, not only in its extent but in the mode of transportation. Within my period of manhood every railroad in the United States has been built. When, as a young man, I crossed the Alleghany Mountains and struck a railroad at Cumberland, Md., I thought it was the greatest wonder in the world. Up to that time I had never seen a railroad. Indeed all the railroads in the United States have been built since the period of manhood of the majority of Senators. Even that great motive power, the steamboat, has been invented, devised, and brought into being since the framers of the Constitution finished their handiwork.

So we are dealing now not with a power that is doubtful, not upon a question on which we should have any difference of opinion, but we are dealing with new agencies of commerce devised in our generation or in the preceding one, and we should bring to the subject the lights of modern experience as well as the ideas and objects that prevailed when the Constitution was formed. Steamboats and railroads are now the chief agencies of commerce. They have revolutionized commerce. No longer does any one depend upon the slow-moving sailing craft or upon the prairie "schooner" or on the old Conestoga wagon over the mountains of Pennsylvania. Our modes of communication are entirely different, and therefore we must look upon this question as practical men, and conform our measures to the wonderful development that has been made in our productions, the revolution in our means of transportation, and the almost fabulous sums invested in these new agencies of commerce.

Nearly every question which affects the problem we are now meeting has arisen within the last twenty years, because it must be remembered that until 1866 nearly every railroad in the United States was merely local in its character. There was no interstate commerce until in the last twenty or thirty years. For instance, the Erie road ended and terminated at Dunkirk, and the State of Pennsylvania refused to allow that road and other roads to cross the State of Pennsylvania at the little panhandle up on the Lake Shore. The roads of Ohio began and terminated in Ohio. The great New York Central, which now stretches out with its mighty arm across the continent, had its terminus at Buffalo, and that road itself was divided into seven distinct corporations, and it required years upon years to combine it into a single line from New York to Buffalo.

Take the great Pennsylvania Railroad, the tonnage of which is so enormous—more than 22,000,000 tons a year. That road itself was a local road. Within my recollection, yes, within twenty years, its terminus was in Pittsburgh, Pa. Going from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh it there terminated, and there it joined another road chartered by Pennsylvania to reach the Ohio State line, and there the line was taken up across the State of Ohio by another road, and across Indiana by another road, and into Chicago, Ill., by another road. All these roads have been consolidated within thirty years.

All the elements of this problem have changed, and now we have connecting lines of railroad, which Congress required to be made. The act of 1866 was one of the wisest laws passed by Congress. Up to that time there was no continuous and continuing lines of railroad going from State to State and doing the commerce of a continent. They were mere local roads or local lines, subject only to local regulations. Now they are transcontinental; they are more than national—they are international. These lines have been formed by their connecting links, one after another.

I ought to have said that when the Baltimore and Ohio road was started it was purely a local road, and when it approached the borders of the State of Pennsylvania that State refused to allow the Baltimore and Ohio road to cross its borders, and for years that was a matter of contention. The Baltimore and Ohio was compelled to deflect this line to Bellaire instead of the natural route to Pittsburgh. It was purely a local road; and could only go through, as it did, with the assent of the State of Virginia. When it came to the Ohio line, Ohio, by another railroad, took up the Baltimore and Ohio line and extended it.

Until within twenty or twenty-five years these were merely local roads without the slightest power to contract outside of the limits of the State, but gradually from a community of interests these connecting lines formed their links by pooling, you may say, or a species of pooling, by connecting their separate corporations, binding them in connecting-links by contract, until Congress in 1866 declared, as the first regulation of interstate railway commerce of an effective character in this country, that where railroads connected they should be run as continuous lines. That is the law which was referred to by my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. He says that he was part and parcel of the law and helped to make it. That was the first law passed by Congress to make interstate commerce possible in this country, and that has been done within twenty years.

We thus by our law connected these lines of railroad so that instead of being local corporations they are great national corporations. The Pennsylvania line extends in one unbroken management from New York to Chicago, with interlacing lines stretching every way like a great tree.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio, by his permission, whether the railroads enjoy that privilege under the authority conferred by Congress, or whether the privilege which they have of uniting and consolidating is not derived by State legislation from the State charters of the companies that are thus consolidated?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the whole of that grew out of the fact that the corporations were authorized to contract and to be contracted with, and connecting lines by mutual agreements made arrangements with each other. I do not know how the State of Delaware could give any railroad in Delaware the right to go into Pennsylvania. The National Government can give that right as a regulation of interstate commerce, or by mutual agreement between adjoining States the power to connect may be given to corporations created by such States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does not the Senator see that a State Legislature may charter a company and give that company the power to consolidate with any other company chartered by another State on such terms and conditions as the two companies may agree upon? That is frequently done. But the Senator was referring to an act of Congress, and I wanted to ascertain whether there was any authority conferred by Congress under which any railroad companies were to-day operating conjointly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The States incorporating two separate companies may authorize them to contract with each other and to make these arrangements, but Congress made it the duty of the roads to do so. It was not a mere permission to contract and extend and connect their lines of communication, but Congress made it imperative, and two railroads that merely touch each other by contact are compelled by the terms of that law to make through rates the whole extent of their lines. There is no doubt whatever but what that is within the power of Congress, because the power of Congress to regulate commerce includes also the power to regulate corporations created by States as well as natural individuals.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will not think me impertinent for asking the question—for it is information I want——

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have had some difficulty in arriving at a conclusion in my own mind as to what was the proper thing to do in reference to these bills. I wish to ask the Senator whether under the power to regulate commerce he thinks Congress has any authority whatever to deal with the question of freights and fares charged by railroads? I should like to hear his views on that subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt of it. I do not want to go into these collateral questions, because it will prolong my remarks. I did not intend to speak long, but wished merely to give the reasons why I prefer one bill rather than another.

I do not think Congress has the right to impair the obligation of contracts. I do not know by what authority Congress can change the contract made between the State and the individual, as is proposed in the Reagan bill, by providing that no railroad in the United States shall charge more than 3 cents a mile, although its construction may have cost a million dollars a mile, and although the State may have authorized the railroad to charge 5 cents a mile. Congress can not change the contract between the State and an individual or corporation.

I have been looking for gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber to correct this flaw in the Reagan bill. I should like to know, and to have them answer at their leisure, where is the authority in Congress to change a contract between a corporation and a State. Here is a question where the doctrine of States' rights may come in. It seems to me that wherever States' rights should be asserted to do justice to a corporation they are not asserted, but where they may be used to rob or plunder a corporation they are asserted and enforced.

That Congress ought to legislate upon this subject is manifest to everybody. The railroads engaged in interstate commerce have cost, or are represented by securities amounting to $7,000,000,000. The number of miles of railroad is over 120,000 miles. All the legislation that can affect these railroads must come from the National Government. Their local charters end with local boundaries. The States of Pennsylvania and New York, though powerful and great States, have no right to regulate contracts made beyond their boundary line. They have no right to regulate anything in the way of commerce extending beyond their boundary line, and unless the railroad corporations are subject to the jurisdiction of Congress they are a power within a power, stronger even than the State.

If it were not for the power of Congress over these corporations they would be a supreme power in this country. But Congress is armed with full power to do by them as they may think it right in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, and without respect to local laws. It is Congress, therefore, that must act upon this subject, and all of us on this side of the Chamber, as well as on the other, admit that the power of Congress is not only ample but it is exclusive, for if it should be claimed that what we attempt to do here can not be done, then a railroad corporation, armed with the charter of a State and with the authority of the National Government to connect at State lines across a continent, would be above and beyond all law. I do not believe that at all. I believe that the New York Central Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad, two of the greatest railroad corporations in this country, are just as amenable to the laws of the land, just as much within the local power of Congress, as I myself am subject to its jurisdiction.

Now, Mr. President, what is the duty of Congress in this respect? The first duty of all is to protect the people from imposition, from injustice, from wrong. Therefore I have no difficulty in dealing with the Reagan bill by admitting that with the exception of the attempt to change the contract between the State government and the corporation Congress has the power to do all that is asserted by the Reagan bill.

This is but the beginning of legislation in regard to railroads. Hereafter it will continue and increase. I have no doubt that the making of suitable regulations in regard to railroads in this country will be one of the great and immediate duties of Congress. I am therefore not disturbed about the power, but I say it is the duty of Congress to protect the people from injustice by the railroad corporations. I am willing to go as far as any one in doing justice, but I do not want to go so far as to destroy these great agencies of modern commerce. I do not want to destroy the goose that lays the golden egg. It is the commerce of these railroads that has united our country more than any other circumstance. It is the commerce carried on by these railroads that has enabled us to people and populate a vast region of country in the West. It is the engineering, progressive, pushing force of these railroads into the wilderness that has made our continent and our country a magnificent whole. Before that time California was separated from the Missouri and the Mississippi. The North and the South were widely separated from each other for want of communication. Railroads have done more to knit and bind this country into one magnificent whole than all other agencies combined. Therefore, while we protect our own people, we ought not to destroy the railroads.

I have no doubt that the power of Congress will be appealed to—it is appealed to now—not only to protect the people but to protect the railroads themselves and the owners of those railroads. Within the twenty years since the railroads have formed their connecting lines they have been eaten to death by parasites. Every railroad has had its little inner ring and all sorts of cunning schemes and devices have been made and entered into not only to cheat the people but to cheat their own stockholders. I doubt if there is a single railroad in our country that has not in it and about it, composed of its officers, some of these parasites which prevent proper dividends from being paid to the stockholders. What are they? The sleeping-car company is one. Railroad corporations make an arrangement with a sleeping-car company, an organization entirely outside of them, to run cars over their road. Such contracts become much more valuable property than the road itself which carries the cars over the rails.

Another mode is by express or freight companies. I believe that this is pretty well broken up now, but for years express and freight companies have been incorporated and lines have been started, the Red Line, the Blue Line, and all sorts of lines, over the railroads. In this way a property right was created by a contract between the board of directors of a railroad with some favored individuals in the railroad, and then privileges and rates were given to the express companies which bled and ate the life and substance and property of the railroad stockholders. Those have existed, and I have no doubt we shall be called upon to protect the stockholders from this imposition. So with telegraph lines. Besides that, many boards of directors by voting themselves high salaries and creating enormous expense, run the road not for the benefit of the owners, but for the benefit of a favored few.

Therefore it is possible in our country that railroad stock may sell for $20 or $30 a share in the market, when every man knows that this railroad stock will never pay a dividend as long as water runs or fire burns. But it is the power to control the corporation given by the votes of the stock that enables men to seize and hold a great corporation and pay enormous sums for the stock of the road merely to exercise the power granted by the corporate law for their own gain and profit.

There are these and others; but I am not going to waste much time about it. In some cases salaries are given which shock almost our sense of justice, salaries not only by one corporation but by a dozen corporations. Not only that, but in some cases, although the railroads are represented by directors who are sworn, or at least whose duty it is made to guard the property they represent, they pile mortgage upon mortgage on the property, create income bonds, preferred stock, and all sorts of liens; and in that way many of the best railroads in this country, that would earn a fair dividend on their actual cost, by subtle plans on the part of the stockholders, the interest of the innocent citizen, men, women, and children, who perhaps have invested their little sums for stock, is fairly eaten out, lost, and destroyed.

There is no doubt that Congress, which is now exercising its power in this country to protect the people, will be soon called upon to protect the stockholders, and I shall be just as ready then to vote reasonable legislation to protect against these abuses as I would vote for the bill to protect against undue discriminations, fares, and tolls in favor of particular individuals. I speak of this merely to show that this power over the subject-matter is vital to us, and that we ought to so act upon this bill as to show that we are fit to be trusted with this great and important power.

I say that legislation by Congress upon this subject is demanded not only in the interest of the people, but in the interest of property honestly held and honestly earned. At this time the railroad system is in very great danger. No one can doubt that the enormous competition which has been created by rival lines has in many cases reduced the profits of the railroads and their earnings. The necessity of providing for dividends on watered stock and the like has been so great that there are but very few railroads of the United States, powerful as they are, which can pay dividends to their stockholders. Therefore any hostile legislation to further cripple their business ought to be very carefully guarded. If we do not look out we may really break down those corporations and compel them to divide the long-extended lines into broken links, and then the rates of transportation will rapidly advance. The decrease in the market value of railroad securities in the last two years is represented to be about 40 per cent. It has disappeared in the market value. Few of the roads are now earning dividends.

It has been sometimes said in this debate that the law of competition is a sufficient regulation for railroad corporations. In some respects the law of competition has worked well. Since these lines have been connected the cost of transportation in the United States has been reduced in a marvelous degree. I remember when I was a member of what is called the Windom Committee on Transportation we traveled all over the United States; we took the testimony of all the expert railroad men we could find and men engaged in commerce of various kinds. Upon one question we found a singular unanimity of opinion, and that was that the minimum cost of transportation was 1 cent per mile. The figures were produced, the actual details, the expenses shown, and this simple problem was absolutely demonstrated.

It was shown by the general superintendent of the New York Central, who gave us the details of the cost of transportation, and the same evidence was given by other corporations, that the minimum of transportation was 1 cent a ton per mile. That would be $10 a ton from Chicago to New York, the distance being about a thousand miles. That was their statement of what is the lowest cost. Now, this system of competition has gone on since then, and there has been a progress made in railroad building, a change so great that it is almost marvelous when I now think of it. That was only ten years ago, and yet since that time by the introduction of steel rails, by new and improved cars, by new machinery in the way of brakes, by a thousand ingenious devices of our own people, the same freight can be transported over the same railroad for less than one-half of what it could be only twelve years ago.

I have here a table cut from one of the commercial papers showing the enormous reduction that has been made by competition in long lines of transportation. I find that the freight from New York to Chicago on a bushel of wheat weighing sixty pounds was in 1868, 29 cents; in 1869, 25 cents; in 1870, 22 cents; in 1872, 28 cents, and so on. Then running down again, in 1874 it was 16 cents; in 1875, 14 cents, and so on until in 1884 the freight on a bushel of wheat from Chicago to New York was 9¾ cents. So that the freight by competition has been reduced to 9¾ cents. Here is the statement:

WHEAT PRICES AND FREIGHTS.

[From the Cincinnati Price Current.]

In the following compilation will be shown the annual wheat crops of the United States and exports (flour included), stated in millions of bushels, with the lowest and average price of No. 2 wheat in Chicago, and average rates of freight from Chicago to New York per bushel of wheat by lake and rail, with the lowest Chicago price and freight to New York added, annually for seventeen years, from 1868 to 1885, inclusive:

1883	450	111	90	101¾	11⅛	101⅛

In the above the exports are for twelve months beginning on July 1 of the year stated. The freight rates for 1884 are the average from January 1 to September 1.

What more do you want? If any man had told me when we were around on that pilgrimage seeking for cheap transportation that without a law of Congress, merely as the effect of competition, the price of the transportation of wheat would be reduced from 29 cents, as it was then, to 9 cents, I would have said that our committee ought to disband because the thing would work out its own cure. So it will to a great extent, but I shall take occasion to refer to the low rates. The rates are now so low from the great competing points owing to competition, say from Chicago, Saint Louis, or Cincinnati, that if our Texas granngers should try to reduce them more they would break up every railroad corporation in the country. The rates can not be further reduced. There is a point to which you can go, and beyond that you will draw the life-blood.

The attempt to carry wheat at a lower rate than 9¾ cents in a long haul would be absolute destruction to all the railroad corporations. They can not do it. It may be that we shall have some new invention; new devices, that will still enable them more and more to cheapen the rate. We know that the great competing railroad companies, each of them representing probably a hundred million dollars, are eagerly watching out for every chance of competition, and they will reduce the rate still more and more. That has been done by competition probably more than could have been done by legislation.

If I were seeking only by the passage of this bill cheap transportation, I would say, "hands off; let these men compete with each other." But that is not all that we are trying to accomplish by the bill. It is claimed that while from certain points transportation is low enough, probably; from other points shorter in distance and shorter in haul the rates are much higher, and that there is an unjust discrimination made between citizens, between towns, between States, and between individuals; that the railroad companies make contracts with favored individuals by which they give them the monopoly of transportation.

The common case pointed out by the Senator from Kentucky, I believe, was that the Standard Oil Company had a rate which actually drove out of existence all competitors in their line of business. That is wrong, intrinsically wrong, and I shall vote to break it down if there is power enough in Congress to do it. If these corporations are soulless, they ought to be heartless, they ought to make no discrimination, giving no favor, but making the same rule apply to all classes of transportation under the same conditions; and to the extent that this measure will tend to effect that object I think it is of vital importance.

The Reagan bill makes ample provision against discrimination. It says that no discrimination shall be made. It forbids it. It declares that if it is done it shall be illegal, and then provides a penalty at the end of a long lawsuit, and the measure of the penalty is three times the damage done. The damage may be $10, in which case the penalty would be $30, and then the plaintiff who has prosecuted his suit under the operation of that bill, or has sought his remedy, would probably be broken up in the contest, and the railroad would not care about drawing a check for $30, but would pay him in silver dollars, or in any way they thought would be easiest. The first objection I have to the Reagan bill, and I beg Senators to think of it, is that it is a penal bill, penal in its nature and in all its provisions. It has no remedial feature in it, except the remedy that can be recovered at the end of a long lawsuit. You can not make such a bill as that useful or operative, except to punish crime, and you can not make this a crime of a magnitude and character which would justify you in sending to the penitentiary the president or the directors of the company. If you choose to do it, if you attempt to carry the measure by penal law, you ought to furnish penalties and punishments that would send the president of the railroad to the penitentiary.

But that is not all. The Reagan bill provides that the remedy shall be in the State courts, in any court where an agent can be found. Whether the injury occurred in that State makes no difference. Wherever the man who complains of the action of the railroad chooses to sue he can sue. He can go before a justice of the peace, if the amount is within the jurisdiction of a justice, or go before a county court, if it is over a hundred dollars, and commence suit in any tribunal. What is the effect of the judgment? You may make the railroad pay the judgment, but what does that amount to? Nothing.

Besides there is no appeal from that decision. Suppose the railroad insist that they are not violating the law, must they try that great question, which turns upon the construction of an act of Congress, before a justice of the peace in Texas? Must they try that great question before some local tribunal in a State perhaps hostile to this legislation? Must they try that question in a State which probably does not own a single share of the railroad stock affected by the operations of that judgment?

According to the proposed law, although the question involved may be a construction of the Constitution of the United States, although it may be the construction of the very law that we are passing, yet that case can in no event be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States or to any United States court. Thus thirty-eight different tribunals all over this country, with their varying decisions, may be called upon to decide upon the terms of this measure without any power whatever to take the case to a court whose decision will be universally acknowledged. This, it seems to me, is the worst feature of the Reagan bill. It seems to be State rights gone mad. The very cause of action is given by an act of Congress. The whole thing is granted by Congress, and is national in its nature. No State could give such authority over a corporation beyond its limits, and yet this question, growing out of national law, can not be brought to a national court, but must be decided finally in a local tribunal.

The language is plain and clear. No such measure as that can meet my sanction. If under the circumstances and under the clauses of the judiciary act the case involved in any of these local courts does involve a construction of an act of Congress or of the Constitution, or any national question, then the right to carry it before the national authorities must be given. Otherwise you have struck out the whole foundation of your judiciary system. We have a national judiciary to construe the laws of Congress and pass upon all questions arising under the national law; and yet the bill excludes the Supreme Court of the United States and all the national courts from any jurisdiction over any case that may arise under it, and confines it to the local tribunal. But that is not all.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. I refer the Senator to the House or Reagan bill, in which I think he will see it is provided that a citizen who has been injured by a railroad company may prosecute his remedy in either a State or Federal court, as may happen to have the jurisdiction of it in the locality.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is, it gives him the choice.

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir; it gives him the choice.

Mr. SHERMAN. But when he commences his suit in a State court, as he always would, the decision of that court is final, and no provision is made to transfer the case; indeed it is prohibited that it shall be transferred, to the United States court.

Mr. COKE. A transfer of the cause to the Federal court is prohibited; but I ask the Senator if there are not methods of reviewing the decisions of State courts, outside of this proposed act, already provided by writ of error?

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe that the Supreme Court would hold without question that that provision of the proposed law is unconstitutional; but I do not want to pass an unconstitutional law merely to allow the Supreme Court to reverse it.

Mr. COKE. The question I put to the Senator is, if every citizen has not a right already granted, in a mode already provided, to bring before the Supreme Court of the United States an infraction of a law of the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. I doubt very much whether this provision does not fall within the decision in the case of Prigg vs. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, where it was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that Congress had no power to impose upon any State an act in the nature of the enforcement of what would be regarded as a criminal act. The act in this case is in the nature of a quitam action. It is an action for a penalty. I have not the slightest idea but what the Supreme Court would hold it to be unconstitutional, at least to the extent that it denies to the citizen of the United States living not in Texas where the suit is brought, but living say in Pennsylvania, the right by writ of error to transfer the case to the Supreme Court of the United States. If they do it they do it because the law is unconstitutional which attempts to restrain it.

But that is not all. I do not believe we have the power to confer jurisdiction upon the State courts to enforce penalties. That is fair and square in the face of the decision of the Supreme Court. Here is a penal action where treble damages are to be allowed. What right has Congress to impose upon a State the enforcement of these laws or to confer jurisdiction upon it? Any State might refuse to do it clearly.

Mr. COKE. I will ask the Senator, with his permission, if the laws of Congress are not supreme all over the United States, and if they are supreme I ask him if the State courts can not enforce them?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the laws of Congress are supreme over a State to compel a State to pass a law to suit our convenience. Why should the United States, with an ample judiciary power, with authority to create courts anywhere and everywhere of all kinds and descriptions, rely absolutely and exclusively upon State courts to pass upon the construction of our own laws? I do not think that this is a provision which should appear in the law. I believe it is plainly unconstitutional.

I should like Senators to answer me another question. What right has Congress to change a contract made between a State and a citizen? It is true that the provision of the Constitution——

Mr. COKE rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. COKE. I understood the Senator to put a question to me.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will have time enough to answer.

Mr. COKE. I understand the Senator to refer to the provision in the House bill prescribing 3 cents per mile as the maximum rate.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I refer to.

Mr. COKE. I voted to strike out that provision, and all the gentlemen on this side of the Chamber in favor of the Reagan bill so voted, while the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber voted to keep it in. I ask the Senator to propound his question to some of his friends over there.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps, taking the usual course which I have seen pursued on both sides very often, we require you to perfect your own proposition in your own way. Perhaps that is the way, but at any rate that provision is clearly unconstitutional. Senators around me say, for I do not think I was present at the time, that other questions were involved in the same motion. But I certainly assure the Senator that if he will move to strike out that proposition I shall vote with him to improve the bill to that extent.

Mr. COKE. It will be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is another feature of the Reagan bill which struck me at first with a good deal of force, and it was only after a careful examination that I was able to satisfy myself that it ought not to be put in. I refer to the following provision, in section 4 of the Reagan bill:

> That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as provided in the first section of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation for a similar amount and kind of property, for carrying, receiving, storing, forwarding, or handling the same, for a shorter than for a longer distance, which includes the shorter, on any one railroad or pipe-line.

As an abstract proposition it would appear to be right and just that no railroad should be authorized to charge less for a greater distance for transportation of the same kind of property than for a shorter distance. That would seem to be right and fair, but when you come to examine this question in all its surroundings such a provision as that would in my judgment not only do great harm to the people of the United States, but I believe it would confer a great benefit upon the railroad companies to the injury of the people; and I hope my friend from Texas will listen to me upon that point. I have no doubt that if that provision should become a law, wheat would not be transported from Chicago to New York for 9¾ cents a bushel, by a great way. It would leap up at once to a rate in harmony with the local rate.

I know enough about corporations and railroads to know that the first effect of this provision would be to compel an advance of freights at all the competing points. Why? If the Pennsylvania Railroad, for instance, should attempt to carry wheat at the rate of 9¾ cents a bushel over the whole line of its road from Chicago to Philadelphia and from all the points along that line, the result would be bankruptcy to any railroad in the United States which would undertake to carry all its freight upon that kind of a rate. Before submitting to bankruptcy the railroad would take the other alternative; they would raise the rate at Chicago, and then "all Rome would howl." Then our Western grangers and our Texas friends would begin to feel that their cattle would have to pay a considerably larger sum. All our Western friends, whose country has been developed by railroad competition, would find then that they would have no advantage as they now have over the people of a State like Ohio, where we lie midway between the great Western ports and the Atlantic coast.

If I were speaking only for the people of my own State, and only in a narrow, selfish interest, I should vote for this proposition, because I know the effect of it. While it might not reduce our local freights in Ohio, it would advance the freights in the West, and would relieve us from the enormous competition which Iowa now makes with us in raising wheat, pork, corn, and all those things; but I do not think it would be right. Nor do I think it is wrong for the railroad companies to make this discrimination in favor of competing points. Why? It is known that the great body of the transportation of a railroad is its local transportation. Different railroads differ in regard to that; but the general rule is that the local transportation is 70 per cent. and the through transportation is 30 per cent., but in most cases it is 85 per cent. local and 15 per cent. through.

For the purpose of gaining a share of the through transportation from Chicago or Saint Louis or the great interior points, the railroads struggle for the through business, because whatever they can get from that source is so much added to their income without much increasing their expenses. They struggle for it and make competition and make the lowest rates of transportation; but if you relieve them from that necessity and make a mandatory iron rule by which they shall charge no more from Chicago than from Fort Wayne or other places it will raise their rate, and they will stand by that rate and say that "Congress, composed largely of our fellow-citizens from Western States, compel us to do it in order to live." That would be the effect of it; and I do not think that any railroad man who hears me or any man accustomed to their mode of business would think otherwise.

I have heard the remark made in the course of this debate that the railroads would not carry wheat for less than it would cost them. No, but it must be remembered that in speaking of the whole cost of a railroad you must take into account the interest on their bonds; you must take into account all of what are called in technical phrase fixed charges, charges which can not be avoided, not only the running expenses and interest upon their debt, but fair dividends to their stockholders, proper improvements and additions to their equipment. When they are contesting for the trade in Chicago they can dispose of the fixed charges for the competition and say, "If you can get a portion of the through freight from Chicago we can afford to carry it at a reasonable profit on the actual running cost." I hope Senators will understand the difference between them.

The running cost of a railroad is the cost of the wear and tear of railroad cars, the wear and tear of machinery, the pay of the engineer and the brakeman, and that is about all. If they can get from this through traffic, which gives to the West an enormous benefit over our traffic, simply a compensation for their running charges or a reasonable profit, they will compete until they get their share of it. That is all there is about it. But if, on the other hand, they shall not be permitted to do that, but shall charge as much under all circumstances from Chicago through to New York as from all the intermediate points, as a matter of course they will first make a rate which they think is just and fair for their local stations, and then they will put Chicago at the same rate, and if you complain they will point to your own law as a justification and an excuse for it. There can be no doubt about it.

There is another thing I heard my friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] was very much troubled about—pooling. Pooling sometimes reduces rates; sometimes it may be made to increase rates. Where there is but a small transportation, as on the failure of a crop or the like, the freights have fallen off largely, and then pooling prevents competition, because there is not enough business for all the competing roads; but when there is a great crop as there was two or three years ago, or whenever there is a great crop, using all the equipments and machinery of all the competing roads, as a matter of course pooling is beneficial, because they are enabled then at less cost to divide the business among them. On some roads it may be best and most economical to run all the wheat, on another road it may be best to run all the cattle, and they divide the freight by arrangement between them, some carrying one article, some another, according to the grades, the equipments, the nature of the road, and a thousand circumstances which enter into it. In such cases the pooling arrangement is a beneficial one, and instead of adding to the cost it actually diminishes it. So if we attempt to impose upon these companies an absolute iron rule which would prevent pooling in all cases, it might defeat the object of this bill.

Mr. President, I do not propose to go any further in the discussion of the Reagan bill. I have no doubt that the general rules laid down by it are right. I respect the desire of the Senators who seek to pass it, but I say it will not accomplish the object they seek to gain, but, on the other hand, it will add to the burdens of all the Western people by compelling railroads to charge them local rates substantially. It will prevent railroads from making such arrangements with each other as will enable them to run cheaply and successfully all the vast products of this country. It will compel a discrimination in many cases, because where a railroad has an advantage by physical law, as the New York Central Railroad has an advantage by physical law, having a lower grade, if they are all compelled to charge the same rate at all times, it gives to the road having physical advantages a great advantage over another road that has had to overcome mountains and cross valleys.

Now, a few words in regard to the Senate bill. The Senate bill goes upon the idea of a board of arbitration. I think if I had been called upon to frame a bill I should have called it the board of arbitration instead of a commission. But a name is nothing in a matter of this kind. What is the theory of the Senate bill? We know now that the freight charges and the regulations of railroads are generally made by a little congress of five or six people chosen one from each of the great railroads. They meet at Chicago, or at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, or some other place where it is convenient and pleasant, and they sit down and make laws which affect every person in the United States. Sometimes they discriminate against persons, sometimes against places. They make unreasonable rates from particular localities, they make discriminating rates against certain articles, they lower rates in regard to other articles not founded upon any reason:

In other words, as I have heard one of them say, they put such rates as the market will afford without much respect to their equity. They are compelled to do it. They are legislating for a local corporate interest. Unquestionably in doing this they often do injustice by their discrimination, and the people complain all over the country. The people say, "We ought to have redress." Take a town in Ohio, where the people say, "Our charges are more than another neighboring town where there is more competition." That is wrong, and everybody says it is wrong, but what is their redress? A suit in the courts against a great railroad corporation. The suit under the Reagan bill would be the merest farce, to enforce a penalty of three times the amount involved.

On the other hand, the bill of the Senate provides for a board of arbitration, not a little local court whose opinions would not be respected by the corporation or anybody else, but a high tribunal composed of men equal in dignity to the Supreme Court of the United States. There any citizen may seek his redress; any town may make its plea. That tribunal, in the terms of the bill, is armed not with the power of issuing execution but armed with the moral power of the people of the United States. A complaint is made in the name of the people, under this proposed law, before this tribunal of nine distinguished judges, among the best in our country, who ought to be non-partisan in their character, because the bill I believe provides for that—men of the highest type, who are not interested in the subject-matter. The complaint is sent to that tribunal and they hear it in a summary manner, as they could rapidly do, and they would say at once, "This discrimination is unjust; it is wrong; we pronounce it to be, in the language of the law, extortion." Now, no railroad will submit to that. No railroad would violate in a plain case the injunction of this high tribunal, because if they did the decision of the tribunal would be certified to the proper officers of the Government, and, armed with this decision, with the facts and circumstances of the case and the opinion of the court, the parties complaining would apply to the courts of law.

The only reason, I suppose, why the commission is not armed with the power of judgment and execution is that under the Constitution they can not be. They are not a court, in the true sense of the word. They might be created a court if necessary, but I think the general judgment of the people would be against that. If they were constituted a court they would be judges for life, and these are to be men in active life, able to work, able to take testimony and to hear causes. In other words, they ought to be men of such activity that they can travel around through their respective circuits, receiving complaints and hearing complaints so far as they are authorized to hear them. The moral powers of such a commission would be greater than the judgment of fifty State courts, which can not be supervised.

With the exception of the provision about the long haul and the short haul I say that the Senate bill contains every safeguard, every restriction, every provision against injustice that is contained in the Reagan bill. Its language against discrimination is as strong as that in the Reagan bill. It does not prescribe as an absolute rule that the charges should not be in any case that may be conceived less on the short than on the long haul, but it does provide that the charges shall be reasonable, and it is authorized to pass and report upon the question as to how far rules may be prescribed in the future. I only utter the language and repeat the very admirable statement made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], when I say that it contains more wide-reaching provisions that will command the respect of the railroads and command enforcement and execution than the Reagan bill.

The more I study it I regard it with more favor. At first I feared it was not strong enough, but I believe now that it contains the foundation of a code which will be built up by the railroad commission into a body of laws as the commercial law of England was built up by the masterly ability of Chief-Justice Holt and Lord Mansfield. It has been said over and over again that the commercial laws of that time, without the aid of acts of Parliament, were built up by judicial decisions by those great men in a time when commerce was reviving over the country. All the laws relating to bills of exchange and promissory notes and a vast field of commercial law were the dictate of judicial decision. I believe that this commission, if composed of such men as it ought to be, will be able from time to time to frame such rules and regulations.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from Ohio yield for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The statement that he makes, found in the Senate bill, that the commission will have the power to determine as to the reasonableness of rate, gives them the power to fix rates, does it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. They are authorized by the general phraseology of the bill not only to say what rates are reasonable, but to prescribe rules and regulations. Indeed, their field is as broad as the power of Congress. Whatever can be done under the authority to regulate commerce can be recommended by the commission.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then the Senator places it a good deal stronger than my language did. Their power is undisputed; it is not restricted in any particular at all; the discretion of the commission is the only thing in the world that is to govern the rate. The rate must be reasonable. It must depend entirely upon the judgment of the commission whether the rate is exorbitant or reasonable. Let me ask the Senator if he thinks there is any power lodged in Congress, under the Constitution of the country, to so regulate common carriers as to fix the rates upon which they shall do business?

Mr. SHERMAN. I say that their decision is not final, because if they should decide, a railroad company is not bound to obey their decision. Therefore a suit may be commenced in the proper tribunal, and the court would decide that question, so that after all it is their moral power and influence that will be most operative.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very true; but if the Senator will bear with me a moment longer, the bill gives the commission power to fix the measure of damages resulting to the aggrieved party. He may appeal to the court from the judgment of the commission.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no judgment rendered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. After all, the commission have the power to fix the rates and determine their reasonableness. Now let me present another question to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senator will not interfere now. I shall be through in five minutes, if he will let me proceed.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask the question, because it touches on this matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not hear any question put to me. I waited for a question.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very well; I shall wait.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will put the question and not premise it with an argument I shall answer it with pleasure.

The experience of the States shows that the form of a commission here proposed is the best. We have a railroad commissioner in Ohio who has but very little power, and yet his influence has been good. In many of the States they have commissions very much like the commission proposed in the Senate bill, and the experience in every one of them has been favorable in securing the rights of the people. What has been adopted by the States in regard to their local commerce might well be followed by the United States in regard to the broader field of interstate commerce.

Again, the bill is merely tentative, inquiring, experimenting, pushing forward. No man ought to deal with a great question like this with a broad-ax or prescribe rules that have many exceptions to them. It is far better to proceed by tentative, slow, and progressive acts, until finally we shall have a railroad code established in this country after a few years' experience.

Then, besides, it is cheap and easy. Every man can be his own lawyer in this business. He writes an intelligent statement of his grievance to intelligent men, and if they require evidence to fortify his statement they can require it to be given and it will be given cheaply and plainly. The facts may not be disputed.

Then it will apply uniform rules throughout the United States. These rules are made by national authority, while if the rules governing railroads as to what is a reasonable charge are to be decided by legal tribunals, we have thirty-eight different decisions, all differing, and no one having any force beyond the limits of the State line.

Mr. President, this proposed law is based upon general principles which apply to the whole country and not merely to localities, and it will be, therefore, respected and observed, while the laws of one State will not be respected or observed in another, and the decisions of the courts in one State will not be respected and observed in others. It is based upon general principles.

Then it allows a just leeway for exceptions. There is no rule stated in either of these bills that has not some exceptions. I could give them almost from my own knowledge of railroads. Then on the question of discrimination I could point out cases where discrimination would be justified, although this prohibits it in all cases. That is probably a strong case. The rules ought to be universal; but as to the long haul and short haul I can see exceptions; as to pooling I can see exceptions, and they are exceptions that may be defined properly by experience, and we shall have that experience in the various complaints that will be made to this commission. I say it is better for the protection of the railroads themselves.

Indeed, I think the time has fully come when the railroad corporations of the country ought to be placed under the ægis of the law. Unless this is done I believe railroad property will be like plank-road property, or turnpike property, or canal property, it will disappear from among the properties to be bought and sold unless it is protected from some of the abuses that occur in nearly all the great railroad systems of the country.

I think, therefore, in every way in which I can view this bill it will be beneficial to the people East and West, North and South. I believe it will be beneficial to the owners of the railroads, the stockholders, and the men who have put their money in them. It will tend to curb and control and limit the powers of the men who now govern them with absolute sway.

In every view of it, therefore, I think the Senate bill is better than the Reagan bill, and although much popular favor has been enlisted from time to time in favor of the Reagan bill because it is a bill that deals with the question—that is all—not because they understand its provisions or favor them, but because it grapples with and deals with the railroad corporations. I say the Senate bill does more. It not only grapples with them, but it lays the broad and deep foundation for an admirable system of railroad law, which in my judgment will govern all the railroads of the country.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. President, it has been many years since any question under discussion before the Senate has given rise to so great a divergence of thought and diversity of argument as that now under consideration. It seems to me, and I am not sure I am correct in that presumption, that the question has been made to present difficulties which do not properly belong to it. We have before us for consideration two bills, one involving a commission, the other bill aimed directly at the evils alleged to exist. Both bills in their respective theories are based on the assumed power of Congress to deal with the subject. While the exercise of that power is vigorously resisted, I concur in its assertion. I desire briefly to call attention to a general line of declarations by a number of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States touching the subject and to state my own position in favor of the fullness of the power of Congress over it.

In the early case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, reported in 9 Wheaton, page 195, Chief-Justice Marshall said, in delivering the opinion of the court:

> But in regulating commerce with foreign nations the power of Congress does not stop at the jurisdictional lines of the several States. It would be a very useless power if it could not pass those lines. The commerce of the United States with foreign nations is that of the whole United States; every district has a right to participate in it. The deep streams which penetrate our country in every direction pass through the interior of almost every State in the Union, and furnish the means of exercising this right. If Congress has the power to regulate it, that power must be exercised whenever the subject exists. If it exists within the States, if a foreign voyage may commence or terminate at a port within a State, then the power of Congress may be exercised within a State.
> This principle is if possible still more clear when applied to commerce "among the several States." They either join each other, in which case they are separated by a mathematical line, or they are remote from each other, in which case other States lie between them. What is commerce "among" them, and how is it to be conducted? Can a trading expedition between two adjoining States commence and terminate outside of each? And if the trading intercourse be between two States remote from each other, must it not commence in one, terminate in the other, and probably pass through a third? Commerce among the States must of necessity be commerce with the States. In the regulation of trade with the Indian tribes the action of the law, especially when the Constitution was made, was chiefly within a State. The power of Congress, then, whatever it may be, must be exercised within the territorial jurisdiction of the several States.
> The sense of the nation on this subject is unequivocally manifested by the provisions made in the laws for transporting goods by land between Baltimore and Providence, between New York and Philadelphia, and between Philadelphia and Baltimore.
> We are now arrived at the inquiry, what is this power? It is the power to regulate—that is, to prescribe—the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution. These are expressed in plain terms, and do not affect the questions which arise in this case or which have been discussed at the bar. If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Justice Johnson, in an opinion delivered in the same case, page 225, supported by the decision of the court, said:

> The "power to regulate commerce," here meant to be granted was that power to regulate commerce which previously existed in the States. But what was that power? The States were, unquestionably, supreme; and each possessed that power over commerce which is acknowledged to reside in every sovereign State. The definition and limits of that power are to be sought among the features of international law; and, as it was not only admitted but insisted on by both parties, in argument, that, "unaffected by a state of war, by treaties, or by municipal regulations, all commerce among independent States was legitimate," there is no necessity to appeal to the oracles of the jus commune for the correctness of that doctrine.
> The law of nations, regarding man as a social animal, pronounces all commerce legitimate, in a state of peace, until prohibited by positive law. The power of a sovereign State over commerce, therefore, amounts to nothing more than a power to limit and restrain it at pleasure. And since the power to prescribe the limits to its freedom necessarily implies the power to determine what shall remain unrestrained, it follows that the power must be exclusive; it can reside but in one potentate; and hence the grant of this power carries with it the whole subject, leaving nothing for the State to act upon.

And, Mr. President, following the line of decisions of the Supreme Court, it seems to me to be settled by that tribunal that it makes no difference what agencies operate in the conduct of commercial intercourse. The power attaches according to the classification of the subject. If that be interstate in its character, Congress has the power. If it be confined wholly within a single State, power over it remains in the State. In the case of the State freight tax (15 Wallace, page 275), this proposition is laid down, I think, with sufficient clearness. I read from the opinion of the court:

> Beyond all question the transportation of freight, or of the subjects of commerce, for the purpose of exchange or sale, is a constituent of commerce itself. This has never been doubted, and probably the transportation of articles of trade from one State to another was the prominent idea in the minds of the framers of the Constitution when to Congress was committed the power to regulate commerce among the several States. A power to prevent embarrassing restrictions by any State was the thing desired. The power was given by the same words and in the same clause by which was conferred power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. It would be absurd to suppose that the transmission of the subjects of trade from the State to the buyer or from the place of production to the market was not contemplated, for without that there could be no consummated trade either with foreign nations or among the States.
> In his work on the Constitution Judge Story asserts that the sense in which the word "commerce" is used in that instrument includes not only traffic, but intercourse and navigation. And in the Passenger cases it was said: "Commerce consists in selling the superfluity, in purchasing articles of necessity, as well productions as manufactures, in buying from one nation and selling to another, or in transporting the merchandise from the seller to the buyer to gain the freight." Nor does it make any difference whether this interchange of commodities is by land or by water. In either case the bringing of the goods from the seller to the buyer is commerce. Among the States it must have been principally by land when the Constitution was adopted.
> However this may be, the rule has been asserted with great clearness that whenever the subjects over which a power to regulate commerce is asserted are in their nature national, or admit of one uniform system or plan of regulation, they may justly be said to be of such a nature as to require exclusive legislation by Congress.

And in the Missouri case, reported in 1 Otto, page 280, the same proposition is discussed:

> Commerce is a term of the largest import. It comprehends intercourse for the purposes of trade in any and all its forms, including the transportation, purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities between the citizens of one country and the citizens or subjects of other countries and between the citizens of different States. The power to regulate it embraces all the instruments by which such commerce may be conducted.

Mr. BAYARD. From what case does the Senator read?

Mr. KENNA. Welton vs. State of Missouri.

> So far as some of these instruments are concerned, and some subjects which are local in their operation, it has been held that the States may provide regulations until Congress acts with reference to them; but where the subject to which the power applies is national in its character, or of such a nature as to admit of uniformity of regulation, the power is exclusive of all State authority.
> It will not be denied that that portion of commerce with foreign countries and between the States which consists in the transportation and exchange of commodities is of national importance, and admits and requires uniformity of regulation. The very object of investing this power in the General Government was to insure this uniformity against discriminating State legislation.

It does not matter, according to these decisions, that the agency which conducts commerce, that the agency which transports the commodities of any State to be exchanged for those of another, shall operate wholly within a State or within many States. The case of the Daniel Ball, reported in 10 Wallace, page 565, thoroughly establishes this position. The Daniel Ball was a steamer plying on Grand River, Michigan, wholly within the State, not running in connection with any line of transportation by land, or by water, or any continuous line, nor by arrangement with any line, but acting independently wholly within the State and upon water within the State exclusively.

In this case—

Said the court—

it is admitted that the steamer was engaged in shipping and transporting down Grand River goods destined and marked for other States than Michigan, and in receiving and transporting up the river goods brought within the State from without its limits; but inasmuch as her agency in the transportation was entirely within the limits of the State and she did not run in connection with or in continuation of any line of vessels or railway leading to other States, it is contended that she was engaged entirely in domestic commerce. But this conclusion does not follow.

So far as she was employed in transporting goods destined for other States, or goods brought from without the limits of Michigan and destined to places within that State, she was engaged in commerce between the States, and however limited that commerce may have been, she was, so far as it went, subject to the legislation of Congress. She was employed as an instrument of that commerce; for whenever a commodity has begun to move as an article of trade from one State to another, commerce in that commodity between the States has commenced. The fact that several different and independent agencies are employed in transporting the commodity, some acting entirely in one State and some acting through two or more States, does in no respect affect the character of the transaction. To the extent in which each agency acts in that transportation it is subject to the regulation of Congress.

Mr. President, it makes no difference, according to the same line of authorities, that the agency did not exist when the Constitution was adopted. The distinction between commerce and the agency which conducts it is pointedly marked through the whole line of decisions. In a case decided not very long ago, reported in 6 Otto, coming from Florida, a case, by the way, in which a Senator now on this floor was one of the counsel, Chief-Justice Waite, delivering the opinion of the court, makes the following presentation:

Congress has power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States" (Constitution, Article I, section 8, paragraph 3); and "to establish post-offices and post roads" (Id., paragraph 7). The Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof are the supreme law of the land. (Article VI, par. 2.) A law of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution suspends or overrides all State statutes with which it is in conflict. Since the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1) it has never been doubted that commercial intercourse is an element of commerce which comes within the regulating power of Congress. Post-offices and post-roads are established to facilitate the transmission of intelligence. Both commerce and the postal service are placed within the power of Congress, because, being national in their operation, they should be under the protecting care of the National Government. The powers thus granted are not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce or the postal service known or in use when the Constitution was adopted, but they keep pace with the progress of the country and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They extend from the horse with its rider to the stage-coach, from the sailing vessel to the steamboat, from the coach and the steamboat to the railroad, and from the railroad to the telegraph, as these new agencies are successively brought into use to meet the demands of increasing population and wealth. They were intended for the government of the business to which they relate at all times and under all circumstances. As they were intrusted to the General Government for the good of the nation, it is not only the right but the duty of Congress to see to it that intercourse among the States and the transmission of intelligence are not obstructed or unnecessarily encumbered by State legislation.

We are all aware of the fact that the power conferred upon Congress by the commercial clause of the Constitution was conferred for the very purpose of preventing improper and embarrassing discriminations by the States. To admit for one moment that the power was conferred by the States upon Congress for the purpose of preventing and setting a perpetual bar against invidious action by the various States of the country upon a subject in which all were greatly concerned, and on the other hand to assert that a State may do by the charter of corporations what it confessedly can not do by direct legislative enactment, would be an abandonment of the whole prerogative of Congress conferred by the commercial clause of the Constitution. It would do more. It would construe the clause to divest the States of the power, and yet concede to the States the right to confer it on railroad corporations; thus, on the other hand, wresting it from Congress, and thereby, Mr. President, grave as the assertion may appear, surrendering absolute control of the interstate commerce of 50,000,000 of people to quasi-public and quasi-private, but in either event equally irresponsible, corporations.

This startling conclusion, I assert, is the deliberate object of those who boldly deny the power of Congress over interstate commerce. And this object would be equally accomplished if it be conceded for a moment that because an agency operates wholly within a State Congress can not reach it. What an anomaly! A railroad, for instance, runs wholly within a State; therefore, these corporations tell us, Congress can not act. But that same railroad carries freights passing from one State to another. This is interstate commerce; therefore the State can not act. Mr. President, that will not do. The power to regulate interstate commerce is as plenary in Congress as the control over purely local or State commerce is supreme in the State. I have preferred in presenting my views on this interesting question to employ the language of the courts, because it is apt and adds to argument the weight of authority.

Congress having the power, then, what is the demand for legislation on the subject? It has been said here that the demand is popular; that it is practically universal; that it comes from every quarter. I have satisfied myself by some observation on the subject that these demands have come from very important sources. A number of the Legislatures of the States have demanded this legislation, among them New York and Pennsylvania. The National Board of Trade has demanded it. Boards of trade and chambers of commerce throughout the country have urged it. The Grain-Receivers' Association—here let me remind the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who illustrated his opposition to this bill by reference to its supposed injurious effect upon grain shipments from Chicago—the fact is that the Grain-Receivers' Association of Chicago has demanded legislation in this very line. The Millers' Association of Cincinnati, the Produce Exchange of New York, the national and local boards of trade throughout the country, and merchants and citizens everywhere have appealed to Congress for national intervention.

Why is it that legislation is demanded? Why is it that a country like this, which owes so much in the last half century of its development, of its greatness, of its prosperity, to railroad enterprise alone, should thus early in the history of that development and enterprise be demanding that the strong hand of power be placed on these agencies to restrain them? The demand is not unreasonable. It can not be. It comes from intelligent sources. It emanates from patriotic citizens, who would no sooner do injustice to railroad enterprise than that of the individual.

Take my own State as an illustration—with its coal and salt and its iron and oil, with its magnificent timbers of every variety covering the whole face of the earth, natural resources which have become familiar everywhere—dependent as we necessarily must be for an indefinite period upon railroad enterprise not only already undertaken by the great trunk lines that traverse our State, but which is to come in the future, wrapped up as we are and as we must be in present and prospective railroad development, why is it that West Virginia should be in sympathy with this proposed legislation? Mr. President, there is a reason for it somewhere. It is not the development of a native instinct of hostility to railroads or to capital or to corporate interests.

I do not refer to unreasonable clamor. I do not refer to that spirit of demagogism which would take the rostrum to array honorable and honest sentiment unjustly against capital or against men in all the forms of their activities and their successes. Not at all. I take no share in that. Legitimate enterprise must be respected and protected. Success in life is a goal at which we all are striving. They who reach it legitimately, under the providences of God, I bid enjoy it legitimately, and I will never raise the hand or the voice to injure or detract them.

It is not that; it is not passion; it is not impulse; it is a growing, deep-seated, well-founded, determined sentiment of a free people, who, for cause, insist that there should be somewhere found the power to restrain unrestrained and unlicensed corporate power. Why, sir, if there were no such demand, if there were no immediate cause for such demand, as we are in the habit of saying in the courts, on the very face of the papers, legislation in a conservative and reasonable spirit ought to be had upon this subject.

What are these corporations? We all know the reasons, the human instinct common perhaps to us all, that led men in England to find in the doctrine of uses a device whereby to escape laws enacted for their restraint. We know the craving of the human mind after perpetual enjoyment. We know what the doctrines of primogeniture and estates tail meant. We know they were abolished for reasons familiar to the whole country, in accordance with the spirit of our institutions, in every State in this Union. But we have lived to see the day in which another form of perpetuity has come to life—corporations which never die, corporations which live forever, and which do not fail—I do not discuss or reflect upon motive—to find advocates upon this floor, as upon the floor of every legislative body in this great country, ready to advocate any theory they put forward for the maintenance of their prerogatives, even in defiance of the interests of the public and of the powers of the state!

They never die. It is true that sometimes they "shuffle off this mortal coil," a receivership is established, a temporary proceeding resorted to, but it is only the process by which they put on immortality. One hundred and twenty-five thousand miles, some Senator stated today to be the length of the railroad tracks in this country. One hundred and twenty-five thousand miles was the statement of the mileage of railroads in this country some months ago. I saw last night the most recently tabulated statement, by companies and ownership, which I have met with anywhere, and it places the railroad mileage of the United States at something over 143,000 miles! It would reach nearly six times around this earth; and the capital invested in it, according to the statement of railroad authorities before your committees investigating these subjects recently, amounts to $6,250,000,000—money enough if in unsevered national-currency notes to enable some mystic giant power to take this world of ours in one hand and to wrap it and bind it thirty times around in greenbacks with the other.

Last year, according to the statement of Mr. Fink, who is said to be better informed on the subject than any other living man, these railroads collected in tariffs from the people of the United States $700,000,000. I need not deal in exact figures. Turn to the gross receipts of your Treasury from all sources—direct taxes, internal revenue, imports, sales of public lands—take them all, and at least 30 per cent. more was collected from the American people by railroad corporations in one year, the last year, than the total amount from every quarter collected by the United States Government. And this has happened under a system which has grown up without an enactment of Congress to regulate or control it. How startling is the fact. You have had your tariff wars, your factional fights, and your battles of trade; your national conventions to pass upon questions of taxation; but over and above them all has stood the law to control every power. Freemen are always jealous of the power of taxation. The strongest sentiments of American citizenship surround and guard the power, which is confided to human hands, to take from the citizen a portion of his earnings for public purposes. No bill can be enacted by the other House, or by this, touching the tariff that does not attract the earnest attention of the people of this country; no discussion can be had touching the internal-revenue system or elements of taxation in any form without affecting and to some extent agitating a large number of people in every section of this great country.

And yet a transportation system has grown to proportions which dwarf every acknowledged measure of human enterprise; which involves over $6,000,000,000 of invested capital; which carries over twelve billions of annual commercial values, and which drew from the people last year $700,000,000 in freights and tariffs, and this without the let or the hindrance of a law to control this stupendous power or to give it direction for the public good.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] stated this morning that this was only the beginning of legislation on this subject. I would thank God, sir, to see it begin. The Senator says in the same connection that without legislation, without the exercise of the power and the performance of the duty imposed upon Congress by the Constitution of this country, the railroad corporations are supreme. Then, Mr. President, they are supreme, for no such legislation exists. Can the people intrust such power to mortal hands? It can not safely be.

> Ye'll find mankind are unco weak
> An' little to be trusted;
> If self the wavering balance shake,
> It's rarely right adjusted.

Let us check that supremacy. Let us bring this great power into subjection to law. Outside of an act passed a few years ago to require them to water and rest their cattle on the routes between the great West and the East, I believe Congress has never laid its finger on the transportation agencies of this great continent. It has been attempted over and over again, and it has as often failed. I had some familiarity with the history of attempted legislation on the subject as far back as the Forty-third Congress. An act passed the House of Representatives March 26, 1874, which established a commission. I have not been able to find any record of it in the Senate. I have not been able to find what I understand to have been a pending amendment when the bill was last heard from, but on inquiry I have found that the bill actually reached the Senate of the United States. If it ever got further than the portal I have no information on the subject. That was a commission bill. In the Forty-fourth Congress another bill was introduced—half a dozen of them. The bills pending in that Congress gave rise to what is recognized to-day as the Reagan bill. What is now known as the Reagan bill is not, however, the original bill, nor is it any one of the original bills. Again, in the Forty-fifth Congress a number of bills were introduced. Some of those bills provided for commissions; some presented the idea contained in the Reagan bill with other provisions added; some contained ideas that are not in either bill. What is now known as the Reagan bill was reported to Congress, passed the House, and came to this body as a substitute for the original bill which was prepared by some lawyer, I believe, in Buffalo, N. Y. That was the origin of the Reagan bill. It passed the House of Representatives of the Forty-fifth Congress, came to the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and there it died.

In the present Congress, as we are all aware, the bill has again passed the House. This is the third time the House has responded to the popular demand for action on this important subject. The last bill is before us. It is substantially the Reagan bill except that those provisions which undertake to regulate the transportation of passengers and to fix specific rates of charges therefor are interpolations. They are no part or parcel either of the Reagan bill as it originally existed or of its scope or theory. It might not be proper under the rules of the Senate to state where they found their origin, but they were no part of the original Reagan bill and did not emanate from its author.

Now, Mr. President, I favor legislation on this great subject. I do not accept that plan of legislation which is embraced in the Senate bill. I have not quite been able to get into my head what our friends mean by such proposed legislation. The first idea I ever acquired of law I derived from Blackstone. I have studied a good many law-books in the course of time, but I must express my surprise in the face of all I have been able to gather from the books when it is boldly asserted in the Senate of the United States that no enactment arising to the dignity of positive law can be made to reach this subject; that the subject is so great, so complex, so beyond the ordinary ken and ingenuity of common manhood, and the Senate so correspondingly ignorant, that there must be an invention, there must be a new device that will enable us to reach the object, and we are to have for the regulation of interstate commerce what Senatorial fertility of resource has denominated a "flexible law." Shades of departed lawgivers! explain to us by some process of inspiration what we are to understand by a "flexible law."

"Now you see it, and now you don't see it." I presume under the proposed flexible commission we are to go to these commissioners on Monday morning bright and early and ask them what the law is to-day. On Wednesday morning we go again and ask them what the law is that day, and on Saturday we may repeat the experiment. Mr. President, I mean no disrespect and no discourtesy to any Senator on this floor, but I have been unable to work myself up to any other conception than that a flexible law is a flexible absurdity.

Possibly the difficulty is met on the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND], by striking out of the Senate bill all there was in it that was law of any kind and leaving it to establish a mere roving commission something after the fashion of our own committees, which we sent out a summer or two ago, the product of whose labors we have been discussing here for a month or more and with a likelihood of reaching similar practical results. If the Reagan bill be not a proper bill let it be defeated; but in so far as the Senate undertakes to deal with this great subject let it make law, let it make rule, let it enact something that will govern somebody somewhere, that somebody on earth can understand and know that he is bound by and must obey. Give us no "flexible" commission with "flexible" powers to mock the just demands of the public. Those demands are reasonable. They should find here a reasonable response.

Now a word or two about the provisions of the Reagan bill, and I shall not detain the Senate longer. The first section of the Reagan bill makes provision—

> That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged alone or associated with others in the transportation of property by railroad or by pipe-line or lines from one State or Territory to or through one or more other States or Territories of the United States, or to or from any foreign country, directly or indirectly, to charge to or receive from any person or persons any greater or less rate or amount of freight, compensation, or reward than is by him or them charged to or received from any other person or persons for like and contemporaneous service in the carrying, receiving, delivering, storing, or handling of the same.

Equality of pay for equality of service—nothing more, nothing less. I desire to call the attention of Senators to one important consideration in connection with this very provision. I know more about the history of the origin of the Reagan bill than the proprieties of this body under the rules which prohibit reference to occurrences in the other House perhaps will permit me to say. I am sufficiently familiar with the Reagan bill and its origin to know that it never was intended to regulate passenger rates, it never was designed to regulate freights, it was never a part of its purpose to control the charges and rates of transportation anywhere in this country for interstate commerce or commerce of any kind whatever.

It was intended—and mark the declaration—to take from the railroad corporations of this great country the power which has been appropriated by them to regulate interstate commerce for the people. That was the design, that was the purpose of the Reagan bill, and I defy any gentleman anywhere to give it with propriety any wider scope or range. It has been misrepresented. It has been advertised as a dangerous meddling with the details of railroad affairs. It does nothing of the kind. It was never intended to do it. It is, I repeat, a resumption by Congress of a power to regulate interstate commerce which the Constitution confers upon Congress, and which the railroads have usurped and absorbed.

Why, sir, I am told that the rule of equality of pay for equality of service, provided by this section, may prevent a railroad company from opening markets to the products of this country that otherwise they can not reach. Some man will want to carry his lumber from Michigan to New York, they tell us. The railroad company fixes a tariff—makes it, in the language of Mr. Fink—all it will bear to carry that lumber to New York for consumption within our own boundaries. Some other gentleman associates with some Englishman or some Frenchman or some German or somebody somewhere for the shipment of lumber abroad to come in competition with foreign productions. It is all well enough for Mr. Fink in his testimony to state that if you require equality of service for equality of pay from the railroads you deprive the railroad company of the opportunity to make reductions in behalf of the foreign shipper in order to enable him to carry American commerce to the remotest corners of the earth; but I beg politely to inform that intelligent gentleman that that is no part of the functions of a railroad corporation organized by the invocation of the sovereign power of eminent domain, a power which belongs to the whole people, to be exercised only for the public good, and in whose benefits, in whatever form, those people are entitled equally and on equal terms to share. The very illustration given is the regulation of commerce with foreign nations. The railroad company gives one shipper, with his foreign associates, terms which it denies to another. It thereby says to one that he may, and to the other that he may not, engage in foreign commerce. This is a power which the Constitution was designed to deny to the States and to confer exclusively on Congress, and which Congress can not, with decent regard to its commonest obligations to the public, abrogate in favor of the roads.

Sitting here to-day and for weeks I have failed as yet to hear submitted to the Senate by any Senator who has assaulted that clause of this bill an illustration of the hardship it will do to the railroad interests of the country which was not at the same time an illustration of the regulation by the railroads of commerce between this and foreign countries or between the States of this Union.

Take the case the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] uses as an illustration. The people of the great West, citizens of Chicago, or grain-dealers there, want to ship their grain to New York. The railroads fix a rate. Under this first clause the same rate must be charged to all persons for similar service.

In a common carrier, conducting a business affecting the public, with every element of power embraced in his charter, his very existence drawn equally from the people, the head and front and source of all power, this would strike the average conscience as a fair and reasonable requirement. But without this section, in the absence of this requirement, the road may give a living rate to one shipper and deny it to another, thus opening to one and closing to the other the great markets of the East. Why, Mr. President, the Legislature of New York can not do it. The Legislature of Illinois can not do it. All the Legislatures in the country can not do it, and its arbitrary achievement by the railroad companies is simply and boldly an arbitrary usurpation of the powers of Congress over commerce among the several States.

The second proposition of this bill is simply:

SEC. 2. That it shall be an unlawful act for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as aforesaid directly or indirectly to allow any rebate, drawback, or other advantage, in any form, upon shipments made or services rendered as aforesaid by him or them.

That means exactly what the first section means, nothing more and nothing less. You shall not collect in the first instance unequally, you shall collect equally for equality of service, and having collected it, and by collecting it complied with the terms of the first section of this act, you shall not evade the law by handing half of it back. There is no possibility of a difference in the principle of the two provisions. The third clause is:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the carriage, receiving, storage, or handling of property as mentioned in the first section of this act to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, by changes of schedule, carriage in different cars, or by any other means, with intent to prevent the carriage of such property from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination, whether carried on one or several railroads.

That only means that this law provides against its own evasion:

And it shall be unlawful for any person or persons carrying property as aforesaid to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination for the pooling of freights, or to pool the freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion of them.

I may not understand what pooling freights means. I have read a great deal about it; I have read what everybody who has testified before any of the committees has said about it. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] reminds me that the State of New York does not allow pooling, even between ten canal-boatmen. It seems to me to be a plain proposition that a pooling of freights as between competing railroad lines—and that process never happens as between any others—is nothing more, was intended to be nothing more, and can in the nature of the transaction be nothing more than a combination to destroy competition as between carriers which may bring down the price of their services to the public to the ordinary level of supply and demand.

Mr. President, bearing in mind what this law means, divesting it of the mystery which has been made to surround it, and believing that it is right and proper that the people whose great commerce is transported, over 80 per cent. of it, now by rail should have the benefit in the handling of that great mass of material, of such competition as railroads have created, as railroad men have created by their voluntary investment in railroad enterprises, I have favored and defended this proposition in the interest of American commerce.

The fourth section is as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as provided in the first section of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation for a similar amount and kind of property, for carrying, receiving, storing, forwarding, or handling the same, for a shorter than for a longer distance, which includes the shorter, on any one railroad or pipe-line; and the road of a corporation shall include all the road or pipe-line in use by such corporation, whether owned or operated by it under a contract, agreement, or lease by such corporation.

Here, Mr. President, is the bone of contention. It has made more controversy, has excited more hostility among railroad men, and, in my humble judgment, developed to higher degree the genius of invention in the attempt to cripple and destroy it, than any forty bills which have been presented to Congress in as many years.

In discussing this section of the bill I desire to present two propositions. One is the propriety of the section as it stands. The other is the impropriety of denouncing it upon a forced or false construction. Its enemies, instead of enabling its friends to perfect it and reach its object if it does not already do it, have entertained the Senate for two weeks and more by pointing out its anomalies and in my mind the exceptional illustrations of its effects. Here is the open declaration that under all circumstances the railroads are to be the judges of the propriety of charging a man as much for hauling a car-load four miles as they charge for four thousand. It is true they have already that power and it is true that this bill does not attempt to deprive them of it.

Under this bill they are not denied the power to charge as much for a short as for a longer distance, but the service being similar they can not charge more. Thus, as the first section requires equality of treatment as between individuals, this section at least limits the power of discrimination as between sections. Now, Mr. President, I make of this section an observation equally applicable to every clause of this bill—it is born of the injustice and wrong visited upon helpless people whose position has made them dependent upon single lines of road. It is no secret in this body, nor in this country, nor indeed has it been denied before your committees that in numberless instances discriminations so harsh and so merciless have been visited upon local traffic that through freights, where competition has effected reductions, have been carried for less than cost.

Mr. President, what does this mean? I repeat, sir, what does this mean? It means that in the handling of interstate commerce and imposing tariffs for its carriage in numberless instances one section by its helpless condition has been made to bear the burden of its own transportation and likewise that of the more favored locality. And to return to the illustration offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]: If freight be carried from Chicago to New York at a given price, and from a point on the same line half the distance from New York a larger compensation be charged, what is this but a tax on the intermediate shipment in the interest of the Chicago shipper? But the Chicago shipper does not get the benefit of it in the end, because his wheat has already reached him from various intermediate stations in all the sections of country which feed his granaries and it has already borne the exactions. Grain in its very nature comes from the country stations.

It can not escape somewhere the heavy hand of the local rate, and thus, while before it reaches the consumer it has been taxed all it will bear, it has itself in the process of transportation been successively the victim and the beneficiary of local and of through rates. But the most serious aspect of the whole question, to my mind, is the utter, helpless, hopeless dependence of this commodity of interstate exchange upon the railroads for the exercise of a function for which it has a right under the Constitution to look to Congress. Who will deny, who can deny that in the absence of this section of the bill railroad tariffs may be so adjusted as to drive from a market a producer a hundred miles away, and surrender it in monopoly to another who is a thousand?

Who will deny that by the discriminations which this section at least in a measure prohibits the products of one locality or of one State may be landed in the market on the seashore at one tariff, and those of another three or ten times the distance away be brought there for a third the amount. And show me the genius who can devise a more effective method of controlling, regulating, making, or unmaking the interstate commerce of this country. This, with the other sections of this bill, is intended to divest the railroads of their power over the interstate commerce of the country, and relegate them to the legitimate performance of their functions as carriers for reasonable compensation according to supply and demand. It is intended to deny to the railroads the right to say to one citizen or one section, "I will build you up;" to another, "I will tear you down;" to one operator, "You may mine coal and live;" and to another, "You may mine and starve;" to one lumberman, "You may saw your logs and ship the product and sell it and thrive;" and to another, "You may saw yours, and it shall lie and rot in your yards." It is intended, in a word, and it undertakes no more, to divest the corporations of the power to take bodily possession of the business of the country and adapt that business to their own pursuits. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] in presenting his views of this feature of the bill to the Senate has employed the following vigorous and practical language:

There can be no more reason for a railroad charging more for half the labor than for twice the amount of labor than there would be for any other interest governed by the rules affected by machinery and labor, or than there would be for charging more for making one plow than for making two plows, or for a cart to charge more for carrying a load half a mile than it would for a mile over the same road; or for a hod-carrier to charge more to carry brick to the first story of a house than he would to carry the same brick to the second story over the same ladder by which he reached the first story. The cost of transportation to a railroad is measured by the wear and tear of the road and equipment and the expenses per mile for fuel and labor in moving the train; and there is no theory that I have ever seen advanced that satisfies my mind that these physical conditions are varied to any great extent per mile in proportion to the distance.

I am, therefore, fully persuaded that this is a wise provision.

The next section of the bill, Mr. President, is that which requires a schedule of rates to be posted open to general inspection and accessible to the public. The schedule is not allowed to be changed except upon five days' notice, with a pending proposition to allow it to be reduced at any time without notice. This suggestion is made to meet the objection that water lines might make sudden reductions, and the railroad, obliged to give five days' notice of a change, might be in the mean time seriously affected by its more fortunate rival for the trade. No harm can come from the reduction without the five days' notice otherwise provided for, but in the interest of fairness the fact of the reduction should be duly posted. If the general theory of the bill be defensible, this schedule is eminently so. It is simply the sentinel standing constant guard over the provisions and requirements of the bill to point the finger of exposure to their violation.

On the subject of the carriage of passengers I do not know whether the motion has been voted on to strike out the provision or not. I intended to vote to strike it out, and I shall certainly do so now if I have the opportunity. It is no part of the original scheme and purpose of the bill to regulate the price of carrying a man, woman, or child, or one ounce or pound of freight. The only limitation in it is the limitation of the price of the shorter to the price of a longer distance, and that is not to regulate the amount, not to regulate the value, not to affect the price, but to affect the relationship as between similar services rendered for shorter distances as against longer ones. The provisions of the bill which I have not discussed relate to penalties and the various features looking to remedies.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. KENNA. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to place on record somewhere the fact that the friends of the Reagan bill, without exception, voted against the clause fixing the rate of fare for the transportation of persons, and the provision was left as it is in the bill by the votes of the opponents of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas, the Chair thinks, can not allude to the votes of any other body.

Mr. MAXEY. I am not alluding to anything except what took place in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is quite in order then.

Mr. MAXEY. I thought I was. The Senator from Kentucky gave notice that he would call for a vote on that proposition when we got back into the Senate, so that we shall still have an opportunity of proving our faith by our works, and all who have said recently they will vote to strike that out can put their votes on record when we come back to the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I am not a very good parliamentarian, but I am afraid if the substitute offered by the Railroad Committee of the Senate is voted on in place of the House bill, I shall never be able to get that amendment into the Senate. I do not know how that is, but I am afraid that will be the way it will work. Therefore I am going to endeavor to move to strike out that part of it about the 3 cents a mile before the substitute comes to a vote.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the fact that he embodied in his amendment many more things than that clause relating to the charge per mile.

Mr. BECK. I did in the first instance, and therefore I give notice now that I will again endeavor to test that three-cents-a-mile provision for fear I may not get a chance in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be no trouble about testing it.

Mr. KENNA. I have no doubt, apart from the fact that that provision of the Reagan bill is a departure from the original design of the bill itself, any gentleman will see the great injustice of the operation of it.

Mr. BECK. Allow me one word. If the amendment that I offered had carried—and it was lost by one vote only—it would have left the Reagan bill just as it was presented by the Senator from West Virginia when he was in the House, or when he was supporting Judge REAGAN in the presentation of it. They are both very familiar with the whole subject.

Mr. KENNA. And this diversion brings me to make an observation that I think is due to the spirit of the occasion. It was never designed by Judge REAGAN, as I have said, that this bill should regulate rates, that it should take hold of the business of railroads and manage it. It was intended to be moderate, conservative, and reasonable. I know that great and good old man. I have known him for years. I know his great capacity, and I know his great honesty and his great sense of fairness and of justice.

I know that there is not a human being on this continent who would be more loath than he to do violence or injustice even to a great corporation. This bill was never designed, I repeat, to fix the rates of the railroads in the management of their business, but as a restoration to Congress of its own appropriate power conferred upon it by the Constitution of the country to regulate the interstate commerce of 50,000,000 of freemen—that and no more. If any Senator will point out a manner by which the object can be better accomplished by other words than those which are employed, I for one will cheerfully support it. I deny that it has been suggested.

What the Senator from Texas says about voting on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to strike out the 3-cent clause brings forcibly to mind the attitude of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] upon this subject. A half hour was spent by him discussing the "anomalous" provision of that part of the bill which gives jurisdiction to the State courts covered by the two simple words "or State." With the power on this floor which we have seen exhibited—sufficient at any moment to do with the bill as it pleases—it was easy at any time to strike out these two simple words and free the subject from all the embarrassment that an hour was taken to exhibit. Not a motion was made, not an effort to perfect or improve the measure, but a disposition all along the line, both actively and passively, to let it die the death.

Sir, it may die; I have no doubt it will die; I regard it as practically dead now, but I have made these observations upon it in order that I may be regarded as in at the funeral, and if I mistake not the temper of the American people on this great subject I shall be likewise in at its resurrection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. The yeas and nays were called for, I think. If not, I call for them now.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 26, after the word "substituted," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That there may be a reduction of rates prior to the posting of such new schedule, but in such case the new schedule shall be posted as aforesaid within five days after such reduction shall be made, and said schedule shall also specify the date at which the reduction commenced.

Mr. BECK. The only purpose of this amendment is to obviate what the railroads complain of as a very serious difficulty in the House bill, if it stands unamended—that is, that unless the amendment prevails they can not make a change of rates in less than five days. They say that they may be in competition with railroads which are not embraced in the provisions of this bill, that they may be in competition with water ways not embraced in any bill, and that their competitors may reduce their rates and thereby take their business, while by an iron rule they would be unable to meet them for five days.

I have offered this amendment so as to allow them, if that condition of things occurs, to reduce their rates without notice, so that they shall not be embarrassed by the action of any competitor—to reduce them to everybody equally of course, to reduce them in accordance with the other provisions of the bill.

It is well known that every shipper of goods has to ascertain, before he knows what he can pay the producer, what it will cost him to transport those goods to the place where he expects to find a market; and there ought to be some stability in that regard so that he will not, if he has purchased his goods and is ready to start them, find the schedule double or treble or quadruple what the rates were when he made the purchase, which would change his venture from a profit to a loss.

But if the railroad finds itself with a competitor cutting under it, it is allowed to reduce its rates, neither hurting the shipper nor the producer, but in fact it is a benefit to both; and if it is a benefit to the railroads I desire to give the railroads that benefit. That is all there is in the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this amendment, I withhold my vote.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KENNA. I was paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] being absent, I transfer the pair to him and vote "yea."

Mr. GARLAND. Then I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (after having voted in the negative). The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is absent from the city. I am paired with him for to-day. I was not aware when I voted that he was absent. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—46.

Allison,	Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Bayard,	Frye,	Kenna,	Pugh,
Beck,	Garland,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Groome,	McPherson,	Sherman,

Bowen,	Farley,	Lamar,	Sabin,
Brown,	George,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Walker.
Cameron of Pa.,	Gorman,	Plumb,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I believe it is in order to go back to section 1. If so, I desire to move an amendment, after the word "discrimination," in line 27, to strike out down to and including the word "person," in line 31, being these words:

Nor shall any railroad company or its officers charge to or receive from any person who is to be conveyed from one State or Territory into another any sum exceeding 3 cents per mile for the distance to be traveled by such person.

I desire to avoid that question if I can by moving to strike out those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MORRILL in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, which will be read by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 27 of section 1, after the word "discrimination," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "person," in line 31, as follows:

Nor shall any railroad company or its officers charge to or receive from any person who is to be conveyed from one State or Territory into another any sum exceeding 3 cents per mile for the distance to be traveled by such person.

Mr. BECK. I simply desire to strike that clause out. It was no part of the original proposition of the friends of the bill; and there may be places such as the Saint Louis bridge where that limit would be regarded as wrong. And as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] and others seem to have some constitutional scruples in regard to our power over that question, I do not care to have the House bill encumbered by anything that any one has any doubt about.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, in section 1 of the bill, in lines 24, 25, 26, and 27, I move to strike out all after the word "color," in line 24, down to and including the word "discrimination," in line 27, and on the motion to strike out I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are called for on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The words to be stricken out are, in section 1, after the word "color," in line 24, to the word "discrimination," in line 27, as follows: "and that furnishing separate accommodations, with equal facilities and equal comforts, at the same charges, shall not be considered a discrimination."

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. If he were here, I should vote "nay" on this amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK (after having voted in the affirmative). I intended to vote "nay," but I am recorded "yea" by mistake. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and his colleague [Mr. FRYE] advised me that upon this question Mr. HALE would vote "yea;" and as I would vote "nay" I withdraw my vote, being paired.

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Sabin,
Blair,	Fair,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Frye,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Butler,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Van Wyck,
Chace,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Voorhees,
Conger,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Dawes,	Jackson,	Pike,

NAYS—17.

Bayard,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Vance,
Call,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vest.
Cockrell,	Jonas,	Morgan,
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,
Groome,	Kenna,	Pugh,

ABSENT—25.

Beck,	Garland,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Brown,	George,	Miller of Cal.,	Slater,
Camden,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Walker,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Williams.
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	Ransom,
Colquitt,	Hill,	Riddleberger,
Farley,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the substitution of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] for the House bill.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to offer an amendment to be added to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky which was adopted to the House bill. It is to come in at the end of the amendment adopted on his motion. His amendment applies to line 26 of section 5, on page 5. I move to add:

And such reduction of rates shall be granted to all persons without discrimination prior to as well as after the posting of said schedule.

I wish to say in explanation of the proposed amendment that under the operation of the amendment adopted on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky discriminations between shippers would be directly authorized, and in this way: Suppose that A should purchase a stock of goods in New York to be shipped to Lexington, Mo. The rate is a dollar a hundred. To-morrow B purchases a like stock of goods to ship to the same point. Under the operation of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky a rate of 50 cents per hundred may be given to B; and that discrimination in favor of B against A would be authorized by that amendment unless the one I propose shall be added to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK (after having voted in the negative). I am paired, as I am reminded, with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have been paired on the two bills with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER], as has been before announced. I agreed within the last hour to have that pair transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the negative). I had agreed to pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN]. I ask leave, therefore, to withdraw my vote. If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote of the Senator from Florida will be withdrawn.

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Hampton,	McMillan,	Platt,
Allison,	Harrison,	McPherson,	Pugh,
Blair,	Hawley,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,

While the result of the vote was being announced, Mr. CONGER addressed the Chair.

The result having been announced,

Mr. CONGER. I wish to know if my name is recorded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The name of the Senator from Michigan is not recorded.

Mr. CONGER. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator rose before the Chair announced the result. The Chair will have his vote recorded though the Chair has made the announcement. The yeas are 35 and the nays 18. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. I was requested by my colleague [Mr. HILL] to announce his pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], but I was not in at the time the vote was taken.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to offer an amendment, adding a new section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey proposes an amendment. Does it apply to the original House bill or to the substitute adopted?

Mr. SEWELL. To the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add, as a new section:

SEC. 15. That the provisions of this bill shall be construed as applicable to all railroad or transportation companies engaged in the carrying of freight from points in the United States through the Dominion of Canada to tide water, or to tide water or other points within the United States.

Mr. SEWELL. I suppose it is hardly necessary to make an explanation of the amendment. It is intended to cover transportation routes going through Canada for merchandise between points in the United States. It may be that the matter is covered before, but it will not hurt to have this provision put in. We certainly ought to place Canadian lines on the same footing with our own.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator if the language would not include transportation down the Saint Lawrence River.

Mr. SEWELL. It alludes to transportation that originates on the lakes, and is delivered to Portland, in Maine.

Mr. HOAR. And does not relate to exclusively water transportation?

Mr. SEWELL. No.

Mr. HOAR. Then let it be read again.

Mr. SEWELL. The bill as it now stands regulates water transportation when in connection with railway transportation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. SEWELL.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from New Jersey how that would affect a road like the Grand Trunk, which has both its termini in the territory of the United States, Chicago being its western terminus, and Portland, Me., its eastern?

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that I drew the amendment with special reference to such roads, so that they shall come under the provisions of our laws, and have our laws applied to them.

Mr. INGALLS. There ought to be some limitation as to the tide-water points. If the terminus of a road is at tide water in the United States, that is one thing; if it is in Canada or Nova Scotia it is another.

Mr. SEWELL. Why should we not apply the same rule to that conveyed from their tide water that we do to our own?

Mr. INGALLS. How we can make a law of Congress operative in Canada, is really past my comprehension.

Mr. SEWELL. If the point of shipment is in our territory why should we not apply our law to it? The Grand Trunk does business in this country by permission of an act of Congress. It could not do it possibly except for the special permission in relation to the transfer of goods through the territory of Canada.

Mr. INGALLS. Very true; but this bill not only affects transportation between terminal points, but it affects transportation between local points. How you propose to apply the provisions of this bill to a road like the Grand Trunk and compel it to contract under its provisions from Chicago to a point in Canada, or from Portland going west to a point in Canada, I can not comprehend.

Mr. SEWELL. There is no intention to apply it to any local point. It will apply to freight carried from points in the United States to their tide water. It does not apply to local points at all.

Mr. CONGER. If this provision relates to water transportation on the lakes of freight that goes by rail to Chicago or Milwaukee or Detroit, whether the terminus of the water transportation is Buffalo or Erie or Cleveland or through the Welland Canal to Oswego or Ogdensburg or to the mouth of the Saint Lawrence, we might as well give up all protection to lake transportation by water. No such provisions as would apply to railroads can by any possibility be applied to water transportation on our great lakes without destroying the whole water transportation.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator will permit me to ask if he does not understand that the bill applies to water transportation?

Mr. CONGER. I understand it; but there are pending amendments which I offered to strike out, in sections 12 and 13, whatever refers to water transportation. No one should vote hastily on this. He should consider how the passage of this bill, as applied to water routes on the great lakes, will destroy all water transportation and water communication and vessel property. No boat going upon the great lakes, on the common highway of the world, can be subject to the provisions of this bill as to freights being a carrier in common with railroads of freights from the Northwestern States to Duluth, and from there down the lakes or to Chicago or any other place. It is impossible to apply these rules and hold the carriers by water subject to these provisions without destroying the entire water transportation of the lakes and making those great expanses of the North a perfect wilderness so far as fleets are concerned.

I think it would be well for those who represent the carrying interest of products all around the lakes to pause before they vote for a proposition of this kind. There is pending, I believe, a motion to amend in two of the places, and the only two where water routes are mentioned in the bill, sections 12 and 13, if I have the numbers right, by striking out the reference to lake and water transportation.

Mr. SEWELL. My amendment can be adopted and then the Senator from Michigan can test the sense of the Senate on his amendment.

Mr. CONGER. So far as I am concerned, coming from the region of the great lakes, and representing as far as I may the vast interests connected with water transportation, which is the only security that can exist and does exist against excessive railroad charges, I am opposed to extending the terms of this bill to water transportation. When at the Straits of Mackinaw the passage is dammed up, there is at once an increase of from 15 to 45 per cent. in the cost of transporting the productions of the West, and so it remains until the summer's sun removes the obstacle. Now it is proposed to put each man that runs his barge or his boat, if he carries products which have come from inland, under the force of this law; to make every carrier on the lakes subject to the same provisions; and I say, without fear of contradiction, that it will destroy the commerce upon the lakes, and make vessel property, which has now been reduced in value to the lowest point where it can be run and pay expenses, utterly worthless, and it will put the whole Northwest at the mercy of the railroad companies. I can not vote for it upon any possible supposition that it may hereafter be changed without voting in direct disregard of the interests of my people.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out after the word "Canada" the words "to tide water or."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. How will it then read?

Mr. INGALLS. My amendment is to strike out the words "to tide water or" after "Canada."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas proposes to amend the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey as will now be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out the words "to tide water or;" so as to read:

That the provisions of this bill shall be construed as applicable to all railroad or transportation companies engaged in the carrying of freight from points in the United States through the Dominion of Canada to tide water or other points within the United States.

Mr. SEWELL. The effect of that amendment would be to secure a transportation line to tide water in Canada, in competition with all the lines in the United States, without coming under the provisions of this act, although the freight originated in the territory of the United States. You would give a free-lance in transportation to Canadian lines, and bind ours up.

Mr. CONGER. The railroad companies who have connecting lines running through Canada or across Canada west from Buffalo, and the Falls, are not Canadian companies, neither east nor west of the lakes or in Canada. The Grand Trunk company from Chicago to Port Huron is an organization chartered within the United States. It has a running connection with the Grand Trunk company of Canada. The company running from Portland to Island Pond in connection with the Grand Trunk has its own separate organization and name in Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont; not a Canadian company at all, in charter or in control, though that it may be leased by or have running connection with the Grand Trunk of Canada. So far as the bill will apply as a law to railroads in the United States, it will apply to these companies as much as to any others.

Now, if it is claimed that by any process whatever we can exercise jurisdiction on any of the Canadian roads proper inside the Canadian territorial jurisdiction, I have yet to hear it claimed. I think no one will be foolish enough to assert that.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Michigan will allow me to say that if it was not for an act of Congress or for certain regulations under an act of Congress allowing goods to be transported from the United States through Canada without having the cars unlocked, without having every package opened and examined, the roads in Canada would not be carrying American freights.

Mr. CONGER. We allow goods to pass in bond across our territory from China. Goods pass clear through the United States to England in bond, not examined, no duties paid. From New York goods pass through Canada into Michigan, then they pass by rail through Indiana and Illinois into Minnesota, and through Minnesota to Emerson and Saint Vincent on their way to Manitoba; and in the same way through the United States, through Canada, through the Northwestern States, and into Canada again. If the Senator thinks that by any customs regulations we are to prevent the passage of products of the Northwest by the shortest and best route for New York and New England, that we are to legislate against the producers of every Northwestern State, as well as of every Eastern State, I am not with him in that class of legislation; and I do not wonder that those who are in the interest of the Southern routes should do, as was attempted in the House some years ago, bring in adverse legislation to the cheapest and most convenient routes of the producers of Michigan, Northern Indiana, Northern Illinois, all of Wisconsin, all of Minnesota, the northern part of Iowa, and a portion of Kansas. It was attempted to do that by adverse legislation to the use of roads passing through Canada. It met with opposition from every board of trade from away down East to Saint Paul, and all around the lakes; and this is another attempt in the same direction.

Mr. President, I had, as I supposed, pending on the Senate bill an amendment which I have marked here, to strike out in section 12 in the third line the words "and water" where it says:

That the route of any transportation company engaged in interstate commerce shall include all the railroad and water routes in use by such company.

I understand that to be pending, and before the last vote was taken I was called out for a moment, and had only time to get in and secure my vote by extra exertion. I had also pending another amendment in line 12 of section 12, to strike out the words "and partly by vessel" after the words "or partly by rail;" also in section 13, line 5, to strike out "or any vessel or vessels, in whole or in part;" in line 7 of section 13 to strike out "or any vessel or vessels," and in line 11 to strike out "and partly by water."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the rules and practice of the Senate no amendment is pending except that which is offered in order; and of course the Senator understands that there can be only two amendments pending at a time. All amendments that are given notice of by Senators have to be offered when the opportunity arises for proposing them. The Chair therefore thinks that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] was proper to be voted upon because no further amendment to that amendment had been offered.

Mr. CONGER. But these amendments of mine were offered—I say it with all due submission—to the bill, and were pending at the time the motion was made to substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks there was a notice of an intention to propose them. That was in accordance with the practice of the Senate. They could not be offered and pending because only one amendment and an amendment to that amendment can be pending at the same time.

Mr. FRYE. There is nothing to prevent the Senator from offering them in the proper time now after this amendment is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That depends on the question whether it is a motion to strike out what the Senate in Committee of the Whole has agreed to. If it is a motion to strike out what has been agreed to, it would not be in order until the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. He can do it then.

Mr. CONGER. There will be an opportunity in the Senate, as I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the bill shall be reported to the Senate the bill will be again at large, and every amendment the Senator from Michigan desires can then be offered.

Mr. CONGER. Then I make this statement to show the Senator from New Jersey that the provisions which are already in the bill may or may not be advisable. Is there any amendment pending, Mr. President—I mean any amendment in the second degree; any amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey pending, that offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS]. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to suggest an amendment which, while not now strictly in order, I am in hopes my colleague will accept in lieu of his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] asks to have read an amendment which he desires his colleague [Mr. INGALLS] to accept. If there be no objection, the proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3 of the amendment of Mr. SEWELL, after the word "freight," it is proposed to insert:

From any place in the United States through any foreign territory to any other place in the United States, or from any place in the United States to any place outside the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the words of limitation which the Senator from New Jersey has in his amendment referring to tide water as the objective point would prevent the realization of the expectation which he has in view.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say that I have no objection to the amendment the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] suggests. If the other Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] will accept it I shall agree to it.

Mr. PLUMB. Montreal is the place of shipment for wheat, pork, and other articles coming from the West, and that is above tide water, and the point in Canada opposite Port Huron at which the Grand Trunk Railway terminates is also away from tide water. My amendment would also cover shipments into Mexico, and all transactions of any kind originating in the United States should be railroad transportation within the limits of the United States, which we have a perfect right to regulate under our power to control and regulate foreign and interstate commerce. So whether the shipments are made from a point in the United States to a point in Canada, or from the United States to a point in Mexico, or from a point in the United States through the Dominion of Canada to Chicago or Port Huron, or any point in the United States beyond the Dominion of Canada, this provision would cover it.

Mr. INGALLS. Permit me to ask my colleague if this language would not also cover water transportation from this country to England by ocean?

Mr. PLUMB. It would if this bill is designed to cover water transportation.

Mr. INGALLS. But the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey is:

That the provisions of this bill shall be construed as applicable to all railroad or transportation companies.

That, of course, is the most comprehensive language that could be employed. It does cover water transportation, and therefore the language that my colleague employs, it appears to me, would cover ocean transportation.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well; that can easily be obviated by providing that it shall not apply to transportation wholly by water.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the differences of opinion on this question show the necessity of a commission more than we have ever known before. I withdraw my amendment and will accept the suggestion offered by my colleague. I am convinced that the one I offered will not carry out the design that I desired to accomplish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas on the left of the Chair [Mr. INGALLS] withdraws his amendment. The Senator from Kansas in front of the Chair [Mr. PLUMB] offers an amendment, which will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "freight," in line 3 of the amendment of Mr. SEWELL, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

From points in the United States through the Dominion of Canada to tide water, or to tide water or other points within the United States.

And insert in lieu thereof:

From any place in the United States through any foreign territory to any other place in the United States, or from any place in the United States to any place outside the United States.

So that the proposed section will read:

That the provisions of this bill shall be construed as applicable to all railroad or transportation companies engaged in the carrying of freight from any place in the United States through any foreign territory to any other place in the United States, or from any place in the United States to any place outside the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. PLUMB. If this is to be opposed on the ground that it covers ocean transportation, about which I express no opinion, believing myself that the scope of this bill relates entirely to railroad transportation, I will ask unanimous consent to add that it shall not apply to transportation wholly by water. That will obviate the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has the right to modify his amendment, the yeas and nays not having been ordered.

Mr. SEWELL. I shall object to the modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has the right to modify it.

Mr. PLUMB. I modify it by adding:

Provided, That this shall not apply to transportation wholly by water.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest to the gentleman to strike out the words "or transportation."

Mr. PLUMB. That can be settled afterward.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification made by the Senator from Kansas will be read. The amendment as modified will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment as proposed to be amended would read:

That the provisions of this bill shall be construed as applicable to all railroad or transportation companies engaged in the carrying of freight from any place in the United States through any foreign territory to any other place in the United States, or from any place in the United States to any place outside the United States: Provided, That this shall not apply to transportation wholly by water.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, as modified.

Mr. SEWELL. I hope that last clause will not be adopted.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, one proposition will meet all the objections that could be made to including ocean transportation or lake transportation, by striking out the words "or transportation" after "railroad," thus confining the section to railroad companies. This proviso leaves it still uncertain, because it may be construed to be where the freight goes partly by water and partly by rail; and, therefore, it will take all the lake transportation if it has railroad transportation connected with it. The Saint Lawrence is on tide water; the docks of Montreal are on tide water; therefore, if freight is carried on the Saint Lawrence and across the ocean to England or anywhere in Europe, if that construction was held, that, because the transportation was partly by rail, say from Omaha to Chicago and thence by water down the lakes through the Welland Canal and the Saint Lawrence, it could go to Europe, and the bill would apply to ocean and lake transportation.

The object the Senator has in view can be attained by striking out the words "or transportation" before "companies" and after "railroad." That would meet the whole case and confine it to railroads. I ask him to make that modification instead of adding the proviso.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not see why we should not regulate transportation that is partly by water and partly by rail. I can see a great many reasons why we should not regulate transportation by water alone, because transportation by water is free to all to engage in. Every man can put his boat on the Mississippi River or Lake Erie or Lake Michigan; but when we come to deal with transportation partly by rail and partly by water we may find that, for the purpose of protecting the interests of those companies whose transportation is wholly by rail and of shippers whose freight can be transported only wholly by rail, we ought to put our hands for the purpose of regulation on this mixed transportation. If a through bill of lading is made from New York to Port Huron, in Michigan, would the Senator say that because the freight crosses the water between an opposite point in Canada and Port Huron it ought to be exempted, or would he say that if it went from New York to Buffalo by rail and from thence by water to Saginaw it ought to be exempted from the provisions of this bill? If he would, then I should differ with my friend respectfully. It seems to me that in a case of that kind it would be interstate commerce, and not only interstate commerce, but interstate commerce of a kind that might need, and that prima facie would need, regulation and the oversight of the Government as much as any other class of transportation that we are to provide for.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Michigan will suspend for a moment, the Chair begs to call the attention of the Senate to section 2 of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois, which was intended, as the Chair understands, to be the Senate bill. In the print of this amendment an error has been made, differing from the Senate bill in line 5. After the word "and," in line 5 in the Senate bill, was the word "to," and after the word "and," where it secondly occurs in line 5, was also the word "to." If the amendment agreed to by the Senate, proposed by the Senator from Illinois, were precisely like the Senate bill as it stood and as it was supposed to be intended, after the word "and" in both instances in line 5 of section 2, the word "to" should be inserted, so as to read:

All transportation companies engaged in interstate commerce, and to take into consideration and to thoroughly investigate.

If there be no objection those errors in the reprint of the amendment from the Senate bill will be corrected and the corrections stand as a part of the amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that section 2 as it stands in the bill was substantially the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, and I have no doubt that the words the President of the Senate has indicated should be there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An examination has been made, and it has been found that that error has been made in the reprint. If there be no objection those two words will be inserted and stand as part of the amendment agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CONGER. Section 13 defines what shall be deemed transportation companies as provided for in this act; and if it remains as it is it controls every vessel running in connection with a railroad; and by the proposition here every vessel and every line of vessels on the lakes that carries any freight starting from beyond the water in the West or in the East will come under this bill. This says:

That the term "transportation company engaged in interstate commerce," as used in this act, shall be deemed and taken to mean any corporation, company, or individual now owning, operating, or using any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels.

With the construction that is given to this bill in this section and in the next and in former sections, any freight which shall be taken by a railroad or by any intermediate transportation company or vessel or line of vessels comes under the absolute control of this legislation. It affects the prices to be paid every vessel that takes wheat from Iowa or Minnesota, at Chicago, having come there by rail, to any point in the East. I say it would be destructive of all vessel interests to establish these rules and these laws over vessels and their competitors that run upon the great lakes.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator before he takes his seat elucidate that point a little? I do not understand it. This bill provides for the regulation of interstate commerce, and perhaps by the terms of it all commerce, by prohibiting extortion and discrimination, and it establishes a commission to prevent by its action this extortion and discrimination. It is only in that way that it undertakes to interfere with or to regulate commerce, whether foreign or domestic. Now I do not comprehend how it is that if the bill aims only at those two crimes, extortion and discrimination, which are practically made crimes, because they are attended with all those public evils that do attend crime, it is open to the objections that the Senator from Michigan urges simply because it embraces water transportation as well as railroad or land transportation. I do not comprehend that the American public are to be subjected to extortion when perpetrated by owners of single vessels or lines of water communication any more than when those same evils are perpetrated by companies that operate only upon land; and that they may accomplish the same great injury we all know to be a demonstrated fact. We know it in the case of the Oregon Navigation Company, of which we have heard so much for many years as to its monopoly of the transportation upon the Columbia River, and in the case of lines that own the water communication along the Mississippi River and control commerce in connection with great railroad companies, transcontinental railroad companies. They are a practical continuation of those same lines of communication to the eastern continent. They are all owned by the same capital. They are continuous lines. The evil can be perpetrated upon water as well as upon land; and if we are to undertake to prevent discriminations and extortions by land companies, why on earth should we not extend the same regulation and exert the same sovereign power which we possess with reference to the other that we do with reference to the one? I do not understand the Senator's zealous denunciation of the provisions of this bill when they reach evils perpetrated by water transportation companies, when at the same time he is perfectly willing that those evils shall be regulated and prevented if perpetrated by railroads.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to say a word here?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. A good deal of importance has been given to the testimony of Mr. Albert Fink, who is a very able man. In the volumes furnished to the Senate entitled "Relations between Labor and Capital," volume 2, part 1, page 496, the Senator from New Hampshire, as chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, was investigating in his examination of Mr. Fink the question as to whether water ways ought to be regulated because of the dangers of combination, and he put this question:

The water ways among themselves are unable to combine?

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] put that question; and to it Mr. Fink answered:

A. There is no inducement for water ways to combine. They are never competitors in the sense in which railroads are. For example, the Erie Canal is not a competitor with the Mississippi River; that is to say, not an immediate competitor. They are competitors in a certain sense—as for the export business; but they do not come into direct competition with each other. For example, the Hudson River runs through a certain section of country. There are only certain people that can be furnished with accommodations by the Hudson River. But with the railroads it is different; the railroads cross each other in every direction. The rivers do not. The net-work of railroads makes competition very active; one road competes with many others. There is no competition between the several water ways; there is only competition between the boats on each water way; but the railways compete with each other all over the country and in every direction. This makes railroad competition so much more widespread, leading to so many complications that it makes it difficult to prevent competition from becoming ruinous.

And in the course of that gentleman's examination he insisted that there was no necessity for any combination or any such organization as to water transportation as he was at the head of, because even on the Erie Canal, he testified, each individual boatman was working for himself and was competing with every other boatman; and, indeed, the laws of New York prohibit and the supreme court of New York had decided that any attempt on the part of the men on that canal to make a pool was illegal, and they were therefore always competing with each other. He went on further to say in the course of this testimony—I do not care to read it all—that the water ways were the great agents in bringing down freights and that the railroads had to accommodate themselves to the prices charged by the water ways. That was illustrated when we made the Eads jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River and enabled boats to go to Europe and go all over the world by passing out of what had formerly been a shallow pass with only seven feet of water. We enabled men to put their barges on that great river and take them out; and in that way we did more to reduce the railroad rate and to prevent the possibility of high charges than could have been done in any other possible way. He acknowledged that all the railroads in all their systems had to work against the free water ways of the country.

I believe he added—if he did not it is true—that on a water way any man can put a boat or a barge anywhere and take his own products from his own landing to any other place and land them at any landing and ask nobody any odds, whereas on railways he can not put his own car with his own hogs, his own cattle, his own sheep, his own grain, his own products, or anything else, because the men who are managing that railway have the exclusive right to control all traffic on it. But the competition is so great between the water ways and the railways that the great interest of the public is to encourage water ways, make them as cheap as possible, for the very purpose of keeping down exorbitant charges by the railroads, which have a monopoly of their lines.

I think the Senator from Michigan is right in endeavoring to make the water ways as free as possible, and we should not subject them to the same surveillance that we do their competitors, whose interest is to keep everything high, while the United States in every river and harbor bill is endeavoring to give them as little power as possible by having a water competition.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me?

Mr. CONGER. I do not yield the floor further.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. CONGER. I yielded to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. Allow me to express my obligation to the Senator from Michigan. I desired to say that much, because I said to him the other day that upon this question I thought he was clearly right.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONGER. Yes; if the debate does not run on till morning.

Mr. SEWELL. I simply want to ask the Senator from Kentucky how he would do in this case: Suppose the railroad companies should become transportation companies by water, as they are to a large extent, would he not want to regulate them?

Mr. BECK. In a great question like this I would deal very cautiously, and I would deal with one thing at a time. If I found hereafter that they were controlling those water ways in any manner prejudicial to the interests of the great masses of the people of this country I would then interfere with them.

Mr. SEWELL. They are doing it now; sixty transportation companies are, partly by land and partly by water.

Mr. BECK. But at the same time the water way is free to every citizen, is it not? The railway is not free to every citizen. There is no public water way in the United States that the Senator from New Jersey or myself could not float our produce down if we felt that it was profitable to do so in competition with anybody else, and there is no railway of the United States where we can put our car with our produce in competition with the railroad managers although ruin might stare us in the face unless we got it to market.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to me to ask him a question and also make a suggestion?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand this bill to regulate interstate commerce, the definition of which is found in section 13, the bill does not apply to water transportation unless it is connected directly with railway transportation.

Mr. LAPHAM. Unless it is part of it.

Mr. ALLISON. Unless it is part of it; as, for example, the Erie Railway, which has a line to Buffalo and to Dunkirk, puts at those points, or either of them, a line of steamships to run from there to Duluth, and makes contracts for freights to Portland, Oreg., by way of Duluth. A part of that line, of course, is by rail and a part by water, and yet it is a part of the railway system. Now, it does seem to me that if we undertake to regulate railways in the interior of our country, such as the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago, and other lines which run wholly through the interior, we should also have some jurisdiction to regulate those lines that run in a more northerly direction, and utilize the great lakes and the rivers, if you please, as a part of their system. It seems to me so. I may be mistaken. Of course I would not be willing, for one, to undertake in this bill to regulate those vessels that come into Chicago either from Montreal or from any point on the lower or the upper lakes. I do not think it is so intended; but where vessels are a part of a railway system I see no objection to including them within the provisions of the bill, and it seems to me that is all that this bill does. That is what I wished to suggest.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator to look at section 13 while I am talking.

Mr. ALLISON. I have looked at it.

Mr. CONGER. "The term 'transportation company,'" which is in the clause about which I was commenting, is in this bill defined—

That the term "transportation company engaged in interstate commerce," as used in this act, shall be deemed and taken to mean—

What?

any corporation——

Mr. ALLISON. Go right on.

any corporation, company, or individual, now owning, operating, or using any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels, in whole or in part, or that may have the right, license, or permission to operate, use, or control any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels, in whole or in part——

Mr. ALLISON. Read right on, the proviso.

Mr. CONGER.

Provided said corporation, company, or individual is engaged in the business of transporting freights or property of any description by railroad——

Mr. ALLISON. That is, wholly by railroad.

Mr. CONGER.

or partly by railroad and partly by water, from one State into another State or Territory of the United States, or from any Territory into any State or any other Territory; and the provisions of this act shall apply to all persons, firms, and companies, and to all associations of persons or companies, whether incorporated or not, and to all associations of corporations engaged in thus transporting freights or property of any description, in the manner above set forth, from one State into any other State or Territory, or from any Territory into any State or any other Territory.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will see that that would not apply to a line of vessels transporting property between Chicago and Buffalo, for example, or between Chicago and Detroit, for example.

Mr. CONGER. It would if they ran in connection with any railroad.

Mr. ALLISON. It would if the line was partly by rail and partly by water; otherwise not.

Mr. CONGER. It has been argued all through the discussion that the object of this bill was to include these products as freights from the starting point, in whatever Territory or State, clear through to the destination and to make the lines continuous in effect. That is the object of the bill as to railroad lines. It is also provided that if goods go to Chicago and Milwaukee by rail, and then some captain with his propeller or his barge takes them to Buffalo on his own private undertaking, because the product came by rail and is going on by rail from Buffalo, that vessel shall be included under the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Not as the bill is.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, as the bill is, and it shall be governed by this law. It seems to me that those of us who are interested in water transportation East or West, North or South should stop and look at this question and see what its effect will be. We are expending at the rate of from three to ten million dollars a year to improve our water ways. What for? To make them parts of railroad companies, to make them a part of the great railroad system of transportation by some possible connection of freight or productions that pass over them? No, sir. We are spending these millions and hundreds of millions of dollars—for it amounts to that up to the present time since the formation of the Government—to make a highway for every citizen of the United States to take his boat, his ark; his batteau, his vessel, his steamboat, whatever he has that can carry freight, to make a highway upon which he may float his craft and carry his own produce or such as he can procure. Are we building light-houses for the benefit of railways? Are we putting up beacon-lights on the Mississippi and light-houses on the lakes which tend to make those waters free to individual effort, to individual use, to bring them in subjection, because railroads should be subject to laws which may very well be applied to railroads, but which, in my judgment, would ruin the water communications if applied to them? They can not live under these laws. They must be permitted to change their freights and their rates of freight. Freights from Chicago to Buffalo change every hour. Charter-parties are different in the afternoon from what they were in the morning. If circumstances make it necessary for vessels, if they would be in business at all, to come down in their freights even below a living price they do it; but under this rule the steamboats must have schedules, the barges must have their schedules, that they cannot alter without five days' notice. Why, sir, you would tie up the vessels at the docks and keep them there till piecemeal they rot into the waters of the lakes and the rivers.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Michigan must see that there is no such regulation of freights, no such provision.

Mr. CONGER. Who would have dreamed that such a proposition could be offered to be put in this bill as the Senator from New Jersey has offered? Who would have dreamed that a quarter of an hour ago, and who can tell what will be put in this bill? We must meet these things where we find them and attack them whenever a head appears above water. That is the way I fight for the interests of the people I represent and the interests of the people who dwell along the great water courses of our country which have been made navigable for the benefit of the people and the whole people by an immense expenditure of money, which is to be increased and increased until the water ways of the United States shall be the great competing routes to keep down better than all law, better than all prescription, better than all oratory, the exorbitant charges of railroads in the land. They control them now better than any legislation which we can have. All up and down the current of these waters, from the remote ports, they control the prices and the monopolies of railroads. The main reason for paying the $10,000,000 a year to improve these water courses is that we may have something that shall compete with the giant monopolies of the land and hold them within control.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I am still as much in the dark as at the beginning, after listening to the explanations of the Senator from Kentucky through his new and favorite witness Mr. Albert Fink, against whose theories he has been combating during the entire debate on the bill, and whom he now quotes as the principal supporter of his theories, and also after listening to the eloquence of our friend the Senator from Michigan.

The bill does not undertake to interfere with proper practices on the part of land and water transportation companies. No authority vested in the commission, no authority emanating by virtue of the enactment of this bill into law, if it should become a law, authorizes anybody to intermeddle with any transportation company that is discharging its duty to the public, that is simply taking an honest and fair requital for the services it renders. The bill only undertakes to prohibit and to prevent certain public evils, extortion and unjust discrimination.

When extortion and unjust discrimination are practiced by a water-transportation company, even although its entire sphere of operations is confined to the water, if it has to do with interstate commerce, why it is that such practices on the part of a water-transportation company are to be permitted, and are yet to be prohibited when they are undertaken by land companies, I am still unable to perceive. The Senator says that private individuals may place their vehicles of communication and of transportation on the water routes of the country. There is that distinction, and that distinction only, between a water route and a land route. There is no right of eminent domain attaching to the water routes of the country. They are open, they are free like the air, and whoever has the capital, whoever can establish a route of water transportation, is, to be sure, not subject to regulation so far as that right of regulation comes from the sovereign by virtue of his power of eminent domain, which he has parted with for the benefit of the private individual, or the private corporation in the case of the railroad.

But, nevertheless, we all know it to be a fact that the productions of the earth, the valuable things that are achieved by way of production, are divided among the various individuals and agencies which contribute to that production, and that associated capital and associated wealth always work to an advantage as against the individual or as against capital invested in small masses. The result is that when corporations or individuals are able to command great capital they are able to transact a particular business in which they engage at vastly reduced rates as against the individual who has smaller facilities, smaller capital, and consequently a lesser degree of efficiency; the practical result of which is that capital is invested in large masses in water transportation precisely as it is in land transportation, and so capital is invested in large masses in the shipping business proper.

So in the agricultural or producing classes, those classes which produce directly from the earth. So with the manufacturers. Vast masses of capital are thus combined in these various pursuits, and, as it were, they play against each other, and they are able to extinguish anything like competition which arises on the part of individual or smaller amounts of capital.

Therefore it is that the water-transportation route from Saint Louis to New Orleans by steamship, owned as it is by a few individuals—it may be almost wholly by one individual—can easily expel as a matter of practical business arrangement any private individual, any single man, any agriculturist or any manufacturer who is engaged with his farm or with his mill, and it is utterly impossible for him to get upon the water as a matter of fact.

Everybody knows that the water-transportation companies of this country have practiced extortion and unjust discrimination just as much as the land-transportation companies of the country have done. We know that they have as much to do with the evils of internal or interstate commerce as have the land companies themselves. They are there with capacity to practice unjust discrimination and extortion, and they do practice those great evils. They inflict those evils upon the community; and are we to leave them without regulation, to create those evils, by virtue of the power which they have, and subject the community as a whole to the extortion and the unjust discriminations in the way of rates to which they do subject the community, when by so doing they are able to maintain themselves and to also maintain a ruinous competition against any honest individual or any honest company that may undertake to establish itself?

Since the bill only aims at these two real crimes, defining these evils as public crimes, and undertakes to prohibit them, I do not understand where the objection comes in from any source whatever to the provision of the bill which does unquestionably to my mind include water-transportation routes as well as land-transportation routes. If I could see any reason why a bill which undertakes to deal with interstate commerce and with foreign commerce both (for I think it covers both) should be made partial in its operation and leave the evils which exist with reference to water as well as land transportation unregulated in one case while it undertakes to prohibit those evils in the other case, I should be very glad to vote for the proposed amendment.

Nor can I understand the sensitiveness of the Senator from Michigan, who talks of the Northwest and of the improvements there made along the water lines of transportation in the way of repair, the removal of snags, the deepening of channels, and the removal of ledges, and all that sort of thing, which enters into the public expense and is for the general public good, and so far as it goes is a general contribution to the capital invested in interstate commerce. I do not understand, I say, from whence and for what reason there is this sensitiveness against the prohibition of the crimes which we are defining and establishing in the bill when committed by water-transportation companies.

With reference to the testimony of Mr. Fink, it stands for what it is worth. It stands by itself. It is the testimony probably of the best educated student, the man best informed with reference to the great subject of interstate commerce and foreign commerce as well. He is the best informed man, so far as I know, that there is in our own country; but nevertheless we know that Mr. Fink has his prejudices, he has his affiliations; and I would not consider the opinion of Mr. Fink one safe for the Legislature of the United States to follow without question.

If the Senator from Kentucky will examine the testimony from which he quotes he will find that there is testimony from other and eminent witnesses who take a different view upon some of these great points from Mr. Fink. At all events, I do not see why he should rise here and quote Mr. Fink as a reliable witness in one case when he discards and discountenances and denounces his testimony in everything else.

Mr. President, I had no idea of saying anything upon the bill. I simply asked a question. I have understood from the beginning that it is a measure ample and comprehensive in its scope, which covers the whole subject, and I look upon it as a futile attempt to do good to the public unless we do so legislate as to cure and regulate the entire evil if we undertake to do anything about it at all.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to submit to the Senate a statement made in the arguments and statements before the Committee on Commerce of the House in 1882. Mr. Thurber, in his testimony on this subject, says:

> This speech of Mr. Daggett showed that the original investment of Stanford, Huntington, and another in the Central Pacific Railroad was $12,500; and in fourteen years the whole property had increased to $184,000,000. The result was that they got so much money that they went to work and bought up the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and now they are paying that company $90,000 a month subsidy in order to keep the rates up, instead of the public getting the benefits of the competition to which it is properly entitled.

I do not know any reason why that line of water transportation should not be subjected to the provisions of this bill, if they are to be of any force or effect at all. I do not know why the people of the Pacific coast should not be protected if the bill is to be a protection to anybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUTLER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. CONGER. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3 of the proposed new section, after the word "freight," it is moved to strike out the words:

> From points in the United States through the Dominion of Canada to tide water, or to tide water or other points within the United States.

And insert:

> From any place in the United States through any foreign territory to any other place in the United States, or from any place in the United States to any place outside the United States: Provided, That this shall not apply to transportation wholly by water.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the words "or transportation."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not in order. The pending question is an amendment in the second degree, and no further amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont make the point of order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I do not make any point of order. I only suggest to my friend from Michigan that it is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. I shall withhold the amendment for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. CONGER. In line 2 of the proposed new section I move to strike out the words "or transportation," after "railroad;" so as to read:

> That the provisions of this bill shall be construed as applicable to all railroad companies engaged in the carrying of freight from any place in the United States, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey as amended.

Mr. SEWELL. I trust that the amendment to the amendment will not be adopted. It would destroy the character of the amendment as proposed by me. I wish to reach the joint railroad and transportation companies competing with the great trunk lines of this country and running through Canada. If the words proposed are stricken out, the road that I wish to reach might do all the business in competition with our lines by just putting in part water.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey as amended is now before the Senate. Is the Senate ready for the question? [Having put the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a division.

Mr. HARRISON and others. Oh, no; that will result in a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. CONGER. It may result in forcing the bill over, but in the absence of two-thirds of the Senators it is not consistent with my feelings to let such amendments as this get into the bill when I think with a full hearing they can be kept out.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator has a remedy. He can move to strike out and insert after the bill is reported to the Senate; but let us now make some progress with the bill.

Mr. CONGER. Possession is nine points of the law,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again, with the consent of the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey as amended. [Having put the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent to correct the amendment in line 1 by sustituting the word "act" for the word "bill."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that verbal correction will be made.

Mr. MAHONE. At the end of the twelfth section of the bill I move to insert.

And it shall not be lawful for any transportation company to engage in such transportation of passengers or freights with any other such company unless it admits and contracts with any and all other transportation companies desiring to engage with it and its connecting carriers in the business of interstate commerce upon the same terms of association as those agreed upon between it and such other company. And the rate of transportation over all lines engaged in such business shall be computed and charged upon the following basis, that is to say: For passengers of the same class the combined charge of all the carriers, to be divided as they may agree, shall nevertheless, for all distances, be pro rata per mile. For freights of the same class and of like units, taking the car-load as the maximum, the total charge from the station of shipment to the station of final delivery shall be composed of two items—the charges for fixed expenses and the charge for any transfer where a break of gauge or a transshipment from rail to vessel, or vice versa, or a necessary porterage may be imposed, such proper charges for each class of freight and like units below and including the car-load to be ascertained and agreed by the transportation companies concerned, subject to the approval of the said board of commissioners. The charge for transportation of freights of the same class and unit below and including the car-load shall be, as to the same carrier composing part of the route traversed, for all distances, pro rata per mile, to be divided between the carriers directly performing the service as they may agree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MAXEY. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia is a very important one. It is now within a few minutes of 7 o'clock. We can not understand that amendment and vote intelligently upon it now, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is paired.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM. I was requested to state that my colleague [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Beck,	Harris,	Mahone,	Vest.
Call,	Jackson,	Maxey,
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,
Hampton,	Lamar,	Ransom,

NAYS—24.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Blair,	Dolph,	Jonas,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,
Chace,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Conger,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Pike,	Wilson.

ABSENT—39.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Bayard,	Garland,	Logan,	Sabin,
Brown,	George,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Slater,
Camden,	Gorman,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vance,
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Palmer,	Walker,
Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Fair,	Kenna,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum has voted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rule requires that the roll shall be called.

Mr. CONGER. I think before the announcement that no quorum is present the decision of the Senate on the motion should be stated, as the rules do not require that a quorum shall be present to adjourn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Less than a quorum may refuse to adjourn, but nothing can be done until the presence of a quorum is secured.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair should have stated that the noes have it on the motion to adjourn. The lack of a quorum being disclosed, the next thing in order is the call of the Senate. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when Mr. BAYARD's name was called). I ought to say that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] stated to me that he was obliged to be absent this evening, and asked me to pair with him on the bill and the amendments.

The roll-call was concluded, 43 Senators having answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call shows that 43 Senators are present, being a quorum. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JACKSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the fact that the fourteenth section will have to be amended. Inasmuch as he has provided for nine commissioners at $7,500 each, the amount appropriated in the fourteenth section will not be sufficient. That section will require an amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is in order I desire to ask the Senate to amend that section by striking out "sixty" and inserting "ninety" before the word "thousand."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I so thought.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section as it stands has been agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I will ask unanimous consent to move that amendment. I think there will be no objection to it, perhaps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that section 14 be amended, in line 1, by striking out "sixty" and inserting "ninety" before the word "thousand;" so as to read—

That the sum of $90,000 is hereby appropriated, &c.

Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I have a number of amendments that were left with me by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. He is very anxious that they shall be presented for consideration before the bill is disposed of, and inasmuch as he has been compelled to go to New York and desires to be here himself to offer them, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CALL. Then I offer an amendment to the bill on behalf of the Senator from Mississippi. At the end of section 4 I move to add:

And proof that any transportation company has made a greater charge for hauling any such freight for a shorter distance than it charges for hauling in a contemporaneous service a like quantity of similar freight for a greater distance, shall be prima facie evidence of unjust discrimination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire what is the parliamentary condition of the bill? Is it not that the Senate have adopted a substitute for the pending bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole has agreed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert what the Senate has agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Then I rise to the question of order, that it is not in order to amend by inserting new matter between two sections which are part of one text, the substitute already agreed on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is in order to move additions, but not to strike out.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair will pardon me, I had not concluded my statement. My proposition is that those additions can only come in at the end of the bill. The fact that a particular text is divided into sections does not make it any the less one text when it is adopted as a unit as a substitute; and when it is one text it can not be amended, after having been adopted as an amendment by a vote, at the same stage of the bill. It would be in order to add a new section at the end of the matter which has been adopted, but you can not put in between the lines in a section or between any two lines of the substitute anywhere an amendment, I respectfully submit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. It has been, the Chair thinks, the constant practice of the Senate to admit affirmative amendments of additional words in any part of an amendment that has been agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, of course, but I do not remember to have been present in my brief service in the Senate on any single occasion when the Senate has acted upon the practice to which the Chair refers. Having taken some little pains to master the parliamentary law, I had supposed that to be the settled parliamentary law. However, I defer to the decision of the Chair, which, of course, is founded upon a larger experience and upon profounder learning than my own.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not remember any precise instance, but the Chair is confident that it has been the practice of the Senate ever since the present occupant of the chair has been in the Senate to admit without question or dispute any affirmative additional words to an amendment that had been agreed to in any part of the amendment. The Chair may be in error, but that is the opinion of the Chair at this moment.

Mr. RANSOM. I should like to ask the Chair if the rule suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts that the substitute can not be amended would apply to the bill after it is reported to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore It will then be entirely open to amendment.

Mr. RANSOM. I simply made the inquiry so as to suggest to my friend from Florida that he would have no difficulty whatever with his amendments when the bill is reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the present amendment of the Senator from Florida is in order.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair will pardon me, the suggestion I distinctly made was as to the right to amend at the same stage.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Illinois who has charge of the bill will permit me to make a suggestion to him, I ask him if it would not suit his convenience, if he can get unanimous consent, to agree upon some hour to-morrow at which we shall take a vote upon the bill? It seems to me almost impossible to get through with the bill to-night with the number of amendments of which notice has been given. I should like to have the Senator from Illinois express his opinion upon that subject.

Mr. CULLOM. If I were to yield to the suggestion of the Senator from South Carolina it would be a very great convenience to me. I am not staying here as a matter of convenience, but I have felt that it is my duty to insist upon the consideration of the bill until it is concluded, because I have felt very greatly embarrassed at its continuing before the Senate so long obstructing other public business of importance. I gave notice yesterday that I should ask the Senate to remain here to-day until the bill was finished. If the Senate would agree to vote at 3 o'clock to morrow on the bill so as to give a few minutes' time for offering amendments and five-minute talks in explanation of them, so far as I am personally concerned I would not object to the Senate adjourning with the understanding that the final vote shall be taken to-morrow at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken at 3 o'clock to-morrow, in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CALL. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from South Carolina to fix the hour at 4 o'clock to-morrow. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], who is compelled to be absent to-day, desires to be heard upon the bill. The amendments which I am offering are his, and I offer them under a promise to him that they should be offered to the bill. He desires to be here, and I ask that the hour be fixed at 4 o'clock to-morrow, so as to give him an opportunity to be heard on the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill immediately after the morning business proper is concluded to-morrow, which will give a considerable time for discussion and amendment, and I think there will be time enough between that and 3 o'clock. I hope there will be no objection to that arrangement. I ask the Senator from Florida to allow the bill to go along to-night so far as to get it into the Senate, after which he will have an opportunity to offer his amendments, and they will not be repeated by being twice offered.

Mr. CALL. I shall not object to the arrangement proposed, but I think 4 o'clock will be the better hour, if the Senator will allow me to suggest it.

Mr. CULLOM. I think 3 o'clock would be better.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida withdraw his amendment for the time being?

Mr. CALL. I will do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that it be understood that the bill be taken up immediately after the morning business to-morrow, and that the final vote upon the bill and all amendments offered and to be offered shall be taken, without further debate, after 3 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. That is the understanding. The Chair understands that these agreements do not go on the Journal.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the bill be reported to the Senate to-night. The Senator from Florida can offer his amendments after the bill is reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no further amendments be proposed the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BOWEN. I ask the Senator to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the motion.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOWEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to the authority of the Senate the Chair appoints, to fill the vacancies occasioned by the expiration of the term of Senator Sheffield, of Rhode Island:

On the Committee on Claims, Mr. CHACE.

On the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage, Mr. CHACE.

On the Committee on Mines and Mining, Mr. CHACE.

On the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, Mr. CHACE.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 3, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

Mr. LORE. I ask that so much of the Journal as relates to the formal introduction of bills and joint resolutions be omitted in the reading.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move also that so much of the Journal as relates to the filibustering proceedings last night be omitted in the reading.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The Journal was then read and approved.

PRINTING SMITHSONIAN REPORTS.

On motion of Mr. SINGLETON, by unanimous consent the joint resolution (S. R. 114) in regard to the printing of the reports of the Smithsonian Institution was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF EULOGIES ON LATE JOHN H. EVINS.

Mr. BRATTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed of the eulogies on the late John H. Evins, late a Representative of the Forty-eighth Congress from the State of South Carolina, 12,500 copies, of which 7,300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 9,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of the said John H. Evins to accompany such eulogies, and for the purpose of engraving and printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proper form would be to make it a joint resolution of the two Houses. Does the gentleman desire that it shall be put in the form of a joint resolution?

Mr. BRATTON. I do.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 327) providing for the printing of eulogies delivered in Congress upon John H. Evins, late a Representative of the Forty-eighth Congress from the State of South Carolina, was received, read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRATTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to submit a privileged report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask to have reprinted the report of the Committee on Appropriations accompanying the Post-Office appropriation bill.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri addressed the Chair some time ago to make a privileged report.

SILVER DOLLAR.

Mr. BLAND, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, submitted the following report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House whether the Clearing House Association at New York, or any national bank thereof, refuses to receive silver dollars or silver certificates in the settlement of their balances, or refuses to receive silver dollars or silver certificates from the Government in payment of balances due from the Government to said association, and whether any official or officials of the Government accede to or recognize such rule or practice.

Also, what amount of gold came into the Treasury of the United States in exchange at par for silver dollars and silver certificates during the month of January, 1885.

Also, whether any national bank, or association of national banks, refuses to receive or pay out silver dollars or silver certificates contrary to law, or have adopted any rule or practice in that regard for the purpose of discrediting such money, or the effect of which is to depreciate the same.

Also, what amount of silver coin was in the Treasury of the United States on the 1st day of January, 1879, and of each year thereafter, not held for the redemption of silver certificates, and what proportion the said coin bore on each of those dates to the net cash in the Treasury at those several dates.

Also, what amount of the customs and internal revenues and other receipts of the Government, stated separately, have been received in silver coin or silver certificates, stated by months for each year, since the 1st day of January, 1879.

Also, what other governments of the world did, during the year 1883, permit the coinage of legal-tender silver coin.

Also, the amount of such coinage, and what part thereof was from recoinage and what part from bullion.

Also, the price paid per ounce by the Director of the Mint for silver bullion on the 1st days of January and July each year from 1878 to 1885, both years inclusive.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. HISCOCK. On what ground is that claimed to be a privileged report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York questions the privileged character of the report. The Clerk will read clause 1 of Rule XXIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. Each Monday morning during a session of Congress, immediately after the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting has been read and approved, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference, without debate; on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred, and on this call only resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees, which resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week thereafter.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does the Chair decide that that gives these reports a right to be considered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine that it has been but a very few days since a decision was made by the permanent Speaker of this House upon this very question, which the Chair was endeavoring to follow, and which decision held that these reports were privileged under the rule.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I was aware of that. I only want to congratulate the Chair and the House on the fact that there is something else besides appropriation bills that are considered to be privileged in this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state further that it lies of course with the House to determine the question of consideration.

Mr. KEIFER. Is this a resolution reported by a committee, or is it offered by the gentleman from Missouri himself?

Mr. BLAND. This is a report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it is in order under the rule.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS OF LADING, ETC.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7163) to regulate the forms of bills of lading and the duties and liabilities of ship-owners and others, and ask to put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every vessel publicly offered at any port of the United States for the conveyance of goods and merchandise on the high seas, and all vessels bringing general cargo to any port of the United States, shall be liable to all the conditions and restrictions of this act.

SEC. 2. That it shall not be lawful for any such vessel, her owners, master, agent, or manager, to issue any bill of lading which does not clearly specify the exact voyage intended to be made, and any and every port at which it is contemplated she shall touch in the course of said voyage; and every departure from such voyage, save only when compelled thereto by dangers of the sea, unforeseen necessity, vis major, or to save life and property in distress at sea, and to tow and convey the same into the nearest or most convenient port of safety, shall be deemed a deviation. But nothing in this act contained shall prevent or interfere with the right of the vessel to reserve to herself the privilege of calling at or returning to any port or ports named in the bill of lading, and a failure to exercise such privilege shall not constitute a violation of this act or be deemed a deviation.

SEC. 3. That it shall not be lawful for any such vessel, her owners, master, agent, or manager, to insert in any bill of lading any clause, covenant, or agreement whereby the obligations of the owners of said vessel to properly equip, man, provision, and outfit said vessel, and in every way and manner within their, his, or her power to render said vessel seaworthy and capable of performing her intended voyage, shall in any wise be lessened, weakened, or avoided; and all provisions and clauses contained in any bill of lading issued by any such public carrier relieving from liability the vessel, her owners or master, for their or his neglect, or for any improper condition of the vessel, shall be null and void and of no effect in law.

SEC. 4. That it shall not be lawful for any such public carrier, by any clause or exception in any contract or bill of lading, to be relieved from liability for its, his, her, or their negligence, fault, or failure in proper stowage, custody, and care of all lawful merchandise confided to their charge, nor for failure by reason of negligence to deliver the same, nor to provide for or adopt any other or different transportation than that agreed on by the vessel or voyage specified by which the goods have been shipped, liability for dangers of the sea, vis major, or unforeseen necessity being in all cases under this act excepted, nor to limit the extent of their liability to less than an indemnity to the claimant; nor shall anything in this act contained be construed as enlarging the right of any carrier to limit his liability other than as now established by law.

SEC. 5. That all goods and merchandise delivered to and received by any such public carrier shall be deemed as shipped subject to the conditions of this act, and entitled to a bill of lading in accordance therewith; and upon the refusal of the master or agent to issue such bill of lading on demand within a reasonable period after shipment, unless such goods and merchandise have been received from a preceding carrier and a bill of lading in conformity hereto has been issued, clearance of such vessel upon which said goods were to be or were laden shall be refused by the custom-house authorities of the port until such bill of lading be granted; and such vessel shall be liable to an action in rem for all damages and losses suffered by the shipper of goods or merchandise by reason of such refusal or neglect. In case of any dispute as to whether the terms of any bill of lading disagree with this act, and clearance if refused or delayed in consequence thereof, the following clause may then be inserted in or indorsed on such bill of lading, namely: "It is hereby declared that this bill of lading, as well as all other copies thereof, are intended to conform in all particulars to the act of Congress of 1884 on the subject of the form of bills of lading, and anything herein contained to the contrary is hereby made null and void." And thereupon the collector may deem such insertion or indorsement as making the bill of lading conform hereto, and shall grant the clearance if the vessel is otherwise entitled thereto.

SEC. 6. That if any vessel, her master, agent, or manager, shall plead, in bar or defense of any suit at law any clause or exception of any bill of lading contrary to the provisions of this act, the limitation of liability provided by section 4283 of the Revised Statutes, relating to ship-owners, shall not be held to apply to such vessel, owners, or either or any of them.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of September, 1884.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS. I shall object if this is going to give rise to any extended debate.

Mr. LONG. If the gentleman will reserve his objection for a moment, I think a brief explanation will be all that is necessary to satisfy the House as to the propriety of passing this bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I am compelled to object.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a brief explanation?

Mr. THOMAS. I am willing to hear an explanation.

Mr. WILLIS. How long does the gentleman ask?

Mr. LONG. I think three minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this is a bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAMES], representing the large ship-owning interests of New York city. It has been considered by the Committee on Commerce and unanimously reported by that committee to the House.

The report states that our ocean-carrying trade is to-day almost entirely in the hands of foreign steamship lines. The object of the bill is to relieve American shippers and importers from risks which at common law belong to the carrier, but which the carrier by means of provisions inserted in his bill of lading has gradually succeeded in transferring to the shipper. Within a few years new clauses have been introduced, so that the carrier has relieved himself even of some of the risks arising from his own negligence. It is claimed that some of these provisions relieve him from the liabilities for thieves of all kinds, whether on board or not, from "vermin," "rats," "heat," "stowage," fire, negligence on the part of his own employés; negligence, default, or error in judgment on the part of persons in the service of the ship-owner, defects in the hull or machinery, and even unseaworthiness on the part of the steamer. It is very important that there should be some general rule as to the forms of bills of lading.

If there be no objection to the present consideration of the bill I will move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. COX, of New York. The last section of this bill should be amended so as to take effect in 1885 instead of 1884. The bill reads September 1, 1884.

Mr. LONG. I will move to amend so that it will go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1885.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to demand the previous question?

Mr. LONG. I do.

Mr. WELLER. Regular order. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late in making his demand for the regular order as against this demand of the gentleman from Massachusetts for the previous question upon the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. I called the regular order, and the Chair recognized me as thus doing. I desire to inquire if, under the rules, the Speaker of the House can ignore that call and pass to the consideration of this bill, which requires unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman made no demand for the regular order until the request for unanimous consent, submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, had been agreed to by the House and an amendment had been suggested and agreed to. The Chair thinks that the gentleman makes his objection too late. The previous question has been ordered on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as this bill was reported last year, that wherever the words "eighty-four" appear in the bill they be changed to "eighty-five."

There was no objection.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. EATON. I desire to take a concurrent resolution from the Speaker's table relating to the Presidential count of next week. It is a House resolution with Senate amendments. I think there will be no discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut rises to a question of privilege, involving the count of the electoral vote. The Chair asks that the House be in order, so that the gentleman may be heard.

Mr. EATON. I move to take from the Speaker's table a concurrent resolution which passed this House some days ago and went to the Senate, where an amendment has been made thereto. I ask for the consideration of the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Connecticut, is there any objection to concurring in the Senate amendment?

Mr. EATON. Not at all. There will be no discussion.

The Clerk read the amendment of the Senate, as follows:

In line 9, on page 1, strike out "one person to be appointed teller" and insert "two persons to be appointed tellers."

Mr. EATON. I desire to say just one word. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] is the author of the resolution which passed the House. The amendment was made in the Senate upon the ground that since the organization of the Government there had always been two tellers on the part of the Senate. I am compelled to say that the Senate has not examined the matter thoroughly. There have been, up to 1868, but two instances where there were two tellers on the part of the Senate. Always, with two exceptions, there has been but one teller on the part of the Senate with two on the part of the House. But it is a matter of no significance whatever. Therefore I move that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. EATON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVAL ADVISORY BOARD.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back with an amendment the resolution which I send to the desk, and which was referred to the committee more than a week ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to inform this House the amount that has been expended by the naval advisory board as the cost of the board; the number of employés and amounts paid each; the amount of salary drawn by the civilian members of said board and from what appropriation it was drawn, and the amount paid each member of board as traveling, mileage, or other expenses.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Also, what changes, if any, have been made from the original plan in hulls, boilers, machinery, &c., by the Secretary of the Navy and the advisory board of the ships Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin, and the cost of such changes in each case.

Mr. COX, of New York. I call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is the amendment in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will examine it. [After a pause.] The Chair thinks the amendment is in order. It is a matter of inquiry.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WEST VIRGINIA TROOPS.

Mr. GOFF. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 3462) for the relief of West Virginia troops, acting under the authority of the governor of the State. The bill has been reported with amendments.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By agreement of the House made on yesterday, by unanimous consent, a private bill that had been called up by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BALLENTINE] was to be considered this morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

R. J. P. WHITE AND OTHERS.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 646) for the relief of R. J. P. White, Peter Hanger, and L. T. Green.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on whether the bill shall be read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the consideration of this bill was postponed to enable the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES], to consider the matter.

Mr. BALLENTINE. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me, I will say that the chairman of the War Claims Committee has informed me this morning that he considered this bill as right and that these claims are just.

Mr. GEDDES. The statement of the gentleman from Tennessee is correct.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BALLENTINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SPECIAL AGENTS IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back with an amendment the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the House of Representatives a list of the names of the persons who were borne on the rolls of the Department as special agents on the 1st day of November, 1884; also, a list of those on said rolls as such special agents on the 2d day of February, 1885; said list to include the names of those borne on what is known as the fraud-rolls of said Department. Also to specify the names of those removed or discharged between said dates, and the cause or causes of said removal or discharge; also the names of those discharged and reinstated between said dates, and the reasons for their reinstatement.

The Clerk read the report of the committee, as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information touching the appointment and dismissal of special agents, having considered the same, report it back to the House herewith, and recommend its adoption, with the following mendment: In line 7 of said resolution, after the words "eighteen hundred and eighty-four," insert the following: "the 30th day of June and 1st day of July, 1883 and 1884, and the necessity for their appointment."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JULIO R. SANTOS.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to report a resolution which I think is in the nature of a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEWART] rise to make a privileged report?

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Yes, sir. It is a resolution in answer to an inquiry addressed to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I think it comes under the head of a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a privileged report. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to take all necessary and proper measures to assure Julio R. Santos, an American citizen now imprisoned in Ecuador, a speedy and impartial trial, and to protect him in his life and his property.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the adoption of this resolution as a substitute for the resolution on the same subject referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEWART] that the report as amended by the substitute be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The Chair will first ask the consent of the House to submit certain executive communications.

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE, IQUIQUE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a communication from the Secretary of State relative to the burning of the effects of the United States consulate at Iquique, Peru, and asking an appropriation to reimburse the United States consul; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

POWOW RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a report from the Chief of Engineers of a survey of Powow River, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

COEUR D'ALENE LAKE AND RIVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing a report from the Chief of Engineers of an examination of Coeur d'Alene lake and river, and of Saint Joseph's River, Idaho; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the seventh number of the Statistical Abstract of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GLASCOCK, for this day, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BRAINERD, for this day.

To Mr. HOWEY, until 7th instant, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. ROSECRANS, by unanimous consent the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8025) for the relief of Christian R. Purdum, Hervey E. Clark, John M. Lamb, and Julius C. Shainwald; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. ROSECRANS, by unanimous consent the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1631) for the relief of John W. Blake; and the same was referred to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for. The regular order is the unfinished business of yesterday's session, which is the report made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] from the Committee on Rules.

The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "ten" as the number of members required to object in order to prevent the consideration of a bill.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, can that report now be read for the information of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It may be in the absence of objection. If no objection be made, the Clerk will read the report.

Several members objected.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read that part of the report to which my amendment applies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the clause which is proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "five," before the word members, and insert "ten;" so that it will read, "and the bills and resolutions so designated shall be considered, unless objected to by at least ten members."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio which has just been read.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 117, noes 55.

Mr. YAPLE. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and 26 members voted in the affirmative and 139 in the negative—not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon agreeing to the report of the Committee on Rules as amended, upon which the previous question is operating.

The report as amended was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. A great many members would like to have this rule, as now amended, printed in the RECORD of to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be printed in the RECORD of to-morrow as amended.

There was no objection.

The resolution, as amended, is as follows:

Resolved, That each morning during the remainder of this session, immediately after the approval of the Journal, there shall be set apart one hour for motions to take up and consider such bills or resolutions on any of the Calendars of the House, or on the Speaker's table, or bills favorably reported from the Calendars undisposed of, as the member making the motion may designate. And the bills or resolutions so designated shall be immediately considered, unless objected to by at least ten members. But no bill or resolution taken up for consideration under this order shall be debated for more than ten minutes, which time shall be equally divided between the supporters and the opponents of the measure. If the yeas and nays shall be ordered on any such bill or resolution, or any proposed amendment thereto, and the call of the roll shall be commenced before the expiration of the said one hour, the same shall be completed before the regular order of business is entered upon: Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees, or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, my object being to call up the river and harbor bill. Pending this motion I move that all general debate in Committee of the Whole on this bill be limited to one hour and a half; and on that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope that will not be done. The members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have not got through addressing the Committee of the Whole on the subject——

Mr. WILLIS. I think the committee will be liberal in this matter.

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope the gentleman will allow a little more time than an hour and a half. So far as I am concerned, I think the friends of the river and harbor bill on this side of the House——

Mr. WILLIS. What time does my friend from Minnesota suggest?

Mr. WASHBURN. I would say three hours and a half.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will say two hours, we can agree upon that.

Mr. HENLEY. Give them leave to print.

Mr. WILLIS. I will modify my motion so as to allow three hours for general debate; and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN. So far as I am concerned, I believe it is the general disposition on this side of the House, certainly of those who are the real friends of a respectable river and harbor bill, to agree to three hours.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is it understood that the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors resign their right to occupy this time? Because otherwise other members of the House, who have not had opportunity to be represented before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, will have no opportunity to be represented before the House.

Mr. WILLIS. So far as one member of the committee can control the matter, ample time will be allowed in Committee of the Whole for speeches of ten, fifteen, or twenty minutes each. I will endeavor to consult the wishes of all sides of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to any agreement at variance with the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to limit general debate in Committee of the Whole on the river and harbor bill to three hours.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Do I understand it is arranged that members of the committee shall not occupy all this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no information upon that subject.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a matter to be regulated by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the chairman of the Committee of the Whole holds that the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors have the right to be heard first, and it looks as if they were not only to be heard first, but also to be heard last.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine that in the absence of any agreement (of which the Chair knows nothing) the disposition of time in the Committee of the Whole would be regulated by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But in determining this question it is very important the House should know how that recognition is going to be extended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair has no control over the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am aware of that; but the House has such control, and I want to bring the question to the attention of the House. If the House does not wish to control it, no one can find any fault.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken; there were—ayes 139, noes 48.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I call for the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, the ayes were 31—less than one-fifth of the last vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the yeas and nays are not ordered.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, 33 voting in favor thereof; and Mr. REED, of Maine, and Mr. WILLIS were appointed.

Mr. WILLIS. If the House will indulge me, in the interest of public business [cries of "Regular order!"] I ask whether three hours and a half——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, all I ask of the House is that we who are not members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors shall have an opportunity to discuss this question. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The House is dividing.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 143.

So (one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 174, nays 72, not voting 77; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

During the roll-call,

Mr. WASHBURN moved by unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. SKINNER, of New York.
Mr. SHAW with Mr. LAIRD.
Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. KELLOGG.
Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.
Mr. FYAN with Mr. HOOPER.
Mr. DUNN with Mr. CHALMERS.
Mr. ELLIOTT with Mr. VALENTINE.
Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, with Mr. BRAINERD.
Mr. GARRISON with Mr. BARR.
Mr. CLAY with Mr. HOWEY.

On this vote—

Mr. SENEY with Mr. STONE.
Mr. VAN EATON with Mr. JAMES.
Mr. GEORGE D. WISE with Mr. STEELE.
Mr. WISE would have voted "ay" and Mr. STEELE "no."

For this day—

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. WEAVER.
Mr. MULLER with Mr HOUK.
Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. KELLEY.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair). The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to close general debate on the river and harbor bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union at the end of three hours.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I demand a division on that question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 41.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. WILLIS and Mr. HEPBURN.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will waive the question of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes were 97, noes 41; and the point of no quorum having been withdrawn, the motion is agreed to.

The question now recurs on the motion to go into committee for the purpose of considering the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The present condition concerning the debate is that on the Democratic side Mr. WILLIS, Mr. REAGAN, Mr. BLANCHARD, and Mr. GIBSON have been heard, and on the Republican side Mr. PRICE, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. BAYNE. All of these are of the committee except Mr. PRICE. He has twenty-five minutes reserved, Mr. WILLIS twenty-five, and Mr. GIBSON twenty-two. At present the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is entitled to the floor, he having the floor when the committee rose last week.

Mr. WILLIS. I feel, under the statement I made to the House, I should surrender my time, and I do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made this statement with the desire there should be some arrangement agreed upon between gentlemen. There are many persons on the list of those who are on the committee and those who are not on the committee. While there is no positive rule on the subject, the custom is so uniform to recognize members of the committee, the Chair has felt it his duty to do so, alternating from side to side and from those favoring the bill to those opposing the bill. The Chair hopes that some arrangement will be made during the time the gentleman from Arkansas is speaking which will be satisfactory.

By order of the House general debate has been limited to three hours.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, does it appear from any memorandum before the Chair how much time the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors propose to occupy?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that every member of the committee had his name on the list, so far as the Chair remembers, except one who is ill: The gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I am ready to agree to allow the gentleman the extra ten minutes that he desires if the whole time can be extended ten minutes; but I fear that the gentleman himself [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] voted for the restriction of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be impossible to extend the time beyond the limit fixed by the House. Is there objection to the extension of time asked for by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]?

Mr. WASHBURN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to the extension of the gentleman's time, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, when addressing the House a few days ago on this bill I gave a table of figures which I conceded to be imperfect, but claimed to be as nearly correct as could be arrived at in the few minutes that were allowed for examination after the bill was obtainable and before the debate opened.

I have carefully revised these tables, and shall by leave of the House print them as a part of my remarks:

States and Territories.	Amount.	States and Territories.	Amount.
Maine	$67,000	California†	$162,500
New Hampshire	22,500	Oregon	225,500

Minnesota	50,000
Iowa†	5,000	Total	11,961,600

*Southern States. †States represented on committees.

To briefly restate some of these figures may serve to awaken an interest on the subject that will assist in settling intelligently and fairly the question before us.

The whole sum to be appropriated is $11,961,600, besides providing for some surveying, &c., at an unknown cost. Of this sum there is to be expended: For reservoirs, $35,000; for Hennepin Canal, $300,00; for improvement Ohio River, $475,000; for improvement Missouri River, $540,000; for improvement Mississippi River, $3,820,000, of which $2,940,000 is to be expended below Cairo, and $880,000 above Cairo. In thirteen Southern States, with a population of 15,254,115, there is to be expended the sum of $3,683,900; and in twenty-five Northern States and Territories, with a population of 32,826,584, there is to be expended $3,107,700.

These sums last named are outside of the appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers, and for the reservoirs at the head of the Mississippi, and for the Hennepin Canal. The average appropriation to these States South is $283,337, and the average to the Northern States mentioned in the bill is $124,308; difference, $159,029 on an average, or over half a million more for the thirteen than for the twenty-five; or, on a population of 15,254,115, more than for a population of 32,826,584.

One extraordinary item is the sum of $1,012,500 for the State of Texas, and a part of that is one item of $750,000 for improving Galveston Harbor, which, it is claimed by its friends, is to be the initial step toward the expenditure of $8,000,000 or more on said harbor. But in a very eloquent argument made on Saturday by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] in favor of this appropriation, he made the startling announcement that "Galveston shipped annually 800,000 bales of cotton;" and being asked how many tons that would make, he answered, "Count it yourself, at five hundred pounds per bale." I understand, but I may be mistaken, that in that condition cotton is worth about 10 cents per pound; and, if so, that whole matter of commerce is but $40,000,000.

While we are dealing in figures I desire to submit a few on other matters that may very properly be considered in this connection. The States having a representation by one of their own members on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors get, on an average, $233,140, while those not so represented, and named in the bill, get by its provisions $149,750 on an average, or $83,390 less than the others. These facts and figures tell their own story, but when interpreted by a few more figures, which I now propose to submit, I think gentlemen on both sides of this House, who mean to be fair, will admit that this manner of discussion is legitimate, as there is a clear discrimination against one part of the country and in favor of another. To-day we stand confronted with the fact that in this Chamber there are but 17,000 and a fraction of votes behind every member who represents one of the late insurrectionary States—I mean on an average—while in the other States of the Union there is a fraction of over 27,000 votes behind each member of this body on an average. I get my authority for this statement from the Congressional Directory of the Forty-eighth Congress; and the same inequality holds good in the electoral college.

Again, it cost this Government for the year 1884, to pay the expenses of the United States courts in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia, with an aggregate population of 12,990,246, the sum of $1,020,184.36; while for the same purpose for the States of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, with an aggregate population of 26,239,010, the cost was only $751,087.19. In other words, for the same purpose, and for half the population, it cost the Government $847,389.20 more in the South than it did in the North. I submit that it is perfectly proper to consider all of the foregoing facts in connection with this bill. Every member of this House, and every tax-payer in the country, has a right to inquire where the revenues are being expended, and how, and by whom.

I fully concur with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] that sectional considerations should not control these appropriations; and it is because I so believe that I oppose this bill in its present form.

Let me illustrate: For two different improvements in the Chippewa River, in the State of Wisconsin, the Government engineers reported that the sum of $55,000 could be judiciously expended; and the committee insert in this bill the sum of $13,500 to cover both; and I was told by a member of the committee that it had adopted a rule to recommend 25 per cent. of the recommendations of the engineers.

Looking at this bill, I find that in the Northern States, particularly Michigan, Wisconsin, and some others, this rule has been inflexibly enforced or the amount recommended in such instances falls below the percentage named. In none of these instances has this percentage been exceeded. I have no objection to the rule, but let us see how it is applied and how it works.

Mr. WILLIS. Will my friend allow me to say in one second——

Mr. PRICE. I yield for one second.

Mr. WILLIS. As to political votes in the committee, I will state here in the presence of every member of the committee that there has never been any division in the committee politically since its creation. Further I will say that of the fifteen members of the committee (unless you count me as a Southern member) twelve are from the North and three from the South. As to the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, both of them have representatives on the committee.

Mr. PRICE. It is a matter of the most profound indifference to me whether the fraud has been perpetrated by Northern or by Southern men. It is sufficient for me to know that the bill is unequal in its provisions, sectional in its character, and as such should be rebuked by the House.

Mr. OCHILTREE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PRICE. I must decline to do so, though I would like very much to oblige the gentleman. The other day when I occupied the floor for a brief period I allowed my time to be frittered away by interruptions, but on a subsequent day when I sought from a gentleman, who after consuming an hour had his time extended, the privilege of making one single remark which would have saved the consistency of his record and relieved me from the necessity of making a correction of it to-day, he deliberately refused me that opportunity. I must decline, in my brief time, to be interrupted.

Last summer an extraordinary flood occurred in the Chippewa River which created an impassable bar in it, and I asked that an additional sum might be appropriated for its removal. I was told that I could not get it, because the committee would not entertain a proposition to appropriate for any work not recommended by the engineers.

Through the courtesy of a member of the committee, General HENDERSON, of Illinois, I succeeded in getting them to amend the bill so as to include the work on the bar with the work on the Yellow Banks and the jetties at the mouth of the river; but I was held inflexibly to the $13,500 to make these three improvements, when $55,000 was recommended by the engineers for two of them, and this, too, upon a river upon which a line of steamboats plies and that has a lumber commerce alone of $10,000,000 annually.

For the improvement of the Superior Harbor the engineers recommended an appropriation of $50,000, but the committee, adhering to their "rule," give that improvement in this bill $12,500, or 25 per cent.

The engineer in charge has also sent a supplemental report, in which he recommends a further appropriation of $70,000 to improve the Saint Louis River at Superior, which is really a part of the Superior Harbor, and on this I get nothing by this bill. isIt due, however, to the committee to say that I do not know whether or not they were in possession of this supplemental report. I could not get to them to tell them of it, and the Wisconsin member of that committee was prostrated on a bed of sickness.

The committee did graciously permit by the bill an expenditure of a part of the $12,500 which was for the Superior Bay on the work in Saint Louis Bay. Thus we have $12,500 appropriated instead of $120,000 recommended by the engineers, or $17,500 less than 25 per cent. on such recommendation of the engineers.

I am not appealing to the House on sectional grounds, but I could show if I had time that the commerce of that section of the country towers away above and overshadows the entire commerce of the city of Galveston; and that while the rule laid down by the committee was rigidly enforced in the North it was not enforced as to the South.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman allow me just a moment?

Mr. PRICE. Nothing would give me greater pleasure; but I can not afford to yield unless my time can be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. PRICE. No, sir. As suggested by a friend near me, I must "say no, and go on."

At the head of Lake Superior, and on the Wisconsin side, there are now two railroads and three more are being built. There is one coal dock which will hold one hundred and twenty-five thousand tons. A cattle company owning large herds in Arizona and elsewhere are commencing to ship cattle from the great Northwest by way of Superior to the seaboard. They have stabling enough to shelter and are now wintering six hundred head at that place for shipment East in the spring, and they are so well satisfied at present with the experiment that many thousand will go East by way of Superior next year, and thus avoid the more unhealthy Southern routes heretofore used. There is no power to foresee the future commercial prosperity of the head of Lake Superior.

The following letter from Lieutenant-Colonel of Engineers O. M. Poe, in relation to the present and future of the Sault Saint Mary's Canal will give some idea of the commerce of these lakes, when it is remembered that most of the commerce of the canal has to pass the head of Lake Superior:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Detroit, Mich., January 8, 1885.

SIR: In my annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, I submitted a project for the enlargement of Saint Mary's Falls Canal, including the construction of a new lock in place of the two old ones, and urged the matter in terms as strong as seemed proper.

It was stated that the commerce through the canal during 1883 was 2,042,295 tons (registered); that the annual increase in tonnage for fifteen years had been quite uniform, averaging 107,313 tons per year; that only 11 per cent. of the vessels passing the canal during 1883 were of sufficiently light draught to admit of their passing through the old locks; and that if these figures were maintained for eight years the present lockage system, although in constant operation, would be insufficient to take care of the shipping.

We now have complete returns for the season of 1884, and the annual increase in tonnage has not only been maintained but largely exceeded; that is to say, the registered tonnage passing through the canal during the season of 1884 was 2,997,837 tons, an increase of 955,578 tons, or nine times the average annual increase for the preceding fifteen years. Or, to state it possibly with greater force, this increase in 1884 is equal to the entire commerce through the canal during the first five years it was open to navigation.

Should this rate of increase be maintained, the full capacity of the lockage system will be reached within four years instead of eight, as estimated in the annual report.

The following table affords the means of comparing, in detail, the business of the canal during the season of 1884 with that of 1883:

Comparative statement of the commerce through Saint Mary's Falls Canal, Michigan, for the seasons of 1883 and 1884.

Canal opened April 23 and closed December 10, 1884, being open to navigation 232 days.

Canal was opened during season of 1883 224 days.

The increase in registered tonnage was 47 per cent.; in grain, 87 per cent.; in flour, 82 per cent., and in iron ore 43 per cent

These are the great staples (although a notable increase in the lumber traffic was developed), and indicate the direction from which future increase must be expected.

It will be principally from the cereal products of the Northwest, through the systems of railways terminating on Lake Superior.

It is stated in the commercial columns of the newspapers that there are now stored at Duluth alone nearly 5,000,000 bushels of grain, and that this will be increased to more than 7,000,000 by the time navigation opens.

And yet this bill treats that section as though it were unworthy of consideration. I am in favor of a just and liberal appropriation bill; one that will include within its provisions all rivers and harbors which are of national importance, and want it as nearly equal sectionally as the commercial interests of the whole country will warrant. Not that I suppose that our rivers will ever be the arteries through which will flow the bulk of our commerce, but if no ton should ever be carried on their broad bosoms to the seaboard, when so improved as to make their navigation practicable and certain, they serve as about the only check on the rapacity of those who control the other avenues, because they are the only highways with which others can not "consolidate."

In the preparation of this bill the committee applied the principle of giving 25 per cent. only of the recommendations or estimates of the engineers in the North generally I believe—in my own district I know—and then fell below that. Another rule they adopted for their government I believe (and you must recollect that if I am wrong it is because my scources of information as to their purposes were extremely limited, as I could not get to talk with the committee) was to make no appropriation for new work or work not recommended by the Engineer or War Department. These rules were inflexible in the section where I am most interested, but became flexible and elastic under the balmier breezes of a milder clime.

I do not call attention to these inequalities to embitter the feelings of any member on this floor or of any American citizen, but to prevent a repetition of them, and awaken such attention to their existence as will insure their being remedied.

It is said this is an "era of good feeling." It ought to be. I want it to be. But my friend must be just; he must recognize my right to be his equal. I claim no superiority, and I can not without an earnest protest recognize the justness of these matters to which I have referred; nor can I consent to vote for this bill as it now stands, as it is clearly discriminating against sections and interests. Strike from it some of its most odious provisions and I will heartily support it and join with gentlemen from every section and of every political party in this or any other measure the tendency of which will be to make this what the God of nature intended it to be, the freest and most prosperous nation on the globe.

But our Government can never reach its full measure of usefulness unless the law-making power shall vest in men broad enough and honest enough to legislate with a wise and impartial reference to all sections, all interests, and all classes; until they come to be guided by the sole consideration that they are not so much the agents of a party as the agents of the people; until they study less how to place the opposite party in a bad attitude before the country by trapping them into doing badly and plan more how they may themselves do better; until we disenthrall ourselves from the senseless and infernal system of rules with which we have shackled and manacled ourselves.

To-day, if some mischievous wag should secrete at some place in this Chamber a parrot who had been taught the one word "object" (and a parrot could be taught to say that), the proceedings of this House could be brought to a standstill "under the rules," and "under the rules" I venture the opinion that not one member out of every twenty-five can become familiar with the several subjects upon which he is called to cast his vote, and that not one in fifty does have a clear idea of what is going on around him from day to day.

Gentlemen speak lightly of an expenditure of a dozen million dollars when we have not got nor have we the present means of getting 25 per cent. of what we honestly owe to men who have done work for the Government or to whom we have become indebted. There is an army of them. They crowd the corridors of the Capitol; they intercept and importune members of the committees; they plead and have been pleading for long years for simply their rights. In some cases the representatives of the third generation are growing gray in a vain attempt to induce Congress—this Congress—to pay a debt due to their great-grandfathers; and we do not deny the debt, do not even apologize for not paying it, but with a yawn we turn away and jangle through a day's session over the question of how the "rules" should be interpreted, or what particular committee shall have jurisdiction of a bill, or what particular measures shall be considered first. And all this time we are without coast defenses, without a navy, without a merchant marine. All over our land there are men dying broken-hearted in poorhouses, or in homes made wretched by poverty, who wrecked their lives and their fortunes in defense of the integrity of this country. Yet we stand here from day to day quarreling over the question of how we will adjust the manacles we have forged for ourselves and are voluntarily wearing.

I call attention to these matters not for the purpose of uselessly complaining, not for the purpose of wounding, but with the faint hope that it may have a tendency to remedy the wrongs; to induce to such action as will demonstrate to the country that we are willing to sink the partisan in the patriot; to think less of North or South and more of the whole country; to mete out equal and exact justice to all sections and all classes; to make an immediate and earnest effort to pay our just debts; to stimulate trade and commerce alike in all sections of our common country, and not waste millions on experiments or unjustly tax the industry and thrift of one section to encourage the idleness or unthrift of another.

I agree that locality alone should not govern in this appropriation, and I go further and say that in my judgment that should not be the controlling consideration; but I think neither of the members of this committee nor any other member will deny what I claim, that it is perfectly proper to consider this question, making it subordinate to the general commercial wants of the country; and I can not forget that the eighth Congressional district of Wisconsin, where the Mississippi with all its mighty volume of commerce laves the shores of four counties, the Saint Croix River the shores of five counties, and Lake Superior two more, while it is traversed by the Chippewa and the Black Rivers with an annual commerce of $12,000,000, gets under the provisions of this bill $33,000, when the recommendation of the engineers is $202,500, one-fourth of which is $50,625; so that instead of giving us one-fourth of the amount of the engineers' recommendation we receive $17,625—less even than 25 per cent.

No man can more highly appreciate the importance of improving our water ways than I do. It is not this principle I am combating; it is the gross inequalities apparent in the bill, and the extravagant expenditure of money that we can ill spare on schemes that are impracticable and visionary, that I am opposing.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] stated that Galveston was the "second cotton port in the United States." I hold in my hand a book belonging to the national Library entitled Cotton Facts, edition of October, 1884, which gives the annual cotton exports from the several United States ports since 1873; and if the statements of this book are true the gentleman's statement is incorrect, as I find that the average annual exports for the years 1873–'74 to 1883–'84, inclusive, to be as follows:

	Bales.
New Orleans	1,430,000
New York	539,000
Savannah	397,000
Galveston	328,000
Charleston	317,000

So that Galveston is not the second cotton port, as stated by the gentleman, nor is it even the third, but it is the fourth.

The gentleman stated also that the annual receipts of cotton at that port aggregate about 800,000 bales. In this the gentleman is still more widely mistaken if this book is correct, as it states the annual export to be but 328,000 bales for the last eleven years, and but 371,000 bales last year, and in the last eleven years it never reached in any one year a greater amount that 521,000 bales.

This reference to the mistakes of the gentleman is intended to prove two things: First, that the magnitude of the commerce of Galveston has been overrated in a manner which, if not corrected, would have a tendency to deceive the House; and second, to show that the bill presented to us for our indorsement has been illy digested and imperfectly considered.

Compare for a moment Galveston in the South with Superior in the North. Superior, in 1883, was entered by ten vessels with a registered tonnage of 7,734 tons, discharging at that port 9,750 tons of coal alone. In 1884 ninety-seven vessels, with a registered tonnage of 58,000 tons, discharged at that port 83,480 tons of coal alone. The recommendation of the engineers for this port was $120,000, and this bill gives it $12,500. The recommendation of the sums that can be profitably expended during the next year for a ship-canal in Galveston Bar is $500,000, and this bill gives it $750,000.

The gentleman further states that Wisconsin has no cause of complaint, as in the aggregate appropriations she is next to New York and Michigan, and stands third on the list. A reference to the bill will prove that Wisconsin stands thirteenth in the list as to amount.

But I am charged with making this a "sectional question." I deny and resent the statement. A bill formulated in a committee with closed doors, discriminating against the States having no immediate representation on the committee, discriminating against a section by overriding every consideration growing out of the volume and needs of commerce and of the recommendations of the engineers, is presented to us, and we are asked on a three hours' debate to crystallize it into a law, scarred and marred all over as it is with sectionalism. And because I have pointed out a few of these unjust provisions I am charged with making the discussion sectional. If I found a neighbor making off with my property and I should attempt to intercept him would I be justly chargeable with inciting a quarrel? I yield to no man in a desire to see all sectional considerations ignored in this House or elsewhere, and it affords me a melancholy pleasure to indorse, in closing, one-fourth of the statement made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], when he said he knew "No North, no South, no East, no West." He certainly knows no North.

Mr. STONE obtained the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] to yield me one minute.

Mr. STONE. I will do so.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire only to say one word in response to the sectional argument which has been made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE]. He opposes this bill because, as he claims, it is sectional. What is the fact? The records of the War Department show that there has been appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors of the State of Wisconsin $4,659,541. The records of the same Department show that the eight States of Tennessee, South Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Kentucky, Florida, Arkansas, and Alabama have received in the aggregate $332,140 less than the amount received by the single State of Wisconsin. Yet that State, through her Representative, now talks about sectionalism. [Applause.] The figures are as follows:

Tennessee	$85,500
South Carolina	963,000
Mississippi	377,900
Louisiana	245,400
Kentucky	457,000
Florida	760,350
Arkansas	316,500
Alabama	1,091,751
Total for eight States	4,317,401
Wisconsin alone	4,659,541

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, as under the order adopted by the House this debate is limited to a short time, I will not undertake to speak at large, as I had hoped to do, upon the general merits of this bill. I will merely occupy a few minutes in explaining that item in the bill in which I am especially interested, and which has been particularly alluded to by two or three members who have already taken part in the debate. I allude to the item which proposes an appropriation for the establishment of a first-class national harbor upon the Atlantic coast at a place in Massachusetts called Sandy Bay, at the extreme end of Cape Ann.

By the action of Congress at its last session the Secretary of War was authorized to commence the construction of such a harbor at this place, provided that a board of engineers to be appointed by him should upon examination find that this location—Sandy Bay, Massachusetts—was the best point on the coast between Boston and Portland for such a harbor.

The provision in the bill of last year passed without exciting any opposition. It was thoroughly considered in the committee before being reported to this House, and inasmuch as it proposed the commencement of a large work—the establishment of a harbor which will cost four or five million dollars—it was considered right and judicious on the part of the committee not to embark upon the enterprise until the board of engineers had made an examination and passed upon the question of location.

In pursuance of the authority thus vested in the Secretary of War a board of engineers was appointed, who examined the coast and made a report to the War Department. In their report this board of engineers find distinctly that the location at Sandy Bay is the best point on the coast between Boston and Portland for such a harbor.

The language of the bill last year which authorized this examination by the board of engineers was as follows:

> Constructing a national harbor of refuge of the first class at Sandy Bay, Cape Ann, Massachusetts, $100,000: Provided, That a board of three engineers, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, shall decide that this point is the best location on the coast between Boston and Portland for such a harbor that shall serve all the uses for which it may be needed.

In drafting that provision I had in my mind not only the establishment of a first-class harbor of refuge which would meet the demands of commerce and humanity, but I had also in my mind what I believe it the duty of this Government to consider, the value and importance of such a harbor possibly in the future as a military or naval station in case of foreign complications. The question having been thus submitted to the engineers, they found in their report, as I have stated, that Sandy Bay was the best location.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman state just where Sandy Bay is?

Mr. STONE. Sandy Bay is upon the extreme eastern end of Cape Ann, on the eastern shore of Massachusetts, which projects into the sea from ten to fifteen miles beyond the ordinary contour of the coast. It is in all respects, as the engineers have reported, a very desirable and strikingly suitable situation for the establishment of a harbor of this description. But while the engineers found, as I have stated, that that was the proper location, for some cause which is unexplained, having passed upon the question submitted to them, they then went beyond their authority, and considered the question whether or not it was for the interests of commerce that a harbor of the first class should be established at that point, and upon that question they have written a very long and full report. In that report they argue that while this is the best location for such a harbor, yet the needs of commerce would be met and satisfied by a harbor of the second class in that neighborhood, in connection with the work which they recommend shall be done in a harbor ten miles from there, the harbor of Gloucester.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is because of that report in which the engineers have passed upon another question, to wit, whether or not the needs of commerce will be satisfied if a harbor of another class be established near there, that there appears to be here and now in this House a difference of opinion on the part of some members of the committee in regard to the expediency of this item of appropriation. But gentlemen will observe—and I ask the attention of the House to this point—that the question of the expediency of this appropriation and the question of the convenience and the necessity of such a harbor was the very first question that was discussed by the board of engineers. Before the question came to this House at all as a subject of appropriation, General Thom, who was the chief of the engineers of that section of country, was requested to examine this point as a preliminary step, and upon such examination he reported to the Secretary of War (who transmitted the report to Congress) that there was great need for a harbor of refuge upon the coast in this vicinity, and that in his judgment this was the proper point for it, and also that it was a work of great importance and of public necessity.

So that, as to the question of public necessity, that was passed upon and distinctly reported upon to Congress by General Thom.

Now, these engineers, by what authority I do not know, have attempted not only to instruct this Congress upon the question submitted to them, to wit, the question of location, but they have attempted also to instruct this Congress in regard to a subject as to which their opinion was not asked, and in respect to which, so far as I know, by reason of their history and antecedents, they have no special qualifications to speak. They are a board of engineers representing the executive department of the Government, but why they found it convenient to enter upon another question which belongs especially to us, the legislative branch of the Government, to wit, the question whether or no the commercial needs of the country and the demands of humanity and of commerce require such a harbor, I do not understand; because that question is for us, and not for any board of engineers that this Government may happen to employ or control.

I will read a few words from this report, which is dated December 24, 1884. In the report the engineers begin by asking, What does Congress mean when it asks us to decide whether this is the best location? That is the question that these engineers gravely and honestly raise. What does Congress mean when it says that it will establish a national harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay (I read now the very words):

Provided, That a board of three engineers, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, shall decide that this point is the best location on the coast between Boston and Portland for such a harbor that shall serve all the uses for which it may be needed.

This board of engineers begin by asking what Congress meant when it submitted that question to them. Then, having said that, they proceed to dismiss in a few words one part of the question submitted, namely, whether or not this is the best place on the coast between the points named for such a harbor for all the purposes for which it may be needed. They perceive that in that phraseology the question of the value of this point as a military or naval station is involved, but they do not devote any thought to that question, but dismiss it by saying that they do not think it is worthy of consideration. So that this board of engineers dismiss without thought or consideration one element of the question submitted to them, and then, having in a few words decided upon the question of location, to the effect that there was no doubt about the suitableness of this point, they then proceed to discuss a question which was not submitted to them at all. This is the posture of this board of engineers, declining to deal with one relation of the question which was submitted to them, and introducing and discussing another question which was not before them.

Now what do they say? They say that, in their judgment, such a harbor is not needed, and that the wants of commerce can be met by establishing a second-class harbor at a place between Thatcher's Island and Milk Island, which is a point about two miles from what is called Sandy Bay, and by expending also a million and a half of money in the improvement of a harbor eight or ten miles distant called Gloucester Harbor. So that the engineers virtually say to Congress: "In our judgment, instead of building a first-class harbor at Sandy Bay, we recommend that you shall build a second-class harbor between Thatcher's Island and Milk Island, and also expend another million and a half on Gloucester Harbor, about ten miles off; and, in our judgment, such an expenditure will be less by one-half than what you propose to expend on this harbor at Sandy Bay, while we believe that the wants of commerce will be equally well met and satisfied."

Now I submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is no one in this House who has greater regard for the ability and intelligence of the Corps of Engineers, when dealing with subjects within their province and matters coming properly before them, than I have, but when they attempt to instruct Congress on a subject, especially a legislative one, and not in any sense an executive one, they exceed their authority.

Mr. STEELE. I understand you then to hold the position that you think a great deal of the engineers' report where they make recommendations to suit you, but when they make recommendations to the contrary of what you desire, then you do not think much of the engineers' report? [Laughter.]

Mr. STONE. No; I did not say that. I said this, that I thought a great deal of the Corps of Engineers when they were dealing with matters within the province of their duties, but that when they attempted to deal with matters outside, then it is gratuitous, unauthorized, and entitled to no respect whatever.

Mr. STEELE. I understand these engineers do not recommend a harbor they can not get into.

Mr. LONG. They do not claim they can not get into it.

Mr. STEELE. Well, that it is dangerous to get into it.

Mr. LONG. No.

Mr. STEELE. Gentlemen of the committee inform me they do claim that.

Mr. STONE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer to this report in another relation. When this matter came before the last Congress, owing to a remark made by Major Raymond, who made a long and elaborate report, in which he spoke of some ledges in the neighborhood, the criticism was made that this harbor might not be found accessible in times of rough weather, and therefore would not be of value; but Major Raymond afterward wrote a letter to the committee, in which he said he wished to change his opinion, because that difficulty could be corrected by establishing a light-house on a certain point on a dry reef outside of the harbor.

Upon this point the report of the engineers is valuable, and to this I ask the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE]. When the board of engineers came to deal with the question of the best location for a first-class harbor, if they had considered the remark made by Major Raymond in his first report of any importance they would have said so, and would have reported against this location because of this difficulty; but, on the contrary, they were unanimously in favor of Sandy Bay as the place of all others for a first-class national harbor; and I commend this part of the report to Major STEELE as a conclusive answer to his suggestion that the harbor would be inaccessible.

Again, they say in their report, and to this I ask the attention of the members of the committee for a few minutes, that the wants of commerce will be met by a second-class harbor. Now I do not believe that any member of this House who has given the subject of commerce any attention, who has carefully considered what is taking place in Europe to-day, who has carefully considered what they are doing across the water, or has carefully considered what we are doing in our own country, would advise for a moment that this Government should spend a million and a half of dollars on the Atlantic coast to establish a second-class harbor.

Why, Mr. Chairman, what has the Government been doing all along the Atlantic coast for the last fifteen years? Nothing but making second-class into first-class harbors; and the needs of commerce to-day are such that a second-class harbor is comparatively of no value. We are expending millions of dollars all along the Atlantic coast, from the mouth of the Mississippi River to Eastport on the extreme east, in changing second-class harbors to first-class harbors; and why do we do it? In 1853, only thirty years ago, you might take up Lloyd's Register of American and Foreign Commerce, and you could not find registered in that whole register of more than 10,000 ships more than five American ships drawing over twenty feet of water.

Mr. HORR. What is the difference between a first-class harbor and a second-class harbor?

Mr. STONE. I will explain. That question is asked by these engineers.

Mr. HORR. Does it depend on the depth of water?

Mr. STONE. These engineers ask that question with a singular exhibition of innocence. These engineers, whose duty it is to know all about rivers and harbors, gravely ask what is a first-class harbor.

Now let us see what Mr. Nimmo says—Mr. Nimmo, the head of the Bureau of Statistics. I have not the report before me now. I thought I had it. But Mr. Nimmo made a report in which he states the accepted classification in this country as well as abroad, that a first-class harbor is a harbor that accommodates vessels of the largest size and drawing over twenty feet of water; that a second-class harbor is a harbor that accommodates vessels drawing between fifteen and twenty feet of water, and that a third-class harbor includes all harbors that accommodate vessels drawing fifteen feet of water or less. That is the classification adopted in other countries as well as here by those dealing with the subject. But these engineers undertake to advise this Congress to make a second-class harbor in Massachusetts and to expend more than a million of dollars on it. They do not know, apparently (and I say it respectfully), what are the commercial needs of the country in this respect. Why do you spend millions of dollars—and I ask my friend from New York [Mr. POTTER] the question—why do you spend millions of dollars in New York to deepen the channel of that harbor, to get twenty-five or thirty feet depth? It is because you know that commerce is demanding it, and that twenty feet is not sufficient for the present demands of the commerce of the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this Government is to engage in this enterprise let it establish a harbor upon the coast equal to all the demands of commerce and humanity, and which will be an honor and a credit to the American people. They should put one there to meet all of the conditions of a first-class harbor, and there is no point on that entire coast between Boston and Portland—and on that the committee agree—that can be compared with Sandy Bay for the purpose of establishing a magnificent harbor. It has all the water you can need; it is free from silt, from ice, from currents of every description, and it is in the immediate neighborhood of a number of granite quarries, out of which abundant material can be obtained at a nominal expense of 40 or 50 cents a ton, when the same material if sent to South Carolina or to Mississippi would cost at least four or five dollars a ton.

Mr. BOUTELLE. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment to ask whether copies of that report to which he referred are available?

Mr. STONE. I presume they are; I have no doubt they are. They were furnished to Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to show in as few words as I can what this Government is doing. As I have said already, in 1853 out of 10,430 vessels there were only five drawing over twenty feet of water. In 1878 we had one hundred and fifty-seven on Lloyd's register drawing over twenty-three feet of water, and the harbors of New York and Portland, in fact all of the great harbors of the coast, are demanding improvements which will give a depth of thirty feet of water to meet the demands of the large vessels that carry the commerce of the world.

You are building steamboats of 8,000 tons capacity; you are crossing the ocean in six days; you are nearer practically to England to-day than you were thirty years ago by one-half, and you have got to protect your coast, and to legislate for the possible demands of the future. These things must be kept in mind in dealing with this subject of river and harbor improvements.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is only the part of wisdom—of true wisdom on the part of this Congress, if you move at all in this direction—to build a harbor upon this coast which shall be a credit to the country and equal to the resources of this great nation, which is now on the pathway of empire and is not to be staid.

A word more, Mr. Chairman. I want to say a word upon another subject, and I may take up more time than I had intended to consume. I desire to say, and I say it earnestly, that I have been somewhat surprised from previous conversations that I have had with gentlemen at what has taken place here. I was surprised at the remarks of my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS], after what had taken place between us. I do not quite understand his criticisms. But I want to call attention to some facts in connection with the necessities of commerce at this point. You are legislating for the commerce and for the wants of the navigation of this country.

Do you realize where the commerce of this country is? Do you realize the fact that out of about 24,082 vessels belonging to these United States 18,178 belong to the Atlantic coast? The members of this House are asking for liberal appropriations for the rivers and lakes of the interior; and I am with them most heartily, for I am in favor of liberal appropriations; but I call attention to the statistics of our commerce; which after all is the best indication of the condition and wants of the country. Of the entire commerce of the country, as measured by vessels, 18,178 are engaged in the trade on the Atlantic coast. Of that 18,178, 5,888 vessels, or nearly one-fourth of the whole commerce of the country, belong to New England. Consider that for a moment. Of the entire commerce of this country, 5,888 vessels out of 24,000 belong to New England and are engaged in commerce in these very waters where we ask the establishment of a first-class harbor. We propose to put into this bill more than $6,000,000 for the Mississippi River and its great tributaries; and yet upon the Mississippi River and the rivers tributary to it there are only 1,303 vessels out of the 24,000. So that we of the Eastern coast, for we mean to be generous, give to the Western rivers more than $6,000,000 in this bill, with only 1,303 vessels, and only ask in New England an appropriation of about one-half a million with our one-fourth of the total commerce of the country. And this, remember, is for the whole of New England.

In regard to this very point which I have stated, that the commerce of this country is on the Atlantic coast, if I may be permitted for a moment to refer to a remark which took place before the committee, a gentleman from Toledo told us that the bulk of the commerce of the country was on the lakes. He was very much surprised when I showed him these facts, and that of the total commerce of this country only 3,380 vessels were on the lakes against 18,000 on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. THOMAS. May I interrupt the gentleman to ask what is the distance from this proposed harbor at Sandy Bay to Boston?

Mr. STONE. It is about thirty-five miles.

Mr. THOMAS. And what is the distance from Sandy Bay to Portland?

Mr. STONE. It is between eighty and ninety miles; probably a hundred miles.

Mr. THOMAS. How far is it from Portsmouth, N. H.?

Mr. STONE. Thirty or thirty-five miles.

There is an immense commerce between Boston and Portland, and a very great proportion of the commerce that passes this point is not only the commerce directly between Boston and the East, but a very large proportion of vessels that come to Boston from New York and the Southern ports go East for return freights; and they pass Cape Ann in going East, when they are destined evidently for some Southern port. And according to the best computations that can be made, and those computations are confirmed by recent examinations, there are supposed to be about 70,000 vessels that pass this point, this extreme end of the cape, Sandy Bay, every year. And those vessels which are bound for New York passing south of Cape Cod as a rule make the Cape and light in passing to the South; so that vessels in distress come in sight of this very point, Cape Ann, when bound to Southern ports. Colonel Craighill, a very able engineer and a very accomplished man, who signed the report, told me that no point on the coast was so striking in its situation and so capable of being made into a superior harbor as this point at the end of Cape Ann—Sandy Bay. Its value for the purposes I have stated, I think, can not be denied by any one who takes the subject into consideration.

Now, let me advert to one point more. I have in my hand the report of the select committee of the British Parliament on the subject of harbor accommodations, which was made to the House of Commons on the 20th July, 1884. It is a very recent report. This whole subject of harbor accommodations has been thoroughly considered by the English Parliament within the last twenty-five years. In 1859 and 1860 and in 1861 there were special committees appointed by Parliament to investigate the subject of harbors, especially harbors of refuge, and they made full reports on that subject. And this committee which made the report of 1884 confirms the action of the other committees appointed in 1859 and 1860. And they are unanimously of the opinion that while it is not the duty of the government of England to do anything more than aid in the construction of harbors of commerce, it is clearly the duty of the imperial Parliament to build out of the imperial treasury harbors of refuge. And why? Because it is obvious that harbors of refuge are built not merely to meet the demands of commerce, but largely to meet the demands of humanity; and you can not expect that persons engaged in business, whose main motive is gain, will take such an interest in a harbor of refuge as they would in a harbor of commerce, which is also a great commercial port. And therefore it devolves especially upon the Government, whose duty it is to establish life-saving stations and to do all in its power to protect life and property from the perils of the sea, to provide liberally for harbors of refuge, which are not likely to be built except through the aid of the General Government.

How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. STONE. I agreed to give part of my time to Mr. WASHBURN, of Minnesota, and now allow him fifteen minutes.

Mr. WASHBURN. The gentleman from Massachusetts concedes me fifteen minutes of his time and my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] yielded me five minutes the other day, so that I have twenty minutes.

Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to what I have to say in the main, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fallacy of the figures of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] with reference to the necessary magnitude of a harbor on the coast as compared with a harbor on the lakes. The commerce on the coast is largely made in long trips, lasting perhaps two years, perhaps one year, perhaps three months; while in the immense commerce on the lakes there are fifteen or twenty trips made in a year by each vessel. Consequently the comparison which the gentleman makes is not a fair one. It is the question of tonnage and not the question of the number of trips made by vessels.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] if what he says about short trips is not true of the coasting vessels along the Atlantic as well as of the vessels on the lakes?

Mr. WASHBURN. It is to some extent, but not to the same extent.

Mr. MILLIKEN. How long a stretch of navigation is there on the lakes, taking the whole length of them?

Mr. WASHBURN. I can not yield further at present.

Mr. Chairman, I am and have been during my entire term in Congress in favor of liberal appropriations for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country.

From years of observation and careful study of this subject I am satisfied that no expenditures made by the Government have been productive of more satisfactory results in the development of the resources of the country than those made for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. And during the entire time I have been in Congress there have been no appropriations to which I have given a more hearty support and for which I have more cheerfully voted than such as have been made for this purpose. Appropriations of this character I believe to be both wise and proper, and I desire to see them continued until the great harbors of our coast are improved sufficiently to accommodate the commerce that comes to them and the lake harbors to receive the products of the great empire borne to them to be transported to the markets of the world, and until the great natural water ways of the country are so improved as to transport cheaply the commerce tributary to them.

For all these purposes I am in favor of liberal appropriations, and I have no sympathy with a false economy that would restrict them to beggarly proportions, and I have little patience with the clamor that has been raised and misrepresentations made from time to time for the purpose of bringing such appropriations into disrepute; and I have less patience with those who, representing localities that in years past received liberal appropriations to complete their own improvements, are now prepared to call a halt as to improvements of other localities equally important and meritorious.

Of all the river and harbor appropriations that have passed Congress none probably has ever been subjected to the unjust criticism and gross misrepresentations, and concerning which a more senseless clamor has been raised, than the bill passed in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and I believe inspired to a large extent by such motives as those to which I have alluded. The appropriation, it is true, was a large one, but not larger than the rapidly increasing commerce of the country required. While large, it was fairly and justly distributed among the different sections of the country where improvements were needed.

The appropriations in that bill were mainly for great national works and only an insignificantly small amount for unimportant streams, but which, though small, at the same time afforded means of transportation to many localities and communities which could not be secured in any other way. Of an appropriation of something over $18,000,000 there was less than $400,000 appropriated for the improvements of this kind and which could be fairly criticised as not being national in character. And yet nothing was left undone to carry the impression to the country that this appropriation was largely to improve trout streams and macadamize "dry runs."

Mr. Chairman, no section of this country can afford to be jealous of another, for no section of this country can be improved without benefiting in one way or another every other. Not a stream in this broad land can be improved to increased capacity for transportation, not a harbor of any of the great lakes can be widened or deepened to receive commerce but that the great financial and commercial heart of the continent, and soon to be of the world—the city of New York—is quickened and strengthened in its pulsations.

Mr. Chairman, I reside in and have in part the honor to represent a section of country that has a very deep interest in the question of river and harbor improvements, and the other question inseparable from it, cheap transportation to the seaboard.

Minnesota, with one arm on the head of navigation of the Mississippi River at Saint Paul and the other stretching to Lake Superior at Duluth, has the advantage of two great systems of water transportation, and has an especial interest in having them both improved to the fullest extent. To the expenditures already made in this direction Minnesota owes, for its almost magical growth and marvelous development, more to the facilities that have been offered for cheap transportation by the natural water ways than to any and all other causes combined. What Minnesota and the Northwest require is not only the cheap transportation furnished by the natural water ways, but the cheap rail transportation that it necessarily brings with it, and which it will continue to bring, unless natural causes shall be neutralized by such unnatural legislation as is embodied in the interstate-commerce bill recently passed by this House, whereby railroad lines will be foreclosed from entering into competition either with water routes or themselves. But I trust the country is to be spared the affliction of having a bill necessarily so vicious in effects becoming a law, and I shall not pursue this line of comment further.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I am heartily in favor of appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and while I believe there is not a constituency in the country more interested in such improvements than the one I have the honor to represent, and for the reasons indicated, I find provisions in the bill now before the committee that I can neither approve nor support. I do not think the bill either a fair or a just one. While in some sections of the country the appropriations are insignificantly small and entirely inadequate to carry forward important works, in other sections unusually large amounts are named and new schemes are entered upon of a magnitude and character sufficient to startle, if not alarm, the most enthusiastic river and harbor advocate in this House or the country.

Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to raise anything like a sectional question with reference to the appropriations made in this bill; yet it can not escape the notice of the House, as it certainly will not of the country, that a very large proportion of the appropriations in this bill are for works in the Southern States—$7,197,900 for the South; $4,764,900 in the Northern States. To such a distribution of appropriations I would make no objection, on the ground of locality or section, if I felt they were justified by the existing condition of things. No man in this House has been more liberal in his views and in his action with reference to the great works that have been carried on in the South during the past few years, the improvement of the Lower Mississippi especially, than myself, having always had my most hearty and unqualified support. But when we find, as we do in this bill, that great works are to be entered upon to accommodate a commerce that does not exist, and looking to the expenditure of an amount of money out of all proportion to appropriations that have ever been made in any section of the country, and when we find as a logical consequence appropriations for other sections where an existing and rapidly increasing commerce is pressing for further and greater facilities, are reduced to insignificant amounts and such commerce almost ignored, I for one must enter my most earnest and determined protest.

There has been introduced in the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and reported, as I understand, by the other distinguished Senator from the same State [Mr. MAXEY], a bill for the improvement of Galveston Harbor. This bill, as I understand it, provides for the Government entering into a contract with Capt. James B. Eads for the purpose of securing a certain depth of water and width of channel in and to Galveston Harbor. To make clear what this gigantic scheme means and is likely to cost the Government before completed I will insert as a part of my remarks sections 4 and 5 of the Senate bill, which relate to the amounts of money to be paid and the terms of payment provided for in that bill:

SEC. 4. That whenever said Eads and his associates shall have obtained a navigable channel between the 30-foot contour lines of the harbor and the Gulf, said lines being fixed and established as aforesaid, not less than one foot deeper than the channel as laid down on said chart, a measurement of said deeper channel shall, at the request of said Eads or his associates, be made by said Superintendent of the Geodetic and Coast Survey; and if such increased depth shall be found to exist, said Superintendent shall certify the fact to the Secretary of War, who shall thereupon draw his warrant upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, in favor of said Eads or his associates, or his or their assigns or legal representatives, for the sum of $1,000,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to said Eads or his associates, or his or their assigns or legal representatives, the sum for which said warrant is drawn; and in like manner, upon the request of said Eads or his associates, measurements of the channel shall be made and certified to by said Superintendent as each additional foot of depth shall be obtained until the total depth of thirty feet shall have been secured. All such certificates shall be transmitted to the Secretary of War, who shall, upon the receipt of each one thereof, draw his warrant upon the Secretary of the Treasury, in favor of said Eads or his associates, or their assigns or legal representatives, for such sum of money as may be then due and payable to said Eads and his associates under the terms of this act; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to said Eads or his associates, or his or their assigns or legal representatives, the sums of money for which said warrants shall be respectively drawn. For each foot of depth obtained and certified to as aforesaid there shall be paid to said Eads and his associates, their assigns or legal representatives, $1,000,000, until a total increased depth of two feet shall have been obtained, and a total of $2,000,000 shall have been paid; after which there shall be paid in like manner and in like certification $500,000 for each foot of additional depth which shall be obtained, until a total increased depth of four feet shall have been secured and a total payment of $3,000,000 shall have been made; after which there shall be paid, in like manner and upon like certification, $400,000 for each foot of additional depth which shall be obtained, until the total increased depth of six feet shall have been secured and a total payment of $3,800,000 shall have been made; after which there shall be paid, in like manner and upon like certification, $350,000 for each foot of additional depth which shall be obtained, until the total increased depth of eleven feet shall have been secured and a total payment of $5,550,000 shall have been made; after which there shall be paid, in like manner and upon like certification, $400,000 for each foot of additional depth which shall be obtained, until the total increased depth of thirteen feet shall haxe been secured and a total payment of $6,350,000 shall have been made. When the total depth of said channel shall have been increased to twenty-eight feet, $450,000 shall be paid; and when the maximum channel of thirty feet shall have been secured, such sum of money shall be paid as shall, when added to the amounts heretofore paid, fully make up the sum of $7,250,000. Said maximum channel shall have a depth of twenty-six feet, not less that two hundred feet in width at the bottom, and having through it a central depth of thirty feet, without regard to width. When said maximum channel of thirty feet shall have been thus obtained, the remaining $500,000 of the total compensation for the work then unpaid shall be deemed to have been earned by said Eads and his associates, but the same shall remain in the possession of the Government of the United States for a period of ten years from the date when the said maximum channel shall have first been obtained, as security for the maintenance of said channel; but during the whole of said period, and until the said $500,000 is paid, said Eads and his associates, or assigns or legal representatives, shall receive from the United States interest upon the same at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, payable in equal quarterly installments during each year; and when said Eads and his associates shall have maintained said maximum channel for the full period of ten years, as hereinafter provided for, the Secretary of War shall issue his warrant upon the Secretary of the Treasury, in favor of said Eads or his associates, or his heirs or their assigns or legal representatives, for said sum of $500,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to said Eads or his associates, his or their assigns or legal representatives, the sum for which said warrant is drawn.

SEC. 5. That after said maximum channel of thirty feet shall have been secured, said Eads and his associates shall maintain the same during a period of ten years, dating from the time when said channel shall have been first obtained; and as compensation for such maintenance the United States shall pay to said Eads and his associates, or their assigns or legal representatives, in equal quarterly payments, the sum of $100,000 per year for each and every year of such maintenance: Provided, however, That if said Eads and his associates shall fail to maintain said maximum channel to the injury of commerce, the United States shall have the right to apply the $500,000 held in reserve as security, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to the maintenance of said channel. All payments to said Eads and his associates for maintenance of channel shall be made upon the certified statement of the Superintendent of the Geodetic and Coast Survey, which certificates shall be made whenever there shall have been a quarter's maintenance, and shall be transmitted to the Secretary of War, who shall at all times draw his warrants in accordance therewith upon the Secretary of the Treasury for any amount or amounts due; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to said Eads or his associates, or his or their assigns or legal representatives, the sums for which said warrants shall be respectively drawn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If the gentleman will permit me I will ask him: Is there a syllable of that bill in this river and harbor bill?

Mr. WASHBURN. No, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I thought you meant to state that it was in the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. O, no; I have not made that statement.

By examination of the terms of this proposed contract it will be seen that the ultimate cost of this improvement to the Government will be $8,950,000, or only $50,000 less than $9,000,000. I will print the figures on which this statement is based:

For removing the obstructions or digging the channel thirty feet deep the bill proposes to give $7,750,000, to be paid as follows:

For first foot of increased depth	$1,000,000
For second foot	1,000,000
For third foot	500,000
For fourth foot	500,000
	3,000,000

Brought forward—first four feet	$3,000,000
For fifth foot	400,000
For sixth foot	400,000
	3,800,000
For seventh foot	350,000
For eighth foot	350,000
For ninth foot	350,000
For tenth foot	350,000
For eleventh foot	350,000
For twelfth foot	400,000
For thirteenth foot	400,000
	6,350,000
Next payment is made when twenty-eight feet total depth is obtained	450,000
	6,800,000
Next payment is made when thirty feet total depth is obtained	450,000
	7,250,000

and $500,000 more is earned when the thirty feet is obtained, but it is provided that this $500,000 be retained by the Government for ten years as security for the maintenance of said channel for the term of ten years by Eads and associates, but the Government is to pay Eads and associates 4 per cent. on this $500,000 for the term it holds same, which is ten years, and therefore the Government pays $20,000 per year interest on that money for this time.

For keeping the channel open to its maximum depth Eads gets $100,000 per year.

For ten years	$1,000,000
At the end of ten years the reserve fund of	500,000
Interest on same	200,000
	1,700,000
Money received on work before shown	7,250,000
	8,950,000

Now, it is true that the bill under consideration does not contemplate a contract with Captain Eads, but it does propose that the same work shall be done under his direction and superintendence, and hence there would appear to be no good reason to believe that the work can be done under the plan of the present bill for less than the amount proposed in the Senate bill, or about $9,000,000.

To enter upon such a work as this, requiring, as it will, expenditures of such magnitude, utterly disproportionate with what have ever been made in any section of the country for such a purpose, without plans, with no recommendation from the War Department, or any officer of the Government, merely upon a theory, would seem to me little short of midsummer madness.

I have said the cost of this work is to be disproportionate to what has been expended for similiar purposes in any part of the country; and to show this I desire to call to the attention of the committee the statement which I hold in my hand giving the amounts that have been expended on the six more important harbors on the Atlantic coast, as well as the amount that has already been expended at Galveston:

Boston Harbor, Massachusetts	1,977,026 10
New York Harbor (East River and Hell Gate)	3,305,000 00
Philadelphia, Pa., Delaware River below Bridesburg	945,000 00
Baltimore Harbor, Maryland	1,765,000 00
Charleston Harbor, South Carolina	1,444,700 00
Savannah Harbor, Georgia	1,016,096 64
Galveston Harbor, Texas	1,835,200 00
Total	11,288,022 74

It will be observed that the total amount expended on all of these six great harbors outside of Galveston is a little less than $10,000,000, while the amount to be expended at Galveston, under the Eads plan, added to what has already been expended there, reaches the enormous sum of $10,785,296, or more than the entire aggregate amount that has been expended on all of the six important harbors to which I have referred. I submit to the committee whether this is not rather "crowding the mourners."

Now, let us look for a moment at the commerce of Galveston, as compared with that of these ports; and to do this intelligently I have procured a statement, which I hold in my hand, showing the value of the exports and imports for 1884 at these points:

1884.

Ports.	Exports.			Imports.	Total imports and exports.
	Domestic.	Foreign.	Total.

This showing would not certainly seem to justify the expenditure of such a vast sum of money as contemplated by the bill.

And now for the purpose of exhibiting further the disproportion of the proposed expenditures at Galveston as compared with those made for the harbors of the great lakes, I will print with my remarks the statement which I have prepared showing the relative tonnage at Galveston and the one port of Duluth, at the head of Lake Superior, for the year 1884:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1885.

Tonnage entered and cleared in the foreign trade of Galveston during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884.

Entered and cleared.	Number.	Tons.
ENTERED.
American vessels	19	9,674
Foreign vessels	177	114,420
Total	196	124,094
CLEARED.
American vessels	25	14,571
Foreign vessels	181	120,370
Total	206	134,941

Number and tonnage of vessels entered in the coastwise trade at the port of Galveston, Tex., during the calendar year 1883 was as follows:
Year 1883—number of vessels, 413; number of tons, 335,571.

J. N. WHITNEY,
Acting Chief of Bureau.

The following are some of the principal commodities received at Duluth in 1884:

Coal	tons...	337,000
Salt, lime, cement, &c	barrels...	152,076
Oil	kegs...	34,166
Nails, horseshoes, &c	do...	13,092
Arrivals and departures of vessels		887

The following are some of the principal commodities shipped from the port of Duluth in the year 1884:

Wheat	bushels...	11,067,497
Flour	barrels...	814,376
The same reduced to wheat	bushels...	4,071,880
Total shipment	do...	15,039,377
Bran feed	sacks...	98,902
Bars of silver bullion		33,894
Silver ore	sacks...	141,347
Lumber		5,030,321
Oats	bushels...	47,800
Wool	sacks...	6,315

These statements show that the tonnage of Duluth of two articles alone—wheat and coal—is larger than the entire tonnage of Galveston, and the number of vessels arriving at Duluth for the year 1884 is 887 as against 815 at Galveston for the same year, while for the improvement of this harbor at Duluth this bill appropriates the munificent sum of $31,500 as against $750,000 for Galveston, with several millions to follow. I submit to the committee whether this is not, to say the least, slightly disproportionate.

But I hold in my hand a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting to the House of Representatives letters from General John Newton, Chief of Engineers, and of Col. O. M. Poe, engineer in charge at Detroit, Mich., in which statements are made of a most extraordinary character with reference to the tonnage passing through the Sault Saint Mary's Canal, and which show in a more striking contrast the disproportion of these appropriations than any comparison yet made. I have not time to read these communications and statement at this time, but will print them as a part of my remarks:

Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of the Chief of Engineers concerning the inefficiency of the lockage of the Sault Saint Mary's Canal.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 17, 1885.

SIR: In accordance with the suggestion of the Chief of Engineers I have the honor to transmit to the House of Representatives, for the information of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, his report, dated the 14th instant, in which he refers to his last annual report, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, pages 302 and 2011, calling attention to the rapid increase of commerce passing through the Sault Saint Mary's Canal, being such that should its rate be maintained for the next eight years, the period would then be reached when the present lockage system would be found insufficient; and submits the accompanying copy of a report, dated the 8th instant, from Lieut. Col. O. M. Poe, Corps of Engineers, in charge, containing official returns, lately received, of the tonnage passed through the canal during the season of 1884, showing the increase in tonnage to have been beyond all expectation, and so largely in excess of that of previous years, that should the rate be maintained (of which there seems to be no doubt), the insufficiency of the present lockage system will be felt at the expiration of one-half the time estimated, or say in four years, and indicating beyond question a more urgent necessity for an early commencement of this indispensable work.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1885.

SIR: In the last annual report of this office, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, pages 302 and 2011, attention was called to the rapid increase of the commerce passing through the Sault Saint Mary's Canal being such, that should its rate be maintained for the next eight years, the period would be then reached when the present lockage system would be found insufficient.

To guard against this it was recommended to begin at once the construction of a new lock of large dimensions upon the site of the two old ones.

I have now the honor to submit herewith a copy of a report to this office of the 8th instant, from Lieut. Col. O. M. Poe, Corps of Engineers, in charge, containing official returns, lately received, of the tonnage passedthrough the canal during the season of 1884, showing the increase in tonnage to have been beyond all expectation, and so largely in excess of that of previous years, that should the rate be maintained (of which there seems to be no doubt), the insufficiency of the present lockage system will be felt at the expiration of one-half the length of time above estimated, or, say, in four years, and indicating beyond question a more urgent necessity for an early commencement of this indispensable work.

In view of the great importance of this subject, I beg leave to suggest the transmission of this report to the House of Representatives for the information of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen.

Hon. ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

SAINT MARY'S FALLS CANAL, MICHIGAN.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Detroit, Mich., January 8, 1885.

SIR: In my annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884,* I submitted a project for the enlargement of Saint Mary's Falls Canal, including the construction of a new lock in place of the two old ones, and urged the matter in terms as strong as seemed proper.

It was stated that the commerce through the canal during 1883 was 2,042,295 tons (registered); that the annual increase in tonnage for fifteen years had been quite uniform, averaging 107,313 tons per year; that only 11 per cent. of the vessels passing the canal during 1883 were of sufficiently light draught to admit of their passing through the old locks; and that if these figures were maintained for eight years the present lockage system, although in constant operation, would be insufficient to take care of the shipping.

We now have complete returns for the season of 1884, and the annual increase in tonnage has not only been maintained but largely exceeded; that is to say, the registered tonnage passing through the canal during the season of 1884 was 2,997,837 tons, an increase of 955,578 tons, or nine times the average annual increase for the preceding fifteen years. Or, to state it possibly with greater force, this increase in 1884 is equal to the entire commerce through the canal during the first five years it was open to navigation.

Should this rate of increase be maintained, the full capacity of the lockage system will be reached within four years instead of eight, as estimated in the annual report.

The following table affords the means of comparing, in detail, the business of the canal during the season of 1884 with that of 1883:

Canal opened April 23 and closed December 10, 1884, being open to navigation 232 days.

Canal was opened during season of 1883 224 days.

The increase in registered tonnage was 47 per cent.; in grain, 87 per cent.; in flour, 82 per cent.; and in iron ore, 43 per cent.

These are the great staples (although a notable increase in the lumber traffic was developed), and indicate the direction from which future increase must be expected.

It will be principally from the cereal products of the Northwest through the systems of railways terminating on Lake Superior.

It is stated in the commercial columns of the newspapers that there are now stored at Duluth alone nearly 5,000,000 bushels of grain, and that this will be increased to more than 7,000,000 by the time navigation opens.

If this be true (and I do not doubt it for a moment), the canal will be pushed toward its utmost during the season of 1885.

But the facts adverted to do more than indicate the necessity for beginning the enlargement of the canal at the earliest date possible. They protest in the strongest possible terms against all propositions to fit the old locks for dry-dock purposes, or to build a dry-dock anywhere in the immediate vicinity of the canal to be operated in connection therewith.

Another point which I particularly invite attention to is the fact that no portion of the work of enlargement recently completed will be lost. On the contrary, it is just that much done toward the project now so strongly recommended.

I have to request that this report be forwarded for consideration in connection with my annual report for the year ending June 30, 1884.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. M. POE,
Lieut. Col. of Engineers, Bvt. Brig. Gen., U. S. A.

The CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, U. S. A.

But I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact this statement shows that during the season of 1884 5,689 vessels passed through the Saint Mary's Falls Canal, with a registered tonnage of 2,942,837 and an actual freight tonnage of 2,847,557 tons, being 5,699 vessels, as against 815 at Galveston, and 2,942,837 registered tonnage as against 594,506 at Galveston.

Colonel Poe, in his letter, speaking of the rapidly increasing tonnage through this canal, and referring to his annual report, in which he submits a project for the enlargement of this canal, says: "Should this rate of increase be maintained the full capacity of the lockage system will be reached within four years, instead of eight, as estimated in the annual report." And yet, in the face of these facts, this bill makes no appropriation for the enlargement of this canal, this great thoroughfare through which pass the millions of tons of the products of the Northwest, and takes no step in that direction; at the same time it appropriates $750,000 for the improvement of the harbor that handles not more than one-sixth as much tonnage.

Mr. Chairman, it is against this unjust discrimination and disproportion of appropriation that the Northwest enters its most emphatic protest.

I will not comment especially on the disparity in the appropriations on the Lower and Upper Mississippi, although, of an appropriation of $3,855,000, $2,800,000 is appropriated for the lower river. While I recognize the importance of carrying forward the improvements on the lower river, I feel that the appropriations for the upper stretches of river are entirely insufficient and out of all proportion.

But outside the unfairness of this bill so far as its appropriations are concerned, there are some very extraordinary and important features introduced as to the jurisdiction of this character of public works that I do not believe will meet the approval or sanction of the committee. Returning to the improvement of Galveston Harbor, the first step to be taken is in the direction of substantially ignoring the Engineer Department of the Government. For one, I can see no good reason why this should be done, and especially at this time.

I see no reason why the carefully prepared plans of the Chief of Engineers, and which are being executed, should be set aside, and other new, theoretical, and expensive plans adopted in their place. There are, I believe, no reasonable grounds for supposing that when these plans have been fully carried out the practical results contemplated by the War Department will not be secured, and at much less cost of money than will be required under the plans proposed in this bill. I can not, of course, discuss this subject as an engineer, but I desire to call the attention of the committee to the letter of General John Newton, Chief of Engineers, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives, in which the whole subject of improvements at Galveston is thoroughly gone over and most intelligently and ably discussed, which letter I will print in connection with what I have suggested on this point.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 17, 1885.

SIR: Pursuant with your request made to me, I have the honor to present my views upon the provisions of Senate bill 1652, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, introduced February 27, 1884, reported by Mr. COKE with amendments June 30, 1884, and adopted by the majority of the committee.

The original bill was referred to the office of the Chief of Engineers, and a communication dated March 27, 1884, conveying objections to certain of its provisions was made to the Secretary of War, and by him transmitted to the Senate.

It is proper here to state that near the close of the session I was before the Senate committee on two occasions. At these interviews I became acquainted with statements made by Mr. James B. Eads, a party in interest in the proposed contract for the improvement of the bar at Galveston. Mr. Eads was present at both interviews and a large portion of the time was granted to him. It was probably in view of this, Mr. Eads having before had full opportunity to present his side of the question to the committees of the Senate and House, as well as in regard to the very late knowledge I had acquired of statements made by him, that you requested me to present my views in writing. I have understood, however, that the majority report was made very shortly after my interviews, without reference to the future report asked of me.

Turning now to the report of the majority of the Senate Committee on Commerce, I find no mention made of certain objections which I then urged against the adoption of the proposed contract, but, on the contrary, their report is based upon the views of Mr. Eads, which seem to have been accepted without substantial diminution. There has, so far as I know, been granted no sufficient opportunity for discussing the merits and efficiency of the plan proposed by Mr. Eads, nor has an investigation adequate to the importance of the case been made of that disposition of the works at Galveston which would insure the greatest depth possible under the peculiar existing features of the locality.

I will now comment upon certain statements of this report. It says:

"The general plan of improvement which has been carried on during the past ten years was commenced by Major Howell, and was approved by a board of engineers composed of Generals Tower, Wright, and Newton. It has since been reported upon by boards of United States engineers in 1875, 1876, and 1880. The method of construction was called the gabionnade system. This was abandoned in 1879, after an expenditure by Major Howell of $627,000. After the failure of the gabionnade system, the present officer, Colonel Mansfield, was placed in charge, and the method of construction was changed to the mattress system, without, however, altering the general plan and location of the works."

There is a great deal of incorrect information contained in this short quotation.

In 1870 an appropriation of $76,000 was expended upon the inner bar in dikes and dredging plant, whereby the depth was increased from nine to twelve feet. There was afterward expended in dikes upon the inner bar, up to 1877, the sum of $282,000, making an additional increase of depth of eight and one-half feet there. Adding these together, we find that $358,000 was expended successfully upon the improvement of the inner bar. This reduces the unsuccessful experiment mentioned in the majority report from $527,000 to $169,000, according to its own figures.

The general plan and location of the works were, however, changed, notwithstanding the contrary is indicated in the majority report. It was recommended by the board of engineers that the north and south jetties should be constructed to a certain distance only, with a view to change afterward the direction of their prolongations to produce the required result; and it was also recommended by the board that the direction of the south jetty from its starting point should first be changed, bringing it nearer by this means to the other jetty. As to the height to which these jetties should be built, that was regarded by the board as tentative, and it was understood that the height should be finally regulated to meet the requirements of the case.

*Annual Report Chief of Engineers for 1884, Part III, page 2011.

Before leaving this part of the subject I will state that the gabionnade system of Major Howell was never indorsed by the board; but an experiment on a limited scale, by placing a short line of gabions near the bar and another short line near the shore, was recommended by the board to test its efficiency. That the experiment should have been conducted beyond the limits prescribed by the board can only be explained from the fact that Major Howell was ill during this period of time of the malady which not long afterward terminated in his death, and that he was probably unable to bestow that supervision over the work which might have satisfied him, with a much less expenditure of money, that the system would prove a failure.

It is proper likewise to say that the board never indorsed the system of parallel jetties * 12,000 feet apart devised by Major Howell as competent to afford even a draught of eighteen feet, which is plainly evidenced by the express words of their first report, as well as by the change in the directions of the jetties, which was recommended in a subsequent report.

I will state also that a depth of eighteen feet of water was understood to have been all that the inhabitants of Galveston asked for at the time, and that depth would have proved an immense relief to navigation. It is hard to perceive the justice of holding the Government engineers responsible for not granting a boon greater than that demanded at the time.

According to the majority report the total amount of money expended up to the present time is $1,578,000, of which $527,000 has already been accounted for, leaving a balance of $975,000, which Colonel Mansfield devoted to the construction of the south jetty upon the mattress system, a work not yet entirely finished and brought up to the proper level, but which is admitted to have been economically and solidly constructed. If now we divide the total amount by the number of years from 1870 to 1882, during which period appropriations were made by Congress, we will find that the average annual grant was about $121,000, and that the total amount appropriated would fall far short of the estimates made for the improvement of the outer and inner bars, for which these appropriations were intended.

But one jetty—the south—has as yet been constructed, and with what justice can it be urged in the majority report as a fault of the Government engineers "that no substantial benefit to the interest of Galveston Harbor has thus far resulted from the expenditure of this large amount of money," when it has always been considered necessary for the improvement of the bar that the other jetty, for which no adequate sum of money has yet been appropriated, should likewise be constructed.

There is no system yet adopted in the mode of making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors in the United States. Heretofore the money granted for this object, although large in the aggregate, has been distributed among a multiplicity of localities, so that the most important harbors and rivers have suffered from paucity of money, and a large number of cases exists where the original plans calculated to afford adequate improvement have necessarily been changed and a compromise made in order to utilize and render efficient to some extent the inadequate sums granted. The Government engineers have been taught by sad experience that no large yearly outlay of money for the most important works would be tolerated by Congress, and hence that they must rest content with gradually approaching their object, and leave to the future wants of the locality, so soon as they become imperative, the efforts to extend their works and bring them to the required standard. I may ask, therefore, for the years from 1870 to 1874—yes, and as recently as 1882—what hearing would the Government engineers have had from Congress if they had asked an appropriation of nearly $8,000,000 for the improvement of Galveston Harbor, to be expended at the rate of a million or more each year.

I think a full consideration of these facts will show why it is that they have been compelled to approach by slow degrees the realization of the hopes of improvement at any locality.

The changes of direction already spoken of for the north and south jetties would have given, at the smallest estimate, over twenty feet of depth on the bar, and during the process of construction there would have been ample time to make such changes as would have insured twenty-five feet, or any other depth which the locality would admit of and maintain.

Such, so far as I believe, and I think my connection with those works entitles me to say, was the true idea of their beginning as well as of their future development. I think what has gone before ought to be a sufficient answer to these words from the majority report:

"It has been urged upon the committee that the works of the United States engineers have not yet been completed, and that until their completion the administration of this work should not be placed in other hands.

"The answer to this is:

"First. That the length of time already devoted to the work affords no ground for confidence in future success.

"Second. That the work thus far has been, and still is, of an experimental character, and no positive assurance of results can therefore be given."

As to the first of these, the cause has already been assigned—insufficiency of grants of money by Congress to complete the system.

As to the second, a great mistake is involved in the assertion. The south jetty as well as the works at the inner bar have not been of a mere experimental character. Those at the inner bar have largely increased the depth there; and the south jetty has been solidly and substantially constructed, and would be competent, with the north jetty, to produce decided results. But if the majority report means by the words "no positive assurance of results can therefore be given," that the United States engineers can not say precisely what depth would be obtained, within one or two feet, by the construction of jetties, the statement is entirely correct, and I will add further, that you will not find in the whole world an engineer who could calculate within a foot or two what the effect of the jetties at Galveston would be, while the very attempt to do so would probably prove that the person was incompetent.

Mr. Eads, in his statement (Appendix B of the majority report), has adopted a method of advocating his views which has been found very successful with inexperienced and ignorant people. He apparently imagines that if he can prove the United States engineers to be incompetent, his efforts to realize the large sum of about eight millions of dollars for the improvement of Galveston Harbor would be entirely successful. In attempting this he has, however, overreached himself by asserting too much. To agree with him, all the engineers connected with Galveston Harbor, or who had anything to do with it, including the highest in rank in the corps, have been utterly ignorant, and have proceeded upon radically erroneous and false principles. I do not think that the sensible, thinking people of this country, apart from the mercenaries who are enlisted by the prospect of sharing in the benefits of the $8,000,000 which Mr. Eads seeks, will ever be persuaded that the body of men composing the Corps of Engineers, whose qualities have been tested for so long a time, can be brought down to the low level where he would like to sink them.

Galveston is peculiarly placed. A large interior bay discharges its waters through an outlet between Fort Point and Bolivar Point, the distance between these points being 2,733 yards. The force of the outgoing water is sufficient to excavate and maintain a channel of 30 feet to a distance of 2,067 yards in front of the line joining these points, to maintain a depth of 25 feet to a distance of 3,534 yards from the same line, and a depth of 20 feet to a distance of 4,667 yards measured from the same base. This interior bay receives the river waters and in it the sediment held in suspension is deposited. The water which goes over the bar is free of sediment, and therefore the bar is composed entirely of sea sand and fragments of shells. It is in all respects what may be styled a drift-bar; that is, one due to the currents and waves of the Gulf. It is entirely different in its character from the bars at the mouths of the Mississippi, which are formed of material brought down by the river or held in suspension in the waters, and the course of reasoning which would apply to the mouths of the Mississippi for their improvement might not hold with regard to the bar at Galveston, and I state this the more because it has always been the view held by the officers of engineers; while Mr. Eads himself, if I should judge from his language, evidently thinks that there is no difference between them.

The ordinary rise and fall of the tides at Galveston is one and one-tenth of a foot, but occasions not infrequent occur during the year when there are rises of two or three feet, and perhaps a little more, which are due to winds of a moderate character from the south or southeast. The current from the ordinary rise and fall of the tide in passing over the bar is worthy of consideration, because although the discharge at those periods is comparatively little, it nevertheless exercises a conservative effect in moving sand which is disturbed by the waves and held in suspension. During rises of two and three and four feet the action of the currents is much more beneficial; but when a storm comes from the south or southeast the interior bay is filled to a considerable height with the waters blown in by their force.

In 1875 the rise of water at Fort Point due to a gale of wind was eight and a half feet, and it was said the rise in the upper parts of the bay was from twelve to fifteen feet, so that on an average the height of water was about ten or eleven feet. The wind veered to the northwest, blowing a gale from that direction, and the waters were violently forced out to sea and discharged in a short period of time, the duration of which is not accurately known. The effect, however, was very striking. The ordinary outlet between Fort Point and Bolivar Point did not seem to be sufficiently capacious for the passage of this large body of water. It is stated that the portion of Galveston Island from Fort Point to the city of Galveston was under water, and that it was washed down during the gale so as to be below the ordinary level of the water.

Of course a rise of this height is unusual; but it is not infrequent to have rises to five and six feet.

Furthermore, the northerly winds sometimes blow out the waters of the bay for several feet below their usual level, which additional water must sometimes be added to that due to the rise.

We see then from the added action of the south wind filling up the bay, and of northerly winds blowing out the water below the usual level, that with small rises, or even with no rise above the usual tide, the discharge and the velocity of the currents may be considerable.*

Mr. Eads lays down a number of points illustrating the principle of the quick discharge of water to which I take no exception in the abstract, for they are elementary laws that every engineer should know, but only to their application to this case, without taking into view other important considerations. If the question here were only to deliver the largest supply of water within a given time, Mr. Eads would be right; but if the question be, as it is, the improvement of the bar, then it may be expedient not to obtain the greatest scour, but to regulate the scour, so that it shall be useful and not hurtful.

In connection with this, let us take a glance at the features of the locality, and compare them with some other places which have been operated on by jetties. The bottom of the Gulf in front of the entrance to Galveston Bay shoals very gradually, the distances of the 18-foot curve beyond the outer bar, measured from Fort Point, being about four miles, and from Bolivar Point about three miles. The length of the bar between the interior and exterior 18-foot curves is about one and three-quarter miles. We understand then at a glance the length of the jetties required to effect an improvement, as well as the enormous body of sand which must be moved in order to obtain a depth of twenty-five feet or thirty feet.

Mr. Eads nor any one else could calculate the depths to which the waters flowing out of Galveston Bay would excavate the channel if during storm tides they should be entirely confined between high jetties, particularly if they are placed close together.† He makes no allowance in his writings, but rather ridicules the fear that the enormous body of sand moved during these storm tides would ever form an obstruction outside of the heads of the jetties, and yet how this enormous body is to be disposed of becomes very difficult for an engineer who has any experience in the improvement of bars to suggest. I am very free to say that I apprehend a great deal of trouble from such heroic treatment. His system, as he enunciates it, is a violent forcing process, the effects of which he can neither calculate nor foresee. Mr. Eads ridicules the notion of approaching to the required depth by a gradual process.‡ Nor does he seem to perceive that there is a limit to the improvement of every bar which it defies the calculation of man to fix, and that can only be attained by gradual working up to that point, and there to stop.

It requires no logic to prove the self-evident proposition, that when you arrive at this maximum point of improvement the jetties can do no more, and further improvement in depth must be made by the continual application of dredging.

The experiences of the South Pass can not be relied upon, or even used at all, to be applied to the present case. At this pass the crest of the bar was only about one hundred and fifty feet from the depth of thirty feet of the Gulf, and a large area of a depth from thirty feet to three hundred feet and more lay directly in front of the jetty-heads ready to receive the scour from the jetties as well as the limited amount of material brought down by the overflowing waters of the pass. There is no parallelism in the cases of the South Pass and Galveston Bar.

There is a case where heroic treatment has been applied, with the result of an immediate failure. The Dutch engineers are, if anything, expert in hydraulics, but their attempt upon the outlet of the Scheur Branch of the River Maas, to obtain a depth of twenty-three feet, terminated in getting but fifteen feet, and has besides pushed out the bar considerably. The original curve of sixteen feet, 1,100 yards from the shore, has been advanced to a distance of 3,000 yards. One of the jetties was run out to the 26-foot curve, which was only 2,200 yards originally from the shore. A different system rather more tentative, in order to make experience available, would have succeeded better. What renders the failure here more remarkable is the fact that there was not the ghostly littoral current so generally quoted by ambitious engineers to fill up the deficiencies of their project, but bona fide strong tidal currents sweeping the space at the jetty-heads. This was a clear case of scouring badly applied, and throwing out more material beyond the jetty-heads than the ordinary influence there in operation could remove or dispose of. The engineer of that work, to effect the desired improvement, will in all probability be compelled to resort to a prolongation of the jetties and to extensive dredging.

* It is singular that Mr. Eads, and after him the majority of the committee, should state this as the distance apart of the jetties of Major Howell's plan, the distance apart really being 10,400 feet.

* Mr. Eads speaks of placing jetties at 4,000 feet apart, less than one-half of the width of the outlet now existing between Fort Point and Bolivar Point, a width which we have already seen was not sufficient for the discharge at the greatest periods of rise, and it is known that alarm has been felt lest if the discharge be unwisely contracted in width the city of Galveston itself might suffer during one of these periods.

† It would be something probably far exceeding a depth between jetties of twenty-five or even thirty feet.

‡ By that I mean a gradual contraction of the water both as to the distance apart of the jetties and the height to which it is proposed to raise them.

The height, extent, and distance apart of these jetties were calculated by the ablest engineers of Holland, and the result has shown the little reliance to be placed upon á priori careful computations. Still less should reliance be placed upon dogmatic utterances, not the less dogmatic because they are often mere guesses.

The works at the Sulina mouth of the Danube were eminently tentative in their character, and were pushed on by the lights furnished from experience gained day by day on the spot. So in the same way the operations at the South Pass were tentative; the jetties at the mouth, placed originally at 1,000 feet apart, have had this interval diminished by spur dikes, and even by an interior line of jetty joining the ends of these dikes. It is too late, after such experiences, to pretend to regulate beforehand the exact length, height, or distance apart of jetties and thus wholly reject the tentative process.

I do not perceive the relevancy of Mr. Eads's remarks concerning leaving "outlets," which really have no relation to what has been done or what is intended to be done here. He has probably seen a progress sketch of the south jetty at Galveston up to the date of June 30, 1882, or some unfinished plan not authorized for construction, and has been swift to conclude and to publish to the world that outlets were to be left in the jetties near the shore.

There are a large number of documents printed with the report of the Chief of Engineers emanating from various sources, such as the local engineers,* their assistants, &c., which contain generally useful information, and for such reason are published; but these reports have no other value save the authority of their authors, who are alone responsible for the views expressed. Judgment should be given when the works have been substantially completed and results known, when responsibility will attach to the system and to individuals.

Frequent changes are from time to time made in the first authorized projects, according to experience gained, the amount of funds in the future which will probably be granted, and other circumstances, and these changes may not be made officially or published until the period arrives to construct the portion of the works affected. Great injustice may be done from not considering these things or from the neglect of asking explanations of what is not clearly understood, because the official papers published can not necessarily contain the whole subject nor even all the important points.

Mr. Eads, in Appendix B of the majority report, lays down the following principle: "It is simply impossible to permanently maintain between submerged jetties any increase of depth even if such jetties could produce it." Very well. Upon the coast of Texas there are two places where jetties under the water level during the process of construction (and they are not yet for want of funds brought to the surface) have for some years past increased the depth and maintained it; and, what is still more contradictory of his assertion, at each of the places there is a single jetty only, and that jetty is not placed on the side of the channel whence the drift comes, but on the other side—there being consequently nothing to prevent the whole coastwise drift of sand from coming into the channels. It is better sometimes to be experienced than to be dogmatic.

"The views of Mr. Eads in detail, as expressed by him before the committee, will be found in the appendix hereto, marked B," is a quotation from the majority report. I look in that appendix for the width between jetties proposed by Mr. Eads, and find a distance of 4,000 feet there mentioned, but in such a way that he may say the distance mentioned was simply used as an illustration—and that is the sole definite mention of a most important element of the jetty system to be applied here which I have been able to discover. Nevertheless the majority report fully indorses Mr. Eads's views in apparent ignorance of a vital feature of his plans—otherwise why does not that report furnish this important information? Does Mr. Eads's reputation give him such prestige over all the engineers of the country that Congress can afford to approve his plans without knowing what they are?

Does Mr. Eads shrink from putting his plans in black and white, either because he dreads criticism or has not sufficient knowledge of the locality to commit himself?† If there is not some reason, why this prolonged reticence?

He has been dogmatic in the extreme in stating his own views and in condemning those which others entertained or were supposed by him to entertain. One who does this in regard to others should have the courage of his own convictions sufficient to commit himself definitely to some project.

The distance between Fort Point and Bolivar Point appears to have been a variable element. At the date of the last survey it was 8,200 feet; at a former date about 10,560 feet. At the date of Major Howell's project the distance was a little more than 9,000 feet. The distance apart of the jetties at the starting point by Major Howell's plan was 10,400 feet, not 12,000 feet as alleged. A curious commentary upon the objection that the distance between his jetties was too great is the fact that the depth in the channel corresponding to a width of nearly two miles was thirty-nine feet. Consider in addition that the board had in contemplation to incline the jetties toward each other even to obtain a depth of eighteen feet, and the wonder is what foundation could exist for the clamor that the jetties were to be placed too far apart to do any good.

Mr. Eads proposes to cap the Galveston jetties above high water with a concrete wall, so far as can be inferred, like that constructed on the South Pass jetties, and presenting vertical surfaces to the action of the waves, which is a construction opposed to sound principles, as the waves of oscillation converted by the sloping sides of the jetties into waves of translation strike the surfaces of the wall at right angles. Was it in consequence of this defect that one-half mile of the capping of the eastern and most exposed jetty was broken up during a storm?

THE PROPOSED CONTRACT WITH MR. EADS.

The majority report promises a navigable depth of thirty feet after Mr. Eads's operation, and the contract in various places makes the same promise, with a proviso, however, further on in the body of the instrument, that the depth of thirty feet will be taken without regard to width. In other words, the 30-foot channel need not be over two feet in width, and consequently not a navigable channel at all. Why is it necessary to make a promise which is not to be fulfilled? The contract in fact requires only a navigable channel of thirty-six feet in depth and two hundred feet in width, with a continuous line of soundings of thirty feet in depth in the center line of the channel, but without regard to width.

By the provisions of the contract, however, after attaining the depth of twenty-five feet over the bar Mr. Eads becomes entitled to $6,350,000, a sum of money in my opinion vastly in excess of the cost of the amount of work necessary to produce that result, if jetties can effect it.

The amount of compensation due after attaining a depth of twenty-five feet over the bar is so large in comparison with that which the contractor would afterward receive from remaining to complete the contract, that a strong temptation would arise, particularly should difficulties appear ahead at that stage of operations, to abandon the work. It must be noted that the depth alluded to would probably be obtained, if at all, before it should become necessary to put on the concrete capping, so that by retiring early he might also get rid of that portion of the contract.

It is not necessary to go further; this method of analysis is simple and can be pursued by any one to demonstrate the fact that the proposed contract is so far in favor of the contractor that it might be greatly opposed to the interests of the United States.

The fact that the contractor must borrow money in the market at high rates of interest, as is alleged was done during the operations at South Pass, as this interest must form a part of the contractor's estimate of cost, would seem to be equivalent, on the part of the Government, to borrowing at a higher rate of interest than it is now paying.

Section 6 of the proposed contract states "that said Eads and his associates shall be untrammeled in the full and free exercise of his or their judgment, skill and experience in the location, design, and construction of said works, and all appurtenances thereto."

I submit that this constitutes a power over the navigable waters of the United States, unrestrained by any provision for supervision of the contractor's plans, which should never be conferred upon any individual.

I desire to say that in my objections to the general scope of the contract I have not intended any allusion even indirectly to Mr. Eads, but have endeavored to treat it as a pure business transaction, and in the same spirit I will go on to say that while the present system of making appropriations for the improvement of harbors and rivers may be changed to advantage in some points, I do not regard it as an improvement to select some one point for completion in preference to many others quite as deserving of equal consideration at the hands of Congress, nor to choose one contractor or engineer to the exclusion of many others equally capable, thereby putting away competition in cost and the proper and necessary criticism of plans.

Moreover, the intention to appropriate a large sum in favor of contracting with specified individuals will rally to their support many interested persons, and in the efforts made to mold opinions to their views it will be difficult often to obtain a candid exposition of fact or to arrive at a sound conclusion. There are other evils, patent to every one, which need not be enumerated.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen., U. S. A.

Hon. ALBERT S. WILLIS,
Chairman of the Committee on Commerce,
United States House of Representatives.

There seems to have been a determined purpose on the part of the committee reporting this bill to take from the office of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department the control and direction of many of the more important works.

The jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission is to be extended. A new board, to be called the United States harbor board, is to be created, both to restrict and limit the jurisdiction and duties of the Engineer Department, and which, if adopted, will in my judgment most seriously impair the efficiency of this branch of the service. Why should this be done? What is there in the record of this Department to justify such action? There are and have been for many years in the Engineer Department gentlemen of the highest grade of engineering ability and intelligence, gentlemen who have been highly educated in their profession, and that, too, at the hands of the Government. They understand most thoroughly the work they have in hand. Their integrity and honesty of purpose has never been questioned. No breath of scandal has ever attached to this office. The work performed has been thorough, substantial, and of the most permanent character, and has generally met the highest expectations of the public. Why, then, I again ask, should the jurisdiction and work of this office be limited or restricted?

It is proposed to turn over the stretch of the Mississippi River from Des Moines Rapids to the mouth of the Ohio River to the Mississippi River Commission. Who asks that this be done? All the improvements on the upper Mississippi have been made according to the plans and under the sole direction of the Engineer Office of the War Department. These improvements have proved successful and satisfactory to all interested; and I believe I voice the unanimous sentiment of the people of the valley of the upper Mississippi when I protest against the proposed change. I have to-day received a joint resolution of the Legislature of my own State protesting in the following emphatic terms against this proposition:

The improvement of the Mississippi River between Saint Anthony Falls and Cairo, and the consequent train of benefits, depends upon the carrying out of the plans which have been formulated by the engineers of the Army after many years of study and examination, without aid or advice from any one, and all the good results attained are due to their efforts, and limited only by the humble means placed by Congress at their command.

We have observed with great concern during the last few years that the work so well planned and successfully inaugurated by the engineers has been placed under the supervision of a newly created commission by interpolations in the appropriation bills.

This supervision we regard as not only unnecessary but hazardous to the best interests of our State, involved as they are in the completed improvement of the Upper Mississippi River. We believe that the parties who devised these plans will best execute them, and the credit should rest in their hands.

If it is the desire of Congress to maintain efficiency and integrity in the expenditure of money appropriated to carry on the work of river and harbor improvements, it should not restrict the jurisdiction and cripple the powers of the Engineer Department. If, on the contrary, it is the purpose to inaugurate an era of corruption and jobbery, a system of private contracts, then it should adopt this legislation as the first step in such direction.

Mr. Chairman, it is my earnest wish to be able to vote for this appropriation, and I trust that the objectionable features may be so elimi-

*The majority report cites the authority of Colonel Mansfield's map accompanying his report of 1880, for placing the Government jetties 12,000 feet apart; in 1881 and 1882 Colonel Mansfield's map does not indicate a north jetty at all, and in 1883 a radically difficult position is assigned for that jetty. Why not have taken the most natural, instead of the first and crude idea?

But in fact all of these positions are solely Colonel Mansfield's, without any sanction from the proper authority.

†It would seem to be prudent not to place the root or beginning of the jetties at a less distance apart than the opening between Bolivar and Fort Points, which is found to be a variable distance, sometimes about 10,000 feet, apparently measuring the widths necessary under varying circumstances to discharge the extraordinary rises of water in Galveston Bay—and then to incline the jetties toward each other until the bar be reached. The distance at the commencement of the jetties, if too great, could always be corrected by the use of spur dikes.

nated from it as to enable me to do so. As it now stands I certainly can not.

[During the delivery of the foregoing speech of Mr. WASHBURN the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has ten minutes of his time left.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for five minutes additional time, to be taken out of the time to which the debate is limited. Is there objection?

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, could you not give the gentleman the time by unanimous consent without taking it out of the time?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in the power of the Chair.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the gentleman from Minnesota be allowed five minutes beyond the time fixed for closing the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. The House has limited the time at which the debate shall close. To whom does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] surrender the remainder of his time?

Mr. STONE. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, supposing the figures that have been given by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] with reference to the cost of this improvement at Galveston to be correct, do they not justify as a pertinent inquiry this: Would it not be cheaper and much more economical for the United States to move Galveston to a harbor rather than try to move the harbor to Galveston? [Laughter.]

I am heartily in favor, sir, of some of the purposes of this bill. I believe that the rivers and harbors of this country should be improved for the purposes of navigation, and for purposes of navigation alone. Many of the objects of this bill meet my hearty commendation. The Hennepin Canal is, in my judgment, a most meritorious improvement. It is demanded by a large section of this country. It has been demanded by three State Legislatures, representing more than ten millions of people, and there is no feature in this bill which should so heartily commend it to the attention of this committee.

But there are some of its features that in my humble judgment ought to meet with reprobation, and prominent among them is the provision for the pretended improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. I am in favor of reasonable and necessary appropriations for this river, but I want to ask the gentlemen if they have given thought to the enormous cost that is involved in this proposed improvement, to say nothing of the probabilities as to its success. I am prepared to assert, and in my belief to prove, that this improvement contemplates an outlay of more than $150,000,000—one hundred and fifty millions for a scheme of improvement which is shown by the commission themselves to be entirely experimental in its character. None of the distinguished engineers that have charge of this work has yet had the temerity to say in any official document that their plans will result in success. Year after year they come to us saying that the whole scheme is experimental in its character. Year after year they tell us that more time must elapse before they will be able to say with certainty that their work will be a success.

They have given us, however, some estimates as to the probable cost. In their report of 1881 they tell us that the cost of the improvement will be $33,000,000. But, sir, in that same report they tell us that the improvement of two of the reaches, only sixty-three miles in length, will be something in excess of two and a half millions of dollars. Yet, in the last report that we have, or at least in a minority report, Colonel Comstock gives the country the important information that these estimates are erroneous; that a sum in excess of the estimates has already been expended; that the improvements upon these two reaches of the river do not approach completion, and that, in his judgment, at least three times the estimate, or $8,000,000, will be needed for the perfection of the navigation of those two reaches.

This is Colonel Comstock's language in his last report:

> The original estimate of the commission for thirty-eight miles of the Plum Point reach was $1,432,000; and for twenty-five miles of the Lake Providence reach, $1,238,000.
> It is now certain that the cost of these works will be not less than three times the original estimate, and even yet it is not practicable to state with definiteness what the ultimate cost will be.

Two million six hundred and seventy thousand dollars was the estimate of the commission for the improvement of sixty-three miles of river. More than this sum has already been expended, and we are now informed by a member of the commission that three times the estimate will be necessary, or $8,010,000.

And he speaks only with reference to low-water navigation. He leaves out of the estimate entirely the cost of the levees upon the banks of the river. Before the committee appointed by this House of Representatives in the Forty-seventh Congress much valuable information was given. Witnesses were called before the committee and members of the commission were questioned and required to answer, under the solemnity of an oath, as to the probable success and the probable cost of this improvement; and one gentleman, an engineer of distinguished repute, the one I have already named, stated there that, in his judgment, $66,000,000 would probably be required in order to perfect the channel navigation alone, leaving out of account altogether the enormous cost of the levees upon the banks.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman name the man who made that estimate?

Mr. HEPBURN. Colonel Comstock.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And is not Colonel Comstock in a minority in the commission all the time?

Mr. HEPBURN. In reply to the gentleman I say that no other man has dared to give an estimate that he would stand by. There is no one that has dared to contradict Colonel Comstock throughout all the controversy from first to last

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield for a contradiction now?

Mr. HEPBURN. I can not yield. I have only ten minutes altogether

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, the statement is not according to the facts.

Mr. HEPBURN. The statement is not according to the facts, says the gentleman. I will confront him with the record and show who is correct in this matter. Here is the testimony of Colonel Comstock on this point:

> Question. You state that you are working for this idea of confining the river within a space of 3,000 feet wide from Cairo to Red River.
>
> Answer. Yes, sir.
> Q. Do you expect that you can accomplish that within a reasonable time and with a reasonable expenditure of money?
>
> A. We are working toward that limit, and our estimate is, if some definite sum is appropriated, that work can be carried sufficiently far to give ten feet of water from Cairo to Red River. It will not make a river with parallel banks everywhere. Much of that depends upon experience yet to be ascertained. Much of the river we want to make with parallel banks.
> Q. Therefore it is impossible to tell the time that will be required, or to state the cost?
>
> A. The time required depends on the rate of appropriation. The estimates vary from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000.
> Q. That depends largely upon the number of places that are to be worked upon this plan?
>
> A. My own judgment is that we must work the whole length of the river.
> Q. Do you believe it can be done for $66,000,000?
> A. Some such sum as that; we have no experience on which to base our work, or rather our estimates.
> Q. You would not, on your own reputation, say that would be the outside limit?
> A. No, sir; nor would I say it would be the outside limit either in the way of being too much or too little. It may be less or it may be more than that.

There you have it, Mr. Chairman. The best estimate this gentleman can give of the cost of improving low-water navigation—the 3,000 feet limit—is the enormous sum of $66,000,000.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the nearest approach the commission has ever come to an estimate was in 1881 in its report of that year. This is the language used:

> The estimates of cost submitted in the report of February 17, 1880, for initial works upon six reaches of the river between Cairo and Vicksburg, embracing an aggregate length of one hundred and eighty four miles of bad navigation, amounts to $4,113,000, and it was stated as the opinion of the commission—
> "That such additional works as will ultimately be required to complete and render permanent the improvement contemplated in this system at the localities specified will not exceed the amount stated as needed for initial works."
> This would amount to $8,226,000 for one hundred and eighty-four miles, or about $45,000 per mile.
> These estimates cover about one-fourth of the length of the river where navigation needs improvement, namely, from Cairo to Red River; and assuming that the remaining three-fourths will cost proportionately, the aggregate cost of the entire improvement would reach $33,000,000.

The Plum Point and Providence reaches were included in the specific estimate in the first of the above paragraphs, and the estimate for them was something over two and one-half millions, but Colonel Comstock has stated that here was an underestimate of about five and one-half millions; that eight millions will be required when only a little over two and one-half was anticipated. This mistake was made with reference to the two reaches best known. If such mistakes were possible in respect to them, what may we not anticipate with reference to the others? If the commission has made no worse blunder in respect to other parts of the river, we may confidently expect that the total cost for channel improvements alone will reach the enormous sum of $99,000,000.

When we remember the character of this work, when we remember that it includes the building of one artificial bank in mid-river, and the covering of at least one natural bank with expensive mattresses, made of wire and brush, from the bottom of the river to the summit of the bank, and covering the exposed bank from low water to the summit with stone one foot deep the whole distance from Cairo to the mouth of the river, a distance of 1,085 miles, we can have some idea of the enormous cost of the channel improvement.

This improvement is to be continuous the entire distance from Cairo down. Colonel Comstock, in his testimony already quoted, says: "My own judgment is, we must work the whole length of the river." The commission in the report of 1881 say:

> The commission are, however, prepared to recommend the application of the methods and details heretofore described to the lower river, from Commerce, Mo., downward, with such continuity as will not only improve the immediate localities where navigation is now bad, but will also establish and retain such control over the high-water discharge as will arrest that tendency toward deterioration which has rendered the systematic improvement of the entire river necessary.

While this order of progress is proper for works designed to amend and regulate the existing channel, those undertaken for the purpose of retaining or increasing the volume of discharge within the bed, such as levees and dams for closing outlets, should begin below and be carried continuously up stream.

These quotations would seem to settle the question as to the extent of the work and its continuity, and in view of the opinions expressed I hope gentlemen will not continue the assertion that it is only in a few places that work is required. It might not be so intolerable if the cost ended with the enormous expenditures for channel improvement, but it does not.

Mr. Chairman, this is not the whole of the case. This same committee of the last House made a voluminous report. The present Speaker of the House was a member of that committee. They spent weeks, as I understand, investigating the subject. They went over the route. They examined scores and scores of witnesses, and that committee have told us as their solemn judgment, first, that the levee feature of the improvement is entirely unnecessary as a factor in the improvement of low-water navigation; and second, that the cost of this improvement is to reach an enormous amount, somewhere between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000.

The language of the committee is as follows:

The probable expense of a system of levees of sufficient strength to hold the flood waters of the river within a channel, as is proposed by the commission, of 5,000 feet, is variously estimated from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000, while many witnesses are not presumptuous enough to even venture upon an estimate of their ultimate expense.

Messrs. ELLIS and THOMAS, of the committee, filed a minority report, but in speaking of the cost use this language: "The expense will be great, exceeding in all probability the sum of $50,000,000 it is true."

Many gentlemen have stated that levees are of but little if any value in the improvement of low-water navigation. On this point your committee say:

Your committee are satisfied, from the evidence, that the people along the banks of the Mississippi are chiefly and naturally interested in the building of levees, not so much in the interest of navigation as to secure their lands from overflow and thereby enhance their value. If the building of levees was essential to the improvement of navigation, the fact that they afforded protection to the riparian owners would be no reason for discontinuing them. On the contrary, such a result would be extremely gratifying. Your committee, however, do not believe that they are essential to the improvement of the low-water navigation of the Mississippi, and that their construction for such a purpose can not be justified.

No one, I believe, claims that the low-water navigation will be improved by the use of levees. Many distinguished engineers say they will not be beneficial when the river is at flood, except to protect the adjacent lands. The commission regard the levees as an experiment. Senator HARRISON, when a member of the commission, joined with Colonel Comstock and the committee of this House in the opinion that they were of no benefit to low-water navigation. Yet this bill permits the commission to go on in a lavish outlay of the public money solely for the purpose, as I believe, of improving and enhancing in value the private property of citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I want to see the navigation of the Mississippi River improved, but it only needs it when it is low. When it is at flood the navigation is good enough, and it is only when it is at flood that anybody wants the levees. When the river is in a condition that navigation requires improvement, no one cares about the levees.

Another feature of the bill that appears to me as objectionable is that providing for the improvement of the Galveston Harbor; and here I desire to say that I would interpose no objection to the appropriation of a reasonable sum to accomplish this improvement. But in my opinion there should be a proper relation between the expenditure and the importance of the locality to be improved in respect to its population and its commerce. Let me call attention to the fact that there are but two lines of railway reaching the town of Galveston. If you wish to intersect the railway system of the State of Texas, you must leave that city and travel to the northward. No considerable portion of the commerce of the State has as yet reached that port. In an appendix to a report made by one of the Senators representing that State in the other end of the Capitol, on the 30th of June last, I find the following:

Statement showing the amount of exports of merchandise from and imports into the port of Galveston, Tex.

Iron and steel and coffee amount to $1,208,628 in value, leaving a total of less than a third of a million of dollars as the value of all other articles. But it has been said that Texas must have this port in order that her cereals may reach their market. I regard this as a mistake; Texas has no surplus for shipment. In view of what has been said of the magnificent extent of this great State, I make this suggestion with commendable diffidence. It may astonish gentlemen after the addresses we have listened to in commendation of this scheme, but the statement rests upon proofs that these gentlemen can not controvert. I again appeal to the report of the Senator from Texas; I call up a witness of his own selection—one eminently worthy and well qualified—a no less distinguished gentleman than Hon. J. R. Dodge, of the Agricultural Bureau. He has prepared, and the Senator indorses by incorporating into his report in favor of this improvement, the following table:

Product of cereals in Texas in 1882 and 1883.

Cereals.	1882.	1883.
	Bushels.	Bushels.
Corn.....	63,416,300	63,146,300
Wheat.....	4,173,700	4,301,000
Rye.....	60,900	57,855
Oats.....	9,988,800	9,489,300
Barley.....	118,720	127,039

There is usually no surplus of any of the cereals in Texas. The supply of corn last year was about thirty-five bushels per capita, which was average supply of the United States per capita in the census years. The wheat supply was only about two and a half bushels, which is less than the consumption of the State.

The only cotton State which ever has an appreciable surplus of corn is Tennessee, and that is but a small and unreliable quantity.

J. R. DODGE, Statistician.

In the great staple of corn Texas does not produce sufficient for her own people, and does not produce one-half enough of wheat. The average consumption of wheat in the United States is nearly six bushels to each of the population. Texas produces less than half enough for her own people. In view of this statement by the eminent statistician, does not all of this talk about the necessity of this improvement in order that the grain of Texas may reach a foreign market sound like the veriest gasconade.

But it is said that the improvement is demanded in order that Texas cattle may be able to reach a market. Let me again call your attention to the statement of Professor Dodge. He says that the total shipments of living animals of all kinds in the year 1883 aggregated but $16,645 in value.

Yet the census of 1880 informs us that roaming the prairies of Texas are more than 6,000,000 of cattle. Six millions in the State and $16,000 worth shipped from the principal port of the State! There would seem to be something radically wrong in this if it were not known that the great State of Texas was as destitute of cattle suitable for the European market as she is of corn and wheat. The grass-fed cattle of Texas, the small-haned and big-horned cattle of the Southwest, will not bear ocean shipment. The cattle that are in demand for foreign shipment are the corn-fattened steers of the highest grade. No others will stand the shrinkage and the other elements of the cost of transportation. The market for Texas cattle lies to the northward.

Recognizing this fact, gentlemen from that State have been pressing upon the attention of members of the House the necessity of the establishment of a national cattle-trail six miles wide, with convenient feeding-grounds, not more than twelve miles square, and extending from the south line of the Indian Territory to the northern limit of the United States. Surely Texas is in her most modest mien. All that she wants at present is the use of a strip of the public domain twelve miles (or thereabouts) in width and 1,000 miles or more in length for her cattle-trail, and $9,000,000 for a harbor at which to export those not driven. Would it not be better to pack the attenuated carcasses of her beeves in their immense and wondrous horns and float them out to vessels over the Galveston Bar?

The principal use Galveston would have for an improved harbor would be in the shipment of cotton. In 1883 she shipped coastwise and abroad 516,993 bales, or about 6,000 car-loads. This could certainly be carried to New Orleans for $35 per car, or a total sum of $210,000. This improvement will cost, I believe, at least $9,000,000. The interest of this sum, at 3 per cent., would be $270,000 per annum. The $9,000,000 of cost would certainly be worth 3 per cent. to the Treasury. Now, would it not be better for the Government to be at the charge of carrying all of this cotton from Galveston to New Orleans—making the owner a present of the entire freight-money—than to undertake this improvement? In my judgment it would be better, even if there were no subsequent cost for the repair and maintenance of the costly structure.

But, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen have insisted that the improvement is not to be very costly. And it has been suggested that the ultimate cost is to be much less than the sum named in the Senate bill providing for the work. I am afraid gentlemen are not quite sincere when they so declare. I am afraid their judgement has been disturbed by too eager desire. They have, I fear, tried to convince the House without themselves being convinced. What evidence have gentlemen of our committee, bearing upon this point of ultimate cost, that was not in the possession of the distinguished gentleman who made the report to the Senate that I have already referred to? That gentleman is distinguished for the care with which he makes investigation and the fidelity with which he makes report. His report is an elaborate argument in advocacy of the bill which proposed to pay Captain Eads the sum of $7,750,000 for securing the results that are contemplated by this bill. No gentleman has authority for saying that the plans to be pursued under this bill are other or different from those contemplated by the bill advocated in the Senator's report.

In this report we are informed that the improvement involves jetties extending 8.33 miles into the Gulf of Mexico. The writer institutes a comparison between the improvement at the mouth of the Mississippi and at Galveston. The report says:

By the terms of the bill Mr. Eads is required to secure a maximum channel of not less than thirty feet in depth for a total compensation of $7,750,000. In view of the work to be done and the results to be accomplished, the committee is satisfied that this is a reasonable compensation. The cost of the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River was fixed in 1874 by a commission of engineers at $5,342,110, and Mr. Eads afterward agreed to do the work for $5,250,000. The commission referred to was composed of Generals Wright, Alexander, and Comstock, of the United States Engineer Corps, Prof. Henry Mitchell, of the United States Coast Survey, and T. E. Sickles, W. Minor Roberts, and H. T. Whitcomb, distinguished civil engineers. It may be safely assumed that the estimate of this commission, made after an inspection of similar works in Europe and after a careful examination and study of the whole matter, was a fair one, and if this be true, it follows that the maximum compensation provided for in the present bill is reasonable, because—

First. The jetties at Galveston must be considerably more than double the length of those at the mouth of the Mississippi to reach out to the same depth of water;

Second. They must be of a heavier and more substantial character, because the water is deeper, and, as they extend so much farther out into the Gulf, they will be much more exposed to storm action;

Third. The work being so exposed, there will be greater danger of injury to the boats and apparatus used in its construction; and Fourth. In addition to the jetties over the outer bar, works of an extensive and costly character will be required to deepen the inner bar.

* * * * * * *

The profiles of the Galveston Bar show that the average depth of water to mean high tide for the two jetties will be thirteen and three-quarter feet. Applying the form of the average cross-section of the Mississippi jetties to this depth with twenty feet width at the top shows that the required average cross-section at Galveston for jetties of equal strength will require 1,018 square feet of section or 138 per cent. more material than the Mississippi jetties. The profiles also show that the jetties at Galveston must have an aggregate length of not less than 8.33 miles.

It has been shown above that 8.33 miles of jetties at Galveston, if of no larger average cross-section than those at the mouth of the Mississippi, would cost $2,646,207. To this must be added 138 per cent. for the increased depth at Galveston, and this would amount to $3,651,765, making an aggregate of $6,297,772. The cost of the works to deepen the inner bar at Galveston are not included in the above amount. These will probably cost as much as the works at the head of the South Pass of the Mississippi River. In the works at the head of the South Pass there was 301,515 cubic yards of brush and stone, which at the price of $2.88½ per cubic yard would amount to $869,868. This sum may therefore be added to offset the cost of the works on the inner bar at Galveston, and this would make the aggregate cost of the works $7,167,840.

There can be no doubt of the fact that the works at Galveston, during their construction, will be exposed to danger of injury from the violence of storms. The works at the mouth of the Mississippi River were, owing to their location, not subject to this danger to the same extent. When once these works at Galveston are completed and solidified they will be strong enough, Mr. Eads guarantees, to resist the most severe storm without serious injury. The time when the risk of injury is greater is during the progress of construction. At such a time these works, built out for miles into the Gulf and with no protection against storms, must be injured to a greater or less degree. In estimating the cost of any great work a percentage to cover contingencies is usually added to the price, and should be allowed. In view of the risk of injury to the works during construction, and of their failure to produce the stipulated depths, the committee is of opinion that 25 per cent. should be added to the total estimated cost to cover contingencies. This would amount to $1,791,960, which, added to the cost of the work, makes the total sum of $8,959,800.

This argument emanating from this distinguished and authoritative source ought to satisfy gentlemen of the committee that the grand total of cost, arrived at after such solicitous care, and after exhausting every source of information, is correct, and that the whole cost of the Galveston improvement is but $40,200 less than $9,000,000. When we remember how liable the friends of any appropriation of this character are to underestimate cost rather than overstate it we may, I think, safely say that this work involves a depletion of the Treasury exceeding the sum last named. In comparison, Mr. Chairman, with appropriations heretofore made to improve the great harbors of the nation, this sum seems to be an immense one and greatly disproportioned to the needs of a city of 22,000 inhabitants with an established commerce, such as the friends of this bill have shown to belong to the port of Galveston.

I have in my possession, sir, a clipping made from a recent number of the New York Tribune. I have not examined it to see if the sums stated to have been appropriated to the cities named are correctly stated, but I assume them in the main to be. The writer says:

It is estimated that the improvement of Galveston Harbor, according to the scheme which the committee is urged to adopt, will cost nearly $8,000,000. That sum exceeds by about $5,000,000 the total expenditures on the harbor of New York from the first appropriation thirty-three years ago down to the present time; it is more than four times as great as the total sum expended on Boston Harbor, six times as great as the total amount expended for the improvement of Chicago Harbor, nearly eight times as great as the sum total appropriated for Baltimore Harbor, and it exceeds by more than $3,000,000 the amount paid to Captain Eads for jetty improvements at the mouth of the Mississippi.

Three millions for New York with its hundreds of millions of foreign commerce and its 2,000,000 of inhabitants. Eight or nine millions for Galveston, with its 22,000 inhabitants and less than $30,000,000 of foreign commerce. It can not be said that this great inequality is because the great mart has received all that is needed, and that no further demands are made. This is incorrect. Year after year demands have been made for greater harbor facilities, so that the produce of the West might be more cheaply handled. The Harlem River improvement and others have been knocking vainly year after year at the door of your committee. It has no money for increased facilities in New York Harbor, but millions for the disturbance of the pastoral calm and the unvexed waters of the quiet village on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico.

There is a question involved in this improvement that seems to me to be one of great importance to those gentlemen who are known as strict constructionists, gentlemen who are always fearful lest something will be done by the Congress without proper warrant in the Constitution. I believe that the larger number of this school of statesmen who adorn this committee are advocates of the Galveston improvement. Many of them think that the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Mississippi River with the great chain of lakes and giving a water way from the prairies of Iowa to the Atlantic would be an unwarranted and unconstitutional exercise of power and a profligate misuse of the public treasury. I would ask such, "What is the improvement you contemplate over the Galveston Bar? Is it not the digging of a canal—a canal 8.33 miles long, 17 feet deep, and 200 feet wide?"

It is true that it is covered with water, but aside from this peculiarity and in addition it has every element and quality of a canal. It is a ditch filled with water, and that is a canal. If some of the fossils who oppose the Hennepin Canal had been called upon in their youth to pass upon the question they would have found all of the conditions to be similar; for in the glacial period, we are told by scientists, all of our grand Mississippi Valley was covered with water, and in that early day the construction of the Hennepin Canal would have been in all of its characteristics and phenomona like the proposed improvement under the surface of the Gulf.

This section of the bill involves the establishment of jetties extending from the shore line into the Gulf of Mexico a distance of 8.33 miles. The jurisdiction of the United States extends from the shore line, at low tide, the distance of three miles. The contemplated improvement extends five miles farther. It extends for five miles into the high seas, into the common jurisdiction of the commercial nations of the world. As a nation we have no exclusive jurisdiction or exclusive right. Yet we are usurping such jurisdiction and right. Suppose that on this improvement, eight miles from our shore, a crime is committed. By what law and who will punish it? Not by the statutes by the usual process of law, for the offense was committed more than a league from the coast line. Not by admiralty, because it was not committed on a vessel covered by our flag. It will not do to say that the water along this distance is not very deep, and therefore this distance does not enter into or become a part of the league by which our jurisdiction is extended from our shore. Is it not the presence of the water rather than its depth that is to be regarded?

Again, if we have the right to invade the high seas for a distance of five miles, why may we not, if we choose, carry the right farther—from Florida coast to Cuba? Where is the limit to which we may go? Does not this construction involve every principle of constitutional power that would be involved in the building of Captain Eads's ship-railroad or a canal across the Isthmus of Panama? And how can gentlemen who can not build a canal within our jurisdiction engage in such an improvement outside it?

I beg to call the attention of the gentlemen of the committee to a provision of this bill of very astonishing character:

Said works shall be constructed according to the plans, specifications, and estimates to be submitted by James B. Eads as hereinafter provided for.

Mr. Chairman, have you ever seen in law or resolution a provision so anomalous as this? It puts the entire Treasury of this Government into the hands of this man Eads. There is absolutely no limitation placed on his expenditure, or the necessity that he may create for expenditure. He has made no estimates, specifications, or plans. He is yet to make them, and when they are made the Secretary of War and the Engineer Corps of the Army are to accept them without demurrer or dissent, and execute them. The will and the judgment of the sworn officers of the Government are in subjection to a person not an officer, not under oath, nor under bond. It will be remembered that it has been somewhat boastfully said by a gentleman very friendly to this bill that the city of Galveston was obligated to pay to Eads in case of his success a sum much larger than that proposed by the Government.

This is in itself a fact that in my judgment unfits him for the service of the United States. There ought not to be any divided duty or divided obligation connected with trusts of this character. The larger the expenditure the better will the interests of Galveston be served. The expenditure of $9,000,000, largely for labor and crude materials, in that city, will be a wonderful blessing to her people even if no ship should ever pass through the improvement; and the larger the expenditure the farther will the interests of these good people be concerned. I think they have been too liberal to Captain Eads to commend him to this committee.

But I find another most singular provision in this bill, in the following language: The appropriations for the Mississippi River "shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved or amended by an advisory engineer of said commission, which office is hereby created, said advisory engineer to be appointed by the President, at a salary of $3,500 per annum; and James B. Eads is hereby recommended to the President for that position."

Here you will notice, gentlemen, that Captain Eads is again made absolutely controlling. If he does not approve, the work of the commission shall not go forward. They may plan and devise, but he must approve. They have had the experience of years, but he may amend any or all of their suggestions. Does it not seem that our honorable committee have been seized with a blind infatuation for this distinguished engineer that would be rebuked in a school-girl of 15 years?

Mr. Chairman, I have no hostility to the city of Galveston, or any proper plan for the improvement of her commercial facilities. We have already expended more than a million and a half on that harbor. The engineer in charge says that one million more will complete his work, resulting in a depth of twenty-five feet in that harbor. I am willing that this sum shall be appropriated, but I am not willing to throw away the sums already expended and begin anew. Let me call your attention to the latest report of the officer in charge:

Officer in charge, Maj. S. M. Mansfield, Corps of Engineers, having under his immediate orders Lieut. W. L. Fisk, Corps of Engineers. (During the interval between August 1, 1883, and October 1, 1883, the works were temporarily in charge of Lieutenant Fisk.)

1. Entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas.—The adopted plan (project of 1874, modified 1880) covers the work of deepening the bars by contracting the outflowing current upon a less extent of bar, to thereby effect its removal and prevent its reformation.

The amount expended to June 30, 1884 (including $100,000 of Galveston city funds), was $1,496,522.81. Of this amount, and under the project of 1880, $980,662.51 was applied to jetty construction, namely: Ninety feet on the north side and 22,551 feet on the south side of the entrance prolonged gulfward. The expenditure of the gross amount has resulted in obtaining and maintaining a good channel over the inner bar, and a very apparent improvement in depth over the outer bar.

The work of the past year was that of building up the south jetty, $100,000 of the city funds having been applied thereto.

The estimate of 1880, $1,825,813, contemplated the obtainment of a channel across the outer bar of at least twenty-five feet deep, conditioned upon continuous work under annual appropriations of $500,000. The conditions governing the estimate not having been observed for the past four years, the work has dragged in consequence.

About one-half the estimated work is completed, and with its accomplishment is gained not only valuable experience, but results of such importance as strengthen confidence in the plan established looking to the full improvement expected.

The estimated amount required for the entire and permanent completion of the work of improvement, in accordance with the project of 1880, is $1,000,813.

Let us go forward with this improvement in harmony with the plans on which so much money has been expended, the experience and advice of our engineers, and on a basis of cost that has proper relation to the demands of commerce, the importance of the city, and the expenditures by which our business has been fostered and developed in other States.

Again I declare myself in favor of liberal appropriations for the improvement or construction of all needed water ways. Still I am reminded that the speakers and writers of the Democratic party in the States where I reside were busy in their denunciation of the river and harbor bills of late years. "The infamous river and harbor bills," they called them. They said I "had betrayed the interests of my constituents in voting for these infamous and iniquitous measures." I had voted for one, I had voted against two. That fact seemed to make but little difference to my assailants. I was charged with voting for all.

And, Mr. Chairman, unjust as I regard the two provisions of this bill that I have discussed, I may give it my vote; I shall try to have it amended in the particulars named. If I can not do so, if it should contain the provision for the Hennepin Canal when put on its final passage, I shall give it my vote. The Legislature of the State of Iowa has instructed the representatives of the State to support that measure. I believe it to be eminently wise and just. The people with united voice demand it. It will add millions to our savings each year. It will give us a corrective upon all of the railways that extend from our eastern border to our great market, and will do more to solve the transportation question in the interest of the great Northwest than the expending of $100,000,000 in any other way.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally; and a message in writing was received from the President of the United States by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, when the pending bill was first under discussion it was said by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] that its benefits were divided unequally between the North and the South and that the South got the largest share. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that after reflection, after the gentleman from Wisconsin had slept upon the matter and had examined the figures relating to it more carefully, for he seems to be a figurative man, he would have withdrawn those remarks. But instead of doing so, Mr. Chairman, he comes here to-day reiterating and emphasizing those statements. He says to-day that this bill is marred and scarred from Genesis to Revelations with sectional inequalities.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There are no "revelations" in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Now, sir, that statement is sufficiently refuted when we consider that this committee, consisting of fifteen members, embraces ten from the North and only five from the South. Where is there ground for any inference of any improper conduct, any "fraud," as the gentleman charges—for he used the word "fraud"—in a committee composed as this one is?

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says—and he is sustained only by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]—that there is inequality in this bill; that the great, the expensive, the extravagant improvements are in the Southern portion of the country; that one Southern improvement at Galveston is to cost $7,000,000. I will remind the gentleman that there are four Northern improvements provided for in this bill each of which is to cost $7,000,000; and I will name them: Sandy Bay, the Hennepin Canal, Toledo, and the mouth of the Columbia River.

Mr. GEORGE. In this bill the committee have left out the mouth of the Columbia River.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That was put by the Senate into the bill of last year.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Then there are three great Northern improvements embraced in this bill, involving an expenditure of $7,000,000 each. Because one improvement in the South is to be provided for, why is all this clamor raised here? It does not appear in this bill at all that this Southern improvement is to cost $7,000,000. Where is anything in the bill to that effect?

The gentleman from Minnesota refers to the Senate bill; but that is not a part of this bill. It is provided in this bill that this Galveston improvement shall be under the direction of the Secretary of War, upon such plans and specifications as shall be furnished by James B. Eads. There is nothing about $7,000,000. Why, sir, this work, as prosecuted by the Secretary of War, may cost but $4,000,000. Where is any motive or any interest on the part of James B. Eads to make it cost $7,000,000? What would he get by reason of the enlarged cost?

Mr. WILLIS. The Chief of Engineers has said that upon these plans the work could be done for two and a half million dollars; and for this reason the committee have proposed to put the work under the direction of the War Department.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Certainly. And what motive has the engineer who furnishes the plans to make it cost any more? His pay is not increased. The money is to be expended by the Secretary of War.

But to return to what the gentleman from Wisconsin says in regard to this bill. He would maintain that money ought not to be appropriated to the South because forsooth, as stated by him, in certain named States in the South the judicial expenses of the Government amount to $1,000,000, while in certain named States in the North with larger population the amount of such expenses is only $700,000. Why, sir, it is admitted that these judicial expenses in the South are enormous, are greater than they ought to be. But how does this arise? If you will examine the reports or communications made by the present Attorney-General to Congress you will find that he characterizes these expenditures made down there by the present officials as corrupt and extravagant. But is the South to be visited with the consequences of this and not to share in a river and harbor bill because the judicial expenses in the South exceed those in the Northern States?

Mr. Chairman, there is no such sectionalism in this bill as is charged by the gentleman from Minnesota. I deny it. This committee, as I have stated, has been governed solely by regard to the improvement of navigation and the interests of commerce. The evidence on which the committee acted in this matter is embraced in the records of the corps of Army engineers, and these officers are not from the South.

Mr. Chairman, since the Government was founded $105,000,000 has been appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors. Why, sir, this Government appropriated to one Northern railroad more than that amount; and it was a railroad in the region of country where the two gentlemen to whom I have referred reside. Two hundred million acres of land have been granted to railroads in this country—land equal in area to the Empire of Germany. How little of this went to the South?

Of the $105,000,000 heretofore appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors, how much or how little did the South receive? I have the figures here in Executive Document No. 6, and they show that the State of Wisconsin has received more than $4,000,000, and that eight Southern States have not received in the aggregate as much as the single State of Wisconsin.

Why, sir, New York of that amount received $10,000,000, his State received $4,000,000, and Michigan received $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. So throughout the whole entire list.

Do I complain of this? Do I impute it as an offense? Not at all, sir, because I remember with pleasure that Daniel Webster, in his reply to Hayne, said that he claimed for himself and for New England great praise for having uniformly supported the most liberal grants from the public Treasury for the West and the South. And I remember, too, with pleasure, when the great improvement of the Mississippi River was under discussion a few years ago in this House, a distinguished gentleman from Michigan, a State that has received, as I said, nearly $8,000,000, a distinguished member from Michigan, then a member of the Committee on Commerce, now before me [Mr. HORR], made the strongest appeal in behalf of that great improvement.

Daniel Webster said another thing, that there were no Alleghanies in his politics. I am afraid my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] and my friend from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] have not only Alleghanies in their politics, but they have the whole Rocky Mountain range in their politics. [Laughter.]

But enough, Mr. Chairman, on that point; enough on sectionalism. And now what of this improvement at Galveston which has been assailed more fiercely than any other measure provided for in this bill? Why should it not be made? Take a point from old Point Comfort round the Atlantic, around the Gulf coast, all the way to the Rio Grande, and you have only one first-class harbor, only one first-class harbor into which a first-class ocean-going steamer can enter. Reflect for a moment what an immense coast line that is? How did we get that first-class harbor? By the skill and genius of that Napoleon of engineers, James B. Eads. In no other way have we got a harbor in all that immense stretch of seacoast.

Take a point from that harbor, from Eads's jetty, and go round nine hundred miles to the Mexican line, and you have not a first-class harbor—you have not a second-class harbor.

Is this Government to put up with this state of things? Are the representatives of commerce to put up with this state of things? In the present condition of this country as a general rule the consumers are in one part of it and the producers in a different part of it. What they want is to get together, to get cheap transportation. How are they to do it? I am told a beefsteak costs in New England as much as a workingman's wages for a day amounts to, and the consequence is he does without a beefsteak. Now, New England not only gets her beef, but her food supplies, her lumber, her coal, her iron, and other raw material from points at a great distance from her. She gets them, too, over rail, and railroad rates are enormously high as compared with water rates. Now, sir, there is a water line from Boston all the way to Texas, where these products abound. Why, sir, Texas is stifled with abundance—smothered with her products as the Roman maid was crushed under the load of her jewels. They have all the things the Eastern people need, and yet the Eastern people can not get them because of a sand bar in front of Galveston.

Mr. Windom, in a letter of December, 1878, to the lake improvement convention at Saint Paul, says:

> The cost of water transportation diminishes in proportion as the size of vessels increases. The value of any water route is measured by the capacity and efficiency of its most defective part. If from lack of proper improvements a single harbor on any given line can afford facilities for only the smaller class of vessels, the value of the entire line is graded down to correspond with the inadequate harbor.

But gentlemen say that under the plan adopted by this committee this improvement at Galveston can not be made. These gentlemen said the same thing when it was proposed to improve the mouth of the Mississippi River. The whole corps of Army engineers said the same thing. But they say the conditions are different at the South Pass. They say there is a great river there with its current that they do not have at Galveston. Now, it is a notorious fact that it is not the ordinary current of the Mississippi River that makes a scour in the jetty, but the extraordinary current caused by flood, and we have that condition in Galveston Bay. Why, sir, at certain periods certain winds prevail from the land to the Gulf, and they make that same extraordinary current which we have at the mouth of the Mississippi River. While these gentlemen on this floor are so confident this improvement can not be made, they have unbounded confidence in the Corps of Engineers, which declared instead of getting too little water under his plan Eads would get too much water.

Gentlemen here say that Eads will get no water there. The Army engineers declare that you will get too much water by this plan of Eads's. How do you reconcile this discrepancy? If the Army engineers are good authority for you on one point, then they are good authority on the other, and they declare that Captain Eads by his plan will get too much water.

Mr. BAYNE. That they will get too much water at some points, but not enough at others; that is the objection.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I suppose that General Newton is good authority as to what the great engineers of the country believe on this question. He says, in a communication made to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House, presented pursuant to the request of the committee, in speaking of this plan of Mr. Eads's:

> In connection with this let us take a glance at the features of the locality. * * * Mr. Eads nor any one else could calculate—

Mr. HORR. What page do you read from?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I read from page 6 of this report—> could calculate the depth to which the waters flowing out of Galveston Bay would excavate the channel if during strong tide they should be entirely confined between high jetties, particularly if placed close together.

Gentlemen say that on account of the sluggish current in Galveston Bay you can not get any water flow or current sufficient to give that wash of the channel which was obtained at the mouth of the Mississippi River. General Newton says that you will get too much water. Again he says:

> His system—
>
> Referring to Captain Eads—
> as he announces it, is a violent forcing process, the effect of which he can neither calculate nor foresee.

General Newton goes on to say that if it was with Captain Eads a question of delivering the largest supply of water in a given time, he would be right in his estimates and plans; but that the question of improving the harbor in the manner suggested does not necessitate the obtaining of the greatest scour. And yet gentlemen tell us that they will get no scour; that there is no mode of getting a current or flow by which to scour out the channel. General Newton goes on to say:

> It may be expedient not to obtain the greatest scour, but to regulate the scour so it will be useful, not hurtful.

Mr. BAYNE. That is just it; that is the point.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. But gentlemen asserted that on account of the sluggish current there would be no scour at all. Against that statement I place the report of General Newton and the opinion of the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word as to the expense. The expense of the improvement which has proved so beneficial and valuable at the mouth of the Mississippi River fell short under the direction of Captain Eads of the estimates of the Army engineers.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. HORR. Before you leave this point, I do not understand how you are going to put the pressure on the rear, as you have in the Mississippi River jetty system, whereby you are to get the results according to this theory.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I will explain. At certain periods of the year certain storms prevail, I believe, from northeast to southwest. These storms are violent in their character. Captain Eads proposes in his plan to take advantage of these storms that sweep this great volume of water out with rapidity and violence, and thus to utilize it to scour out the channel, as was done by the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River by utilizing the current of that river.

Mr. REAGAN. Will my friend from Alabama allow me a moment?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. There is another reason why they can get good scouring power there. The Bay of Galveston is very large, some forty miles long, and perhaps on an average more than half as wide as it is long. The Trinity River, the longest river in the State, debouches in it, as also the Buffalo Bayou and the San Jacinto River; and this volume of water must go in and out of the channel to fill and empty the bay, and thus produce a scour of the channel.

Mr. HORR. But as I remember the harbor, Judge, from our examination, this difficult point is away out where they made those mattresses.

Mr. REAGAN. That is true. It extends beyond the point of the island.

Mr. HORR. And how will you get a scour out there?

Mr. REAGAN. By the water, as I have said already, going in and out of that channel to fill and empty the bay.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Now, by means of the jetty system that water during these storms will be confined in the channel and in its ingress and egress made to scour out the obstruction referred to by the gentleman from Michigan. The jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River extend some five miles in length. These jetties at Galveston will extend between ten and eleven miles, which will necessarily make the cost somewhat more than the amount that was expended for the Mississippi River improvement. At the mouth of that river the jetties were made of willow and other trees growing in the bayous, which could be utilized and gathered at little expense. Then when it became necessary to use stone it was transported down the river at a reasonable cost. At Galveston the jetties can not be made with mattresses; they must be built of stone, and on that account will be more expensive, for the reason that the stone must be transported from a distant point by railroad. So, as I have said, the expenditure will be necessarily greater; but whatever it is, Captain Eads is not benefited by it. The work is to be prosecuted by the Government, and he is simply to be employed on a salary.

It is also objected that the bill provides for an enormous expenditure of money. The bill carries only $12,000,000 in round numbers. The river and harbor bill of last session carried about $2,000,000 more than this, and yet it passed both Houses of Congress, received the approval of the President, and was acceptable to the people of the entire country. How, then, can this be said to be extravagant?

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, in view of the immense internal commerce of this country; in view of its population of 60,000,000, extending from ocean to ocean; its 18,000 miles of seacoast, and its more than three hundred rivers and harbors to be improved, I believe a much larger amount than $12,000,000 would not be considered by the country extravagant or enormous. More than fifty years ago, when our population was only 7,000,000 and our revenues amounted to only $14,000,000, John Quincy Adams was in favor of appropriating $5,000,000 for the purposes of internal improvements. These appropriations are wholly beneficial. They are more beneficial than any other made by the Government. The appropriations made for the support of the Army, for the Indians, for pensions, and other objects are consumed in the use and leave no trace behind. Appropriations for the improvement of our great water ways are permanent and continuing. They are like good business investments, paying good dividends to the Government and the people. Like the quality of mercy, they are "twice blessed;" they bless the Government in increased revenues, and they bless the people in cheaper transportation and greater commercial facilities. At this time there is sharp rivalry among nations in the markets of the world. What we need is cheaper water transportation to enable us to compete with other nations in these markets. We need to make our products of the greatest value to the producer and at the same time furnish them at the lowest possible cost to the consumer. Nothing excels water for purposes of cheap transportation. To illustrate this I refer to some remarkable facts stated in a recent issue of the Pittsburgh Dispatch, as follows:

The magnitude of the work which is done in the transportation of coal by our river steamers is strikingly shown by the announcement elsewhere that one of the Pittsburgh boats on the late rise took down the champion tow of coal, amounting to 700,000 bushels. The freight moved by this single steamer was nearly 28,000 tons, or enough to load almost 2,000 cars. In the remarkable fleets which move acres of coal down the river at a single rise, an amount of freight is carried which would employ the constant services of two or three large railways; and the work is done at a cost which would furnish the motive power necessary to carry it half the distance by land. Whatever the shortcomings of our much-maligned river route may be in other respects, there is no doubt that it furnishes a magnificent highway for the carriage of our coal to the South. Without the cheap and vast movements of freight by river, half our coal would be left under ground and the other half would cost down-river consumers double prices.

Many millions of dollars were spent by the General Government to make and improve the magnificent highways referred to. They ought to have been improved even at the great expenditures made—the Ohio, Kanawha, and Monongahela. But, sir, there are other portions of our common country where similar expenditures and similar improvements ought to be made, in order to bring about the splendid and beneficial results enjoyed by people living on the Ohio and Mississippi. The facts here stated furnish the strongest argument in favor of similar improvements in the State I have the honor in part to represent. In Alabama coal and iron are found in greater abundance than in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. They are found in juxtaposition and in close proximity to noble rivers that, with small improvement, will furnish cheap transportation. Reports have recently gone to the country that have been regarded as fabulous in regard to marvelous mineral regions of Alabama. Distinguished members of this House from Eastern States, editors of great Northern journals, and capitalists, have lately visited these regions, and they declare, like the Queen of Sheba, that "the half has not been told."

Already, even with inadequate transportation and the high rates on railroads, coal is shipped from Alabama to Aspinwall and is sold at lower prices than British coal, and iron is sent to Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. A coke furnace on the Coosa River, costing $100,000, turns out one hundred tons of iron a day, which is shipped to Pennsylvania at a freight charge of, say, $5 a ton, and as it is made about $6 a ton cheaper than in Pennsylvania, it is sold at a profit. Now, if the Coosa should be opened up to through navigation from Rome, in Georgia, to Mobile, a distance of seven hundred miles, and it is already navigable, except for a small stretch, there would be a saving of $2 a ton on the transportation, and this would be a saving of $200 a day or $72,000 a year on an investment of the $100,000. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] says "there is no bill coming before Congress that the people of this country scrutinize more jealously than the river and harbor bill. I deny it. Railroad centers, newspapers devoted to the interests of railroads, and certain localities whose rivers and harbors have already been completely improved by the General Government may look upon these bills with jealous scrutiny and hostility; but the people hail them as the most beneficial passed by Congress.

There are 125,000 miles of railroad in this country. They are not like free public highways, open to competition. They are above competition and make combinations to defy it. They make unjust discriminations against the public and are guilty of other abuses. How to control them is a great problem, a problem that is agitating our legislative bodies, and which Congress has been grappling with for ten years. While judicious legislation may accomplish much, the best and most effectual remedy will be found in the competition of the water way, and in improving our natural channels of water communication!

When ice obstructs navigation in northern rivers and lakes, up go railroad freights; when spring returns and the ice disappears, down go railroad freights. The following table, found in the report of Mr. Nimmo, Chief of Bureau of Statistics, for January, 1885, on the relations of railroads to commerce, shows the average freight charges per bushel on transportation of wheat from Chicago to New York during the year 1868 to September 1, 1884, inclusive.

*Including Buffalo transfer charges and tolls.

It was not until about the year 1868 that the managers of the trunk-lines regarded the transportation of grain from Chicago to the seaboard as a source of profitable traffic.

The reduction in the average rates of transportation by lake and canal from 24.54 cents per bushel in 1868 to 6.60 cents per bushel in 1884, in the rates by lake and rail from 29 cents per bushel in 1868 to 9.75 cents per bushel in 1884, and in the "all-rail" rates from 42.6 cents per bushel in 1868 to 13 cents during the year 1884, has been the direct result of the sharp competition which has prevailed between the competing railroads and with the water line formed by the lakes, the Erie Canal, and the Hudson River. This fall of rates has greatly stimulated the development of the agricultural resources of our highly productive Western and Northwestern States, and has tended enormously to increase the wealth of those States.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] showed by reports how a single improvement on a single river had resulted in a saving of 8 cents a bushel on grain exported from Saint Louis by way of New Orleans to Liverpool. When the jetties were completed in 1879 the grain exported from New Orleans to foreign countries amounted to 5,000,000 bushels, and this had been the amount for several years previously. In 1882, three years after, this was increased to 16,000,000 bushels, and Mr. Nimmo declares the increase was largely the result of the jetties. Now, sir, a saving of 8 cents a bushel on this amounts to over $1,000,000. How much was saved on cotton and other exports? I feel warranted in saying this improvement, which cost this Government about $5,000,000, paid for itself in one year in the saving it caused to the Government and the people.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The gentleman has compared this Galveston Harbor to the mouth of the Mississippi, the outer portion of the jetties. I ask him if there is not there very deep water, almost an unfathomable depth?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Two hundred feet.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Whereas at Galveston, all along the seacoast, clear back to Burwick Bay, ninety miles out, it is shallow, from ten to twenty feet in depth. And will not the jetty have to be extended many miles to overcome this?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. What the gentleman from Kentucky states is very true; but Captain Eads states frankly how he expects to overcome that difficulty. He expects by this heroic process, by this use of the current and the scour, to carry the sand to a distance where it will be dispersed by littoral currents.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him how deep do you go with your stone bed?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] can answer that question.

Mr. REAGAN. About thirteen feet.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. With all respect to the kindness of the gentleman from Alabama who has permitted me to occupy the last ten minutes of his time, I am not unmindful of the fact that too much time has been occupied by members of the committee in talking upon this bill. I willingly therefore give my friend from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] an opportunity of being heard, he not being a member of the committee.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the extended discussion of this bill and must admit I am puzzled when I attempt to understand how gentlemen living along the great thoroughfares of the country, made great thoroughfares by magnificent gifts of public lands, and enjoying all the advantages of great markets, made great markets by unstinted appropriations for the rivers and harbors on which they lie, can raise their voices against the appropriation for Galveston Harbor. I do not believe any of these gentlemen intend to be unfair. I would rather believe, and do believe, that some of them who have expressed themselves as being so near to being in favor of the improvement, need only to be located in that country to be entirely in favor of it. Their locality would then bring more vividly to their minds the importance of this work. They would then behold a vast country stretching to the east, the north, and to the west, greater in extent than the States of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, inhabited by millions of their fellow-countrymen; rich in minerals, rich in soil; the great center of animal industry of the United States, with thousands of ship-loads of wool, cotton, corn, wheat, and various other products of the country, much of which is rotting in storehouses and bins because it is too cheap in the markets to bear shipping over the long lines of railroads leading to the East.

They would behold this rich storehouse, this American Egypt, lying around and in easy access of a beautiful bay that needs only the generous action of the Government that has been bestowed on all others of importance throughout the land to make it one of the most useful harbors in all the world. Useful, I say, not only to the persons inhabiting that country, but equally useful to the millions of people inhabiting the Atlantic States in throwing down at their doors cheap wheat, cheap corn, cheap beef, cheap pork, cheap cotton, and many other things which enter into the daily demands of the poor as well as of the rich, and feed the thousands who spend their lives amid the hum of mechanical industry, as well as to furnish material to start the looms and factories which give employment to willing hands.

It is not local so far as the benefits are concerned, nor is it local when considered in connection with the grand system of harbor improvements which it becomes our interest as a thrifty people to make, and which I believe the good people of this nation desire that we should make. It is in the great line of thrift and prosperity and peace. It has none of the ugly murmurings of war in it. It is a work in which the peaceful Quaker and the gallant captain can alike take pride. The merchant will regard it as a harbinger of good times. The farmer will look upon it as repairing the nation's great gateway. He knows that the farm that is characterized by its fallen-down fences and brier-patches and choked-up roads is regarded as the home of a shiftless kind of fellow, and he knows also that a nation that is distinguished for its choked-up harbors while millions of its wealth lie rotting for want of a place to load it into ships must be regarded as a shiftless kind of people.

No one can regard the refusal of this appropriation as economy, and every thoughtful man must see in its refusal the worst of extravagance. We hear it said, however, by the opponents of this improvement that the harbors are not used when they are improved, and we are pointed to New Orleans as an example. It is true that the shipments from that place after the completion of the jetties was not so great as many desired; but it should be borne in mind that new routes of transportation are not adopted in a day even when the greatest advantages are offered. Shippers from force of habit alone are slow to make a change, and in the case of New Orleans, that route has been until recently regarded only as temporary, many believing, as did the United States Corps of Engineers, that the jetties would prove to be a failure.

Their success, however, is now assured, and shippers in reach of that point will soon begin to look in that direction as the cheapest and most practical way to reach the markets of the East and of the world. That improvement and other water-way improvements have already had the effect of cutting down the charges for transportation of freights by railway, and the accomplishment of that end alone at Galveston would pay the people and the Government in the course of time for all it would cost to make the improvement, though not a single ship-load should ever leave the harbor.

We need competition as well as capacity—not so much a new railroad for competition, for that would be but adding one more railroad to the pooling system against the people. We want water competition, a kind of competition railroads so far have been unable to control.

I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] in his able remarks last Saturday to say he would be in favor of a reasonable amount to improve this harbor, though he fails to tell us what he regards as reasonable. He mentioned the Mississippi jetties, but I do not think he referred to them as unreasonable in cost; on the contrary, his discourse led me to believe he thought them reasonable, though I can not give his language on that point. They cost $5,340,000. The jetties at Galveston, according to Mr. Eads's statement, are to be more than twice as long and are to cost $7,750,000, or about 50 per cent. less, according to length, than the Mississippi jetties. Now, if the former is reasonable, certainly the latter must be also. This $7,750,000, however, is not to be voted to Captain Eads; it is nothing more than his estimate, and if voted at all is to be voted to the Secretary of War, Captain Eads drawing from it only his salary of $5,000 a year and an additional $3,000 for each additional foot, not one cent of which $3,000 is to be paid until twenty-five feet of navigable depth of water is obtained through the channel.

The gentleman from Illinois does not seem to think the work can be done cheaper, nor do we infer that he thinks it ought not to be done at all. He only appears to be repelled by the vast sum of money required. It is indeed great when compared with the average wealth of individuals, but it is no more to the Government than the cost of building an ordinary culvert across a bad place in the road would be to a person of average wealth, and I might add ought to be regarded in the same light that we do ordinary improvements of public highways.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] expressed himself as being in favor of an appropriation of five or six millions of dollars, but he did not like Captain Eads's plan; yet he dwelt vehemently upon the point that Captain Eads had no plans, and before voting the appropriation he demanded some. I am unable to reconcile that gentleman's two positions, unless he meant by the latter that he had no plans and specifications submitted as ordinarily is done in contracts.

But Captain Eads is not a contractor in this case. The work is under the Secretary of War, with Captain Eads as a hired engineer, receiving a stipulated sum per year and a certain amount conditionally for preparing the plans, specifications, and estimates, and making the necessary recommendations therefor, and exercising general supervision during the progress of the work.

The only extraordinary power granted to Captain Eads is that the work is to be constructed according to his plans and specifications. This is reasonable enough when considered in connection with the fact that the greater part of his pay is conditioned upon the success of the undertaking. "No cure, no pay" necessarily implies obedience to the doctor.

But this extraordinary power granted him does not make a contractor of him in any sense of the word. When engaged, if at all, he will be an employé of the Government; and no work in the way of plans and specifications or other service can reasonably be expected of him until he is employed. The gentleman from Illinois dwells with emphasis upon his statement that the whole thing is to be based on faith in Captain Eads. That is true to some extent, yet Captain Eads does not hesitate in placing his chance for getting the larger part of his pay on the same kind of faith. Faith, after all, must have much to do with the undertaking.

Plans and specifications, if submitted by Captain Eads, would have to be accepted on faith in him, as I understand that none of his plans are in accordance with the theories of the United States Corps of Engineers, and would most likely be met by those gentlemen with objections that would prove as groundless as did their statement that the extension of the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi by reason of the advance of the bar would cost a million dollars a year, while the facts are that during the five years since that work was completed it has not been necessary to spend one nickel in that way, and it is not likely that it will become necessary to advance the jetties one foot in a century.

What have you to rely upon in any of these improvements, when the plans and specifications are submitted by the United States Corps of Engineers, but faith in them? It was by faith in them that already a million of dollars have been sunk in Galveston Bay, and, I may add, without the least prospect whatever of the work that has been done amounting to anything except to be in the way when proper plans to improve the harbor are fixed upon.

Faith in Captain Eads ought to govern us to a great extent in making this appropriation and employing him to prepare plans and specifications and to superintend the work.

The great works he has already accomplished inspire me with faith in him. The plain and common-sense manner he has of doing things inspires me with faith in him. He has no finely-spun theories submitted in stilted language to daze poor creatures, but he proceeds on the plain common-sense principle that running water confined in a narrow channel will wash out the bottom and thus make it deeper, and that if the channel extend sufficiently far into the sea the material washed out, as well as that carried down by the current, will be carried out to where the water is perhaps a thousand feet deep before it finds a lodgment, and that it would be like filling up the sea itself to form a bar out there. I do not speak for Captain Eads; this is only my understanding of the jetty system.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] objects to this system because it is upon the damming-up principle, and that it would cause a deposit of sediment above the jetties and raise the bed of the river. Quite the contrary, by actual measurement, has been proven to be the fact, the bed of the river above the jetties having been lowered one foot; and therefore his theory of damming up the Mississippi and turning it into the Atchafalaya is without foundation.

The gentleman has printed in the RECORD an amount of testimony to establish the fact of the superior education of the members of the United States Corps of Engineers. This was not at all necessary. No one doubts their superior education, and no one would, I dare say, cast an unjust reflection upon them. So far as education and the accepted theories of engineering go, they have perhaps no superiors in the world.

But these facts ought not to be allowed in the least to detract from the common-sense principles of Captain Eads. The work he accomplished at the mouth of the Mississippi is worth more in the eyes of the people than the diplomas from all the scientific schools in the world. The plain Western colonel (Bailey, I believe, was his name) who solved the question of getting the gunboats over the rapids at Alexandria on the Red River, and saved a fleet of naval vessels, used no sextant, no compass, no theodolite. He and his men just loaded themselves with brush and logs and rock, and waded into the river and threw them down, damming the river from both sides until the water was raised sufficiently high to let the gunboats pass through a place left in the middle of the river. Captain Eads, I understand, is an educated man, but I dare say he depends more on common-sense principles as manifested by this Western colonel than he does upon his collegiate diplomas. That is the kind of man we want at Galveston, Mr. Chairman. We want some one who, if it should be necessary, can shut up the books and take a common-sense view of the situation, and not disdain the long-established fact that water will run down hill and cut a channel in doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed by order of the House for general debate.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand several gentlemen desire leave to print remarks on this bill in the RECORD. I ask that general leave be granted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Provided it shall not apply to the tariff and all other questions.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course that is understood.

The CHAIRMAN. There can be no limit placed to the leave, if granted, except each gentleman's idea of propriety. Is there objection to the leave requested? The Chair hears none. General leave is given to print remarks in the RECORD on the subject of this bill. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill, as follows:

That the following sums of money be, and are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of the public works hereinafter named.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move to strike out the last word. I make that motion, not because I expect there is to be more discussion to-night with regard to the bill, but for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the actual situation of this discussion as it has turned out under the order of the House.

There is in this bill the continuation of a scheme for the expenditure of $150,000,000, and the only man who has had an opportunity to express himself upon that subject, after having carefully examined it, has been able under the action of the House to get but ten minutes of time. All of the time for the discussion of this bill, except what is going to take place under the five-minute rule, has by the judicious action of members of this Committee on Rivers and Harbors been absorbed and controlled by themselves in favor of the bill, and no opportunity thus far has been given for criticism of the same; nor under the action of the House can any opportunity be given except in a disjointed five-minute way. And yet this bill contains in it for one single item the continuation of one improvement which will amount to $150,000,000, and involves 1,080 miles of river.

Now, I want the House to understand precisely what the effect of this action has been in the matter of the discussion of the question which is before it. It seems to me that such a method is not going to give to us that full idea of this bill which we ought to have. With the exception of the ten minutes' discussion on the part of the gentlemen from Iowa and Wisconsin we have had nothing. But we have had one exception, to which also I wish to call the attention of the House, and that is, members of the committee have shown to us clearly, if they be right, that the members of the Engineer Corps who advised upon these subjects are pretty sure to be wrong when they come in contact with the opinions of the committee. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES] have proved very conclusively, if their argument is to end it, that the engineers do not understand anything about a harbor of refuge on the Atlantic coast or anything about digging up a harbor on the coast of Texas, and yet, with the exception of those two items and one or two others, this whole bill is made up on the recommendation of the engineers.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not know really but what we ought to thank the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for having even given us leave to print.

Coming from the city of Saint Louis, the principal city of the Mississippi Valley, I naturally imagined that the views of a member from that section, and especially one who has unfalteringly supported the river and harbor bills of the past, might have been treated with some little courtesy. I requested of the chairman of that committee the privilege of coming before the committee and sparing the House this infliction. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I apologize.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. You ought to apologize. [Continued laughter.] Which privilege was also refused every other member. The committee monopolized all the time allowed for debate, including a small portion of the time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], who, after having generously promised to give me a portion of the time remaining to himself, took back his promise and gave it to the House this morning, so that my only recourse is left in this mode of a disjointed narrative by offering amendments to this bill in a formal way of moving to strike out the last word. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I propose at every stage of this proceeding to continue offering amendments until my views in regard to river improvement are impressed upon this House, as far as I can impress them. I have that right under the rules, and, fortunately, I have a disposition that will see that my rights in that respect are preserved. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the people of the Mississippi Valley, at every convention and through every newspaper, appeal to every member of Congress to do something for the improvement of the great Mississippi River, that grand artery of commerce that bears upon its bosom the commerce of millions of people, and in whose valley are to be located the hundreds of millions of the future. That river, sir, so far as concerns improvements of a permanent and valuable character, terminates at the point where it meets the Ohio, where the firm banks cease and you strike this alluvial bed that is subject to these little breaks and misunderstandings, and the improvement of which, I believe, its best friends admit is merely an experiment. Yet out of these millions proposed to be appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi, the portion of that river from its junction with the Ohio to its source gets only the insignificant sum of $600,000. Now, my friends, that is not "a fair share of the pork." [Laughter.] That is not enough.

If the Mississippi River has got to carry through every year these hundreds of creeks and bayous, be a little more liberal. Give us a little more. I do not suppose that any member of this House believes for a moment that I would oppose a bill merely on account of its size. [Laughter.] I have endeavored to make a consistent record here, and have voted for every bill that would aid in developing our country and give employment to labor. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors (who, I observe, is about to go into executive session with his colleague) [laughter] to a remarkable fact, which is, that I am clearly of the opinion that if that committee had allowed me to come before them they would have realized that they did not comprehend the whole of this question. [Laughter.] I am certain of it. Now, is the gentleman aware of how long it will take to complete the work of improving the channel of the Mississippi between the Illinois and the Ohio—and it is the obstructions in that part of the river that are to-day the main obstacle in the way of river improvement.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word; and now, for the sake of getting some light on this important subject of river improvement, I yield my time to my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I thank the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us have a common-sense talk on this bill, even if it is only for five minutes. [Laughter.] Every sane man who favors the improvement of the Mississippi wants the river improved so that modern-built vessels, which carry fifty thousand or sixty thousand bushels of grain, and draw seven or eight feet of water, can go down to the sea through a free and unobstructed channel. The object of river improvement is simply this: that at the low stage of the river you can have your commerce go unimpeded to the sea. If you work down to a point where you find a shoal beyond which you can not go, no matter how deep may be the other parts of the channel, until that shoal is removed the rest of your work is, comparatively speaking, valueless; and, therefore, until the last shoal in the channel is removed your work of river improvement is merely local and of no benefit to the country at large.

Now, sir, between the mouth of the Illinois and the mouth of the Ohio, a distance of less than two hundred miles, are grouped the most serious obstructions in the channel of the river, the most serious obstructions to the commerce of the Mississippi Valley. The engineers who have carefully examined into this matter, state that it will take at least $10,000,000 to remove those obstructions and furnish a uniform depth of eight feet of water, which is required for the passage of barges carrying 50,000 bushels of grain. That being so, with your miserable, beggarly $400,000 a year for the improvement of that part of the river, how many years do you think it will be before you can have the benefit of deep water there? Just figure it out. [Laughter.] We are supposed to be legislating for this generation and not for posterity—at least not in the matter of river improvements.

Mr. MCADOO. "Posterity never did anything for us."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No; as my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] suggests, posterity has never done anything for us; and the question with him is whether he is going to do anything for posterity. [Great laughter.]

Mr. MCADOO. I hope my friend——

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I will yield if my friend rises to a personal explanation. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, would it not be a little more sensible for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to come in and say to this House: Gentlemen, between the source of the Mississippi River and a certain point, with certain appropriations, within a certain brief period of time, we can complete the work of improvement there? For instance, between the mouth of the Illinois and the mouth of the Ohio River we can, with proper appropriations, within four years complete the improvement of the channel of the river so as to give the people the benefit of cheap transportation. It seems to me that that would be a more sensible course, but the committee do not do that. They scatter these appropriations, like the grace of the Almighty, all over the country, in the hope that, by giving the $5,000 here and there for the improvement of the Suwanee and similar rivers, they can secure the votes of the gentlemen from those localities for this bill.

That is the principle of this bill; and you may recollect that at the commencement of the last session of Congress, when I was a little more "verdant" than I am now, I very innocently suggested the idea of having a separate and distinct Mississippi River bill, my object being that this great artery of commerce, with its navigable tributaries, should be properly considered, and not made the vehicle of dragging through this House a combination of creeks or insignificant streams. This is not legislation. It has been marvelous to me that men selected out of every walk of life, who have made their private enterprises a success, can apply so little common sense when dealing with the affairs of the people. [Applause.] Let us begin now. I do not object, as I have told my friend from Kentucky, to appropriations for these little streams; we can stand that; but I want him to understand for one that unless he and his committee and this House will agree to a proper recognition of the Father of Waters, and thereby this bill should lack sufficient merit to justify its passage, the blame will not rest upon me or those who hold similar views. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I have no wish to detain the committee. In reply to the statement of my friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL], it is only necessary for me to say in one word that upon the reach of the river referred to by him the committee has allowed the same percentage as upon the other reaches of the river.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I rise to a question of order. I understood that during the remainder of the discussion the time was to be occupied not by members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but by other members of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recognize that as a point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. By the last appropriation bill—and I speak seriously to gentlemen who are engaged in serious business—the sum of $520,000 was appropriated for that portion of the river which has its advocate in my friend from Saint Louis. Of that appropriation the whole sum expended is $135,000; in other words, there was appropriated more than could be judiciously expended. The committee think, therefore, that they have been reasonably just to that part of the river; and they are fortified in this conclusion by the fact that it had three very intelligent members upon the committee.

I do not wish to detain the Committee of the Whole further. In view of the necessity of expediting this bill in the short time allowed, I have been urged by a number of gentlemen to ask for a session of the House to-night. I have declined to do so because of the fatigue of members after the prolonged session of last night. But I hope that to-morrow it will be the pleasure of the House to take a recess, with the understanding that if at the evening session any item of the bill be objected to by three or five members it be passed over. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2600) for the relief of the Woonsocket National Bank of Woonsocket, R. I.

HENRY NEAL.

Mr. PEEL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Henry Neal, for services as messenger in the Speaker's room, the difference between the pay of a laborer received by him and that of a messenger, from the 1st day of December, 1883, to the 7th day of July, 1884, and from the 1st day of December, 1884, to the 4th day of March, 1885—ten months and seven days—at the rate of $40 per month, $409.30.

GENERAL U. S. GRANT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, ordered to be printed, and, on motion of Mr. WASHBURN, by unanimous consent, ordered to be printed, with the accompanying documents, in the RECORD:

To the House of Representatives:

I take especial pleasure in laying before Congress the generous offer made by Mrs. Grant to give to the Government, in perpetual trust, the swords and military (and civil) testimonials lately belonging to General Grant. A copy of the deed of trust, and of a letter addressed to me by Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, which I transmit herewith, will explain the nature and motives of this offer.

Appreciation of General Grant's achievements and recognition of his just fame have in part taken the shape of numerous mementoes and gifts, which, while dear to him, possess for the nation an exceptional interest. These relics, of great historical value, have passed into the hands of another whose considerate action has restored the collection to Mrs. Grant as a life-trust, on the condition that at the death of General Grant, or sooner at Mrs. Grant's option, it should become the property of the Government, as set forth in the accompanying papers. In the exercise of the option thus given her Mrs. Grant elects that the trust shall forthwith determine, and asks that the Government designate a suitable place of deposit and a responsible custodian for the collection.

The nature of this gift and the value of the relics which the generosity of a private citizen, joined to the high sense of public regard which animates Mrs. Grant, have thus placed at the disposal of the Government, demand full and signal recognition on behalf of the nation at the hands of its representatives. I therefore ask Congress to take suitable action to accept the trust and to provide for its secure custody, at the same time recording the appreciative gratitude of the people of the United States to the donors.

In this connection I may pertinently advert to the pending legislation of the Senate and House of Representatives looking to a national recognition of General Grant's eminent services by providing the means for his restoration to the Army on the retired-list. That Congress, by taking such action, will give expression to the almost universal desire of the people of this nation is evident, and I earnestly urge the passage of an act similar to Senate bill No. 2530, which, while not interfering with the constitutional prerogative of appointment, will enable the President in his discretion to nominate General Grant as General upon the retired-list.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 3, 1885.

640 FIFTH AVENUE, January 20, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I purchased the articles of historical interest belonging to General Grant and gave them to Mrs. Grant in trust, to hold during the lifetime of the General, and at his death, or sooner, at her option, they to become the property of the Government. They consist of his swords, memorials of his victories from the United States, States, and cities, and tributes to his fame and achievements from governments all over the world. In their proper place at Washington they will always be secure, and will afford pleasure and instruction to succeeding generations. This trust has been accepted by Mrs. Grant, and the disposition of the articles is in conformity to the wishes of the General. I transmit to you herewith the deed of trust. Mrs. Grant informs me that she prefers to close the trust at once, and send the memorials to Washington. May I ask, therefore, that you will designate some official representing the proper department to receive them, and direct him to notify Mrs. Grant of the arrangements necessary to perfect the transfer and deposit in such of the Government buildings as may be most suitable?

Yours, respectfully,

W. H. VANDERBILT.

His Excellency CHESTER A. ARTHUR,
President of the United States.

Whereas I, William H. Vanderbilt, of the city of New York, by virtue of a sale made under a judgment in a suit to foreclose a chattel mortgage in the supreme court of this State, in which I was plaintiff and Ulysses S. Grant defendant, which judgment was entered on the 6th day of December, 1884, and under an execution in another suit in said court between the same parties upon a judgment entered December 9, 1884, have become the owner of the property and the articles described in the schedule hereto annexed, formerly the property of Ulysses S. Grant:

Now, therefore, to carry out a purpose formed by me, and in consideration of $1 to me paid, I do hereby transfer and convey each and every one of the articles mentioned and itemized in the said schedule to Julia Dent Grant, to have and to hold the same to her, her executors and administrators, upon the trust and agreement nevertheless hereby accepted and made by her that upon the death of the said Ulysses S. Grant, or previously thereto at her or their option, the same shall become and be the property of the nation, and shall be taken to Washington and transferred and conveyed by her and them to the United States of America.

In witness whereof the said William H. Vanderbilt and Julia Dent Grant have executed these presents this 10th day of January, A. D. 1885.

Sealed and delivered in presence of—

W. H. VANDERBILT.

CORRECTION OF CLERICAL ERROR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following letter from the Secretary of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 2, 1885.

SIR: In my communication, dated January 30, in answer to the resolution of the House relative to the Tallapoosa, I desire to correct a clerical error.

For the words and figures "August 19," in the second paragraph, the words and figures "July 19" should be substituted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PROPERTY IN POSSESSION OF THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House, transmitting report of property in his possession belonging to the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KELLOGG, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for eight days from Thursday, February 5.

G. T. M. ENGLISH.

On motion of Mr. LORE, by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7760) for the relief of G. T. M. English; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INCREASE OF POLICE FORCE AT INAUGURATION.

On motion of Mr. FOLLETT, by unanimous consent the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table for present consideration.

Mr. FOLLETT moved to non-concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. We should have some explanation what the amendments are.

Mr. FOLLETT. The bill as it went from the House appropriated $6,000. The Senate increased that to $8,000. The House made provision for this appropriation being made as other appropriations for the District of Columbia, one half out of the District funds and the other half out of the Treasury. The Senate amendment makes it all payable out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. And that is right.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I move that the Senate amendments be concurred in, and I desire to say that this inauguration business is not ordinary business. I think, therefore, we should concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. FOLLETT. I desire to make this simple statement: Four years ago the appropriation was made as the House made it, one half payable out of the funds of the District and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States, as other appropriations are made for the District under the rule.

And I wish to say still further that the benefit resulting from the large attendance of people in the city of Washington on that occasion is more in the interest of the people here than it is in the interest of the Government.

The motion of Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, was not agreed to.

The amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in.

Mr. FOLLETT moved that a committee of conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. FOLLETT, Mr. HUTCHINS, and Mr. CANNON.

AARON GELD.

Mr. WOLFORD, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4869) for the relief of Aaron Geld; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. MILLS (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BINGHAM: Resolutions of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, favoring the enactment of a national bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. BAGLEY: Of citizens of Schoharie County, of Greene County, and of Ulster County, New York.

By Mr. BAYNE: Of ex-soldiers of Allegheny County, of Pittsburgh, and of Bakerstown, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Of honorably discharged soldiers of Philadelphia, Pa.

By Mr. BOYLE: Of citizens of New Haven, Fayette County, and of Fayette City, Fayette County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. EVERHART: Of citizens of Oxford, Chester County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. GEDDES: Of George M. Endley and 57 others, citizens of Mansfield, and of G. W. Shurtleff and 123 others, citizens of Lorain County, Ohio.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Of 175 citizens of Leon, Decatur County; of William Butler and 50 others, citizens of Quincy, Adams County, and of J. B. Morrison and 50 others, citizens of Unionville, Appanoose County, Iowa.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Of Charles E. Burroughs and 65 others, citizens of Ripley County; of Alexander W. Lee and 91 others, citizens of Franklin County, and of Samuel Ward and 36 others, citizens of Ripley County, Indiana.

By Mr. KLEINER: Of ex-soldiers of Reno, Ind.

By Mr. LACEY: Of William Edwins and 27 others, of Sunfield, Mich.

By Mr. PUSEY: Of 60 citizens of Shelby County and of 190 citizens of Harrison County, Iowa.

By Mr. RYAN: Of 2,523 citizens of the State of Kansas.

By Mr. ROWELL: Of 115 citizens of Monticello; of 41 citizens of Middletown; of 146 citizens of Farmer City; of 47 citizens of Chenoa, and of 47 citizens of Gridley, Ill.

By Mr. SENEY: Of L. S. Lafferty and 128 others, citizens of Hancock County, Ohio.

By Mr. SHIVELY: Of David Brown and 77 others, citizens of Leesburg, Ind.

By Mr. H. Y. SMITH: Of 39 citizens of Lacona, and of 60 citizens of Indianola, Warren County, Iowa.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Of Fred. Barrett, and 75 others, citizens of Medford, Taylor County; of W. J. Brown and 91 others, citizens of Marion, Waupaca County, and of G. J. Jackson and 62 others, citizens of Centralia, Wood County, Wisconsin.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Of C. P. Lyman and 86 others, citizens of Trumbull County, Ohio, and of B. Herrick and 76 others, citizens of Perry, Lake County, Ohio.

By Mr. THOMAS: Of 64 citizens of Massac County; of 167 citizens of Jackson County; of 64 citizens of Johnson County; of 90 citizens of Pulaski County, and of 62 citizens of New Burnside, Ill.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 4, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs to ask unanimous consent that he may invite upon the floor of the Senate the chief justice of the Dominion of Canada, who is present in the gallery. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

TESTIMONIALS TO ULYSSES S. GRANT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I take especial pleasure in laying before Congress the generous offer made by Mrs. Grant, to give to the Government, in perpetual trust, the swords and military (and civil) testimonials lately belonging to General Grant. A copy of the deed of trust, and of a letter addressed to me by Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, which I transmit herewith, will explain the nature and motives of this offer.

Appreciation of General Grant's achievements and recognition of his just fame have in part taken the shape of numerous mementoes and gifts, which, while dear to him, possess for the nation an exceptional interest. These relics, of great historical value, have passed into the hands of another, whose considerate action has restored the collection to Mrs. Grant as a life-trust, on the condition that at the death of General Grant, or sooner at Mrs. Grant's option, it should become the property of the Government, as set forth in the accompanying papers. In the exercise of the option thus given her Mrs. Grant elects that the trust shall forthwith determine, and asks that the Government designate a suitable place of deposit and a responsible custodian for the collection.

The nature of this gift and the value of the relics which the generosity of a private citizen, joined to the high sense of public regard which animates Mrs. Grant, have thus placed at the disposal of the Government, demand full and signal recognition on behalf of the nation at the hands of its representatives. I therefore ask Congress to take suitable action to accept the trust and to provide for its secure custody, at the same time recording the appreciative gratitude of the people of the United States to the donors.

In this connection I may pertinently advert to the pending legislation of the Senate and House of Representatives looking to a national recognition of General Grant's eminent services by providing the means for his restoration to the Army on the retired-list. That Congress, by taking such action, will give expression to the almost universal desire of the people of this nation is evident, and I earnestly urge the passage of an act similar to Senate bill No. 2530, which, while not interfering with the constitutional prerogative of appointment, will enable the President in his discretion to nominate General Grant as General upon the retired-list.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 3, 1885.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 327) providing for printing the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John H. Evins, late a Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress from the State of South Carolina, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The bill (H. R. 7163) to regulate the forms of bills of lading and the duties and liabilities of ship-owners and others, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the petition of sundry citizens of Kansas, praying for the passage of the bill heretofore introduced to open what are known as the Oklahoma lands, in the Indian Territory, to settlement, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I hope now that it seems to be settled that something should be done in reference to these lands, the committee will be able to devise some plan presently whereby they can be opened to settlement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN presented a petition of captains, vessel-owners, and others engaged in navigating the Potomac River, praying that the draw of the Long Bridge over that river be opened upon proper signals to vessels plying between Washington and Georgetown; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Ohio; a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Tennessee; a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Wayne County, West Virginia; a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Ohio; a petition of citizens of Illinois; a petition of ex-Union soldiers of California, and a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Illinois, praying that Congress enact a law granting one hundred and sixty acres of land to every honorably discharged ex-Union soldier; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Illinois, a petition of citizens of Iowa, and a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Kansas, praying for general legislation favorable to the soldiers of the late war; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of William H. McLean, of Flora, Ill., late master of the United States war schooner James S. Chambers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill., indorsing and approving the Potter refunding bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Rock Island, Ill., and a memorial of cigar-makers of Danville, Ill., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying that the United States shall acquire the title to the two canals connecting Portage Lake, in the State of Michigan, with Lake Superior on the east and west; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Marcoma Edge Tool Company, of Lebanon, N. H., praying legislation amendatory of the law relating to drawbacks on articles made of foreign material from foreign markets, on account of the disastrous effect the present law has upon the export trade of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition signed by quite a number of citizens of the United States, in which they state that—

In several of the States, among which are South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Ohio, and some other States, the charge has been made that many of the citizens have been for a series of years, and during the late election for President and Vice-President, kept away from the polls by threats and acts of violence and bloodshed, a system of ruffianism unrebuked by the governments of some of the aforesaid States.

The petition also sets forth other grievances relating to an interference with the free suffrage of citizens, and praying for certain remedies. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, January 29, 1885.

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be respectfully requested to urge the passage of the appropriation of $300,000, to aid in the construction of the Michigan and Mississippi (Hennepin) Canal, in the river and harbor bill now before Congress.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
January 29, 1885.

The foregoing resolution was duly passed.
By order of the senate.

C. A. CHICKERING, Clerk.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
January 29, 1885.

The foregoing resolution was duly passed.
By order of the assembly.

JOHN W. VROOMAN, Clerk.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Abby Hopper Gibbon, president, and Anna Rice Powell, secretary, of the New York committee for the prevention of State regulation of vice, praying that the power of the National Board of Health be more clearly defined, and that it may not legalize social vice; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes. The bill is accompanied by a written report, and I give notice that at an early day I shall call it up for action.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2429) for the relief of Moses M. Bane, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Susan W. Goode, of Marshall County, Mississippi, praying payment for stores and supplies taken and used by United States troops in 1862 and 1863, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the prayer of the petition denied.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary D. Hamilton, Frances A. Hamilton, Mrs. L. M. McKinney, and J. D. Hamilton, praying pay for property taken and used for the benefit of the United States Army in 1862, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the prayer of the petition denied.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 948) for the relief of John M. Dorsey and William F. Shepard, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

CREDENTIALS OF W. M. EVARTS.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of William M. Evarts, as Senator-elect from the State of New York, to submit a report, which I desire to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of William M. Evarts as a Senator elected from the State of New York for six years from the 4th day of March, 1885, have considered the same and report:

The papers referred to the committee seem to be transcripts of the records of the proceedings of the two houses of the General Assembly of the State of New York, on the occasion of the election of a Senator for the aforesaid term, authenticated by their presiding and recording officers. Such transcript is not required by the law of the United States to be furnished to the Senate as evidence of the due election of a Senator.

On the other hand, the document is not signed by the executive of the State or countersigned by the secretary of state. This is expressly required by the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 2, chapter 1, sections 18 and 19.

We are of opinion that the credentials are defective, and recommend that they lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the credentials should lie upon the table, in accordance with the recommendation of the committee, and I have no doubt the defect in them will be supplied before the beginning of the constitutional term for which the gentleman is said to have been elected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the credentials will be laid upon the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 2612) granting a pension to Ellen May Brown; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2613) for the relief of the Atlantic Works; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2614) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay, George M. Clapp, George W. Lawrance, Snowden & Mason, and the executors of Donald McKay; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

LAND TITLES IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. HILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish to the Senate copies of the reports of F. D. Hobbs and A. R. Green, inspectors of the General Land Office, on the subject of the fraudulent acquisition of title to lands in New Mexico, and of all testimony accompanying the same, and also copies of all papers on file in the Interior Department relating to this subject.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to report to the Senate why in the document prepared in his Department, containing a documentary history of the railway mail service, transmitted to the Senate on January 21, 1885, in response to a resolution of the Senate of January 19, 1885, a paragraph on pages 10 and 11 of such document, beginning with the words, "Mr. Davis's claim of priority therefore seems to be valid so far as traveling post-offices in the United States are concerned," and ending with the words, "From this standpoint Mr. Davis is granted the claim of first experiment, and Mr. Armstrong the claim of general application," was stricken out by lines drawn across the same, and whether the paragraph so stricken out is not a true statement of facts.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. On the 19th of January the Senate passed a resolution directing the Postmaster-General to communicate to the Senate a document prepared in his Department containing a documentary history of the railway mail service from its origin in 1834 to the present time. That document has been communicated to the Senate. I believe it was first referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and then referred to the Committee on Printing. In the document, on pages 10 and 11, are the words referred to in the resolution. The paragraph reads as follows:

Mr. Davis's claim of priority therefore seems to be valid so far as traveling post-offices in the United States are concerned, and the claim of Mr. Armstrong must be confined rather to the fact that he inaugurated a general system by which this method of distribution was gradually extended over all the leading lines in the country. From this standpoint Mr. Davis is granted the claim of first experiment and Mr. Armstrong the claim of general application.

In the report lines are drawn across the words I have indicated. I state that the words in the paragraph which have been stricken out of that report contain the facts in the case established beyond all reasonable doubt. I state further that there was in the Post-Office Department documentary evidence to establish those facts beyond all question.

I now have in my possession the documentary evidence, and I present it to the Senate, as it has not been furnished from the Post-Office Department, in connection with the resolution I have submitted. I ask that this documentary evidence be referred to the Committee on Printing, in order that it may be printed with the other evidence which has already been submitted by the Post-Office Department; and I ask the Committee on Printing to delay any action upon the documents before them until we can have a report from the Postmaster-General in regard to the erased paragraph.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the resolution may be read again for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the consideration of the resolution, the Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that certain papers the nature of which he has described be received and referred to the Committee on Printing. That order will be entered, if there be no objection. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if the information he desires could not have been obtained by a private note addressed to the Postmaster-General without calling the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought it a matter of propriety and right that the Postmaster-General, who probably never saw the report at all, might have an opportunity of explaining it to the Senate as a matter of justice to him. Therefore I introduced the resolution, for I have no idea that he saw the document.

Mr. HOAR. I should suppose that it would be more convenient, in the ordinary transaction of public business, that the question as to the particular reason for inserting certain lines in a report, which had attracted the attention of any Senator, should be ascertained by private inquiry. It could be done; but I make no objection to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COASTERS' HARBOR ISLAND.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to report to the Senate what, if any, steps have been taken to establish an advanced course of instruction of naval officers at Coasters' Harbor Island, Rhode Island, and the reasons which have controlled the action of the Department.

ALLEGED POTOMAC LAND-PATENT.

Mr. ALDRICH. I offer the following resolution for reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether any proceedings of a legal nature have been taken to annul a certain United States land-patent claimed to have been granted to a portion of the Potomac River bottom opposite the city of Washington, and which the Government has been improving since 1882; whether the interests of the United States are likely to suffer by raising that portion above tide-level before said patent shall have been annulled; and what legislation, if any, is necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States in this matter; and for this purpose said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths and take such testimony as may be necessary.

Mr. RANSOM. I have no objection whatever to the resolution being referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. There is, however, as the Senator from Rhode Island doubtless knows, a special committee with reference to the Potomac Flats.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the resolution going to the special committee or the Committee on the Judiciary. It is quite immaterial to me to which committee it is referred.

Mr. RANSOM. I have no wish whatever in the matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have none. If it comes within the jurisdiction of the special committee I certainly should be quite willing that the resolution should go to that committee.

Mr. RANSOM. If I may be at liberty to do so, I will state that the Attorney-General informs me that he has directed suit to be brought to do away with this alleged patent.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a matter of considerable importance, and should receive the attention of some committee at an early day. I have no objection to the resolution going to the special committee.

Mr. RANSOM. I think I should prefer that it should not be referred to that committee. I prefer that it should go either to the Committee on the District of Columbia or to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am inclined to think upon further consideration that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRIS. I had just risen to make that suggestion. I think it properly belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary and had better go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Rhode Island to modify his motion.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir; I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Mr. CONGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas those members of the Pottawatomie Nation of Indians residing in the States of Indiana and Michigan claim that there is due them by virtue of treaties made with the said nation considerable sums of money:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to examine into said claims and ascertain what, if any, amounts are due said Indians; said claims being those set forth in the memorial contained in House Miscellaneous Document No. 8 of the Forty-fifth Congress, second session.

The Secretary is further directed to ascertain whether the band of Pottawatomies of Huron, located in Calhoun county, Michigan, and not mentioned in said memorial, should by virtue of treaties dated November 17, 1807, September 19, 1827, and September 26, 1833, be included in any settlement that may hereafter be made of the claims set forth in said memorial.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House relating to counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. J. F. FOLLETT of Ohio, Mr. WALDO HUTCHINS of New York, and Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON of Illinois managers at the conference on its part.

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the communication from the House of Representatives in respect to House bill No. 8121.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 3, 1885.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. FOLLETT, Mr. HUTCHINS, and Mr. CANNON be the managers of the said conference on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HARRIS, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. PIKE were appointed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. PALMER. I give notice that on Friday next, at the conclusion of the morning hour, I shall call up the joint resolution (S. R. 19) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States reported by me from the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage, for the purpose of offering a few remarks upon it.

THE BARK MARY TERESA.

Mr. GORMAN. During my absence from the Senate the bill (S. 523) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil, was on the 21st of January reported adversely from the Committee on Claims, and indefinitely postponed. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to reconsider the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed, and that it may be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate heretofore taken indefinitely postponing the bill named by him be reconsidered, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The vote is reconsidered, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, returned to the Senate the bill (H. R. 691) for the relief of William W. Thomas, recalled from the Senate by request of the House.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair understands that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] desires to offer some amendments.

Mr. CALL. I offer, by request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] who is absent, an amendment to come in at the end of section 4 of the amendment agreed upon as a substitute for the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following to section 4 of the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole:

And proof that any transportation company has made a greater charge for hauling any such freight for a shorter distance than it charges for hauling in a contemporaneous service a like quantity of similar freight for a greater distance shall be prima facie evidence of unjust discrimination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] requested me to offer this amendment to the bill, and in doing so I shall submit very briefly some observations upon the general subject.

The two bills before the Senate, the Reagan bill and the Senate or Cullom bill, are alike in some important respects. They both affirm the existence of great public evils and the power and necessity of legislative control and correction of them. They differ only in the methods by which these acknowledged evils are proposed to be remedied—that is, in the measures through which the power of Congress is proposed to be exercised over the subject.

The regulation of the interstate commerce of the country and its relation to transportation covers the whole subject of the economic condition of the country and affects directly the relations of capital and labor, of banking and exchange, and of supply and demand. It does not stop here, but it also affects the social conditions and relations of the people, and is rapidly changing the character of our Government and of our institutions from a republic controlled by public opinion, and in which the people control the powers of the National Government and the States, to a government of privileged classes and of personal wealth, the direct creature of the legislative power—wealth which surpasses in its vast proportions the accumulations of any period of the history of the world, whether the boundless accumulations of the days of the Roman Empire or of mediæval times.

Eight hundred and twenty millions of annual tax levied on the labor and production of the country; one hundred and forty-odd thousand miles of railroad valued at between six and eight thousand million dollars—in the hands of a comparatively small portion of the people, and touching in its management and control the labor and production of every man, woman, and child in the country! Upon it is dependent the entire economic and social condition of the country; in all the departments of business and trade the powers of this vast associated capital, incorporated for the purpose of transportation, affect most deeply and immediately the subsistence of the people and the comforts of life of every individual in the country. It is not in any wise pertinent to the consideration of this subject to point out the beneficent effects of railroads and railroad improvement, to show the reduction of freights and cost of passenger travel. These are all true; but the question for proper consideration is whether the public evils alleged are true; and, if so, the remedy—whether railroad and water transportation can still further be improved so as to reduce cost and prevent the evils of an unrestrained and unregulated monopoly.

The power resulting from the control of such vast revenues—from the right to tax at discretion the entire production of the country and all of its passenger travel—is the greatest of the sovereign powers of state. Granted by law to individuals, who are given the right of succession or perpetuation, this power is sufficiently great to change the whole character of our institutions and to control and to appropriate the labor of every man, woman, and child in the country; leaving comparatively a small portion of it for the great body of the people. The power of these vast agencies of transportation is one of the most important questions of the age, and the manner in which the legislative power of the country shall be exercised in regard to it concerns most directly the statesmanship of the country and the performance of the duties which rest upon us in our public capacity here. As we shall exercise this power wisely and in the interests of the great body of the people and all the industries of the country, we shall receive the approval of the people, and as we shall fail to redress the evils of which they now complain we shall be condemned by them.

What is the difference in the measures proposed in these two bills? They both affirm the evils and declare the power of the Congress of the United States to control and regulate the subject. The Reagan bill proposes to prohibit and punish these evils, not only by opening the Federal courts of the United States to the aggrieved person, but also by making them a penal offense, and it requires the district attorney of the United States to prosecute the same (section 7). It brings, therefore, the whole power of the Government of the United States to sustain the individual in his suit against the corporation in obtaining a redress for any grievance committed in violation of the law.

The bill also authorizes and requires the district attorney of the United States to proceed in the name of the party aggrieved in the circuit court of the United States. The power of the United States is therefore effectively brought by the Reagan bill into effect to re-enforce, as some Senators have expressed it, the aggrieved individual in the assertion of his rights. It would seem that this provision would effectually satisfy the views of Senators who desire to aid the citizen in the assertion of his rights against corporate power and great accumulated wealth.

The Cullom bill provides for three commissioners, nine as amended, and requires transportation companies to charge reasonable rates, and declares unreasonable rates extortion and a misdemeanor. It also makes greater charges against one than another under substantially similar circumstances and conditions unjust discrimination and a misdemeanor. In case of complaint against any railroad company, it provides that if after an investigation reparation has been demanded and has not been made and the evil discontinued, a report having been furnished to the railroad company, then they shall require the district attorney to sue the railroad company. The difference between the two bills in this respect is that the Cullom bill requires a quasi-judicial suit before the commission and an opportunity to the railroad company to abide by it, and if the company shall abide by it and redress the evils, then it is relieved from any further liability on account of the act complained of. The other provisions of this bill relate only to acquiring information and reports by the commissioners.

We have, then, the two bills before us, and it is quite evident that the only material respect in which they differ is that the Reagan bill on the petition of a citizen requires the United States to sustain the suit of the citizen against the corporation. This is the material difference between these two bills. The Reagan bill brings the power of the United States directly to bear in aid of the citizen, and it declares as an absolute penal offense any violation of the law. Another feature of the Reagan bill as presented here prescribes a fixed rate of transportation for passengers at 3 cents a mile and prohibits a greater compensation for a shorter than a longer distance.

This is said to be an amendment to the original bill, and not contemplated in the limits of its purpose and remedial agencies, and it is said by some Senators to be entirely foreign to the spirit and aim of the bill as originally proposed. I do not propose to discuss this point, as whatever may be the merits of the proposition it is quite evident that there is no intention to make any part of the Reagan or House bill a law.

What are the true principles upon which legislation shall be founded in respect to the regulation of interstate commerce? We shall all agree that a railroad corporation should derive from its business a reasonable rate of profit, the same rate as is afforded by other business on the amount of its necessary and reasonable capital, and that it should not be allowed to derive from its business as a public carrier enormous and unreasonable and oppressive profits. We shall all agree that a common carrier should be required by law to carry its freight and passengers at reasonable rates. The legislation of Congress, therefore, should comprise protection to the interest of the people and of the corporations.

If there shall be any legislation on this subject in the interest of the people, we must contemplate the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce as complete and entire, and to prescribe rates, if necessary, for continuous routes and to require continuous transit. If these things can not be done, then Congress has no power to legislate effectively upon the subject, or to correct any of the evils complained of.

The cost of transportation must be the basis and regulation of a reasonable rate. It is not to the interest of the people that the railroads should not exist. They can not exist without reasonable compensation. They must be allowed to charge such rates, and no more, as are wise and reasonable and as will allow such a reasonable compensation on their proper and necessary cost, after paying out operating expenses and its cost of repairs.

The whole argument on both sides demands that this result shall be in some way attained. The Cullom bill proposes to attain this result chiefly by the recommendations of a commission and by the judgment of a court in deciding what is a reasonable rate, but it affirms that the violation of this rule prescribing a reasonable rate shall constitute a penal offense, and to that extent it affirms quite as precisely and positively the power of Congress to prescribe a rate and the expediency of prescribing a rate as does the Reagan bill in its present amended form in prescribing the rate of 3 cents a mile, for the courts in deciding upon that reasonable rate must ascertain and fix what it is, and it is by virtue of the power conferred in this act of Congress declaring that any other than a reasonable rate shall be a penal offense that the courts will have such a power in relation to interstate commerce.

It will be observed that if Congress has the power to prescribe a reasonable rate it has also of necessity the power to prescribe what that rate shall be; and if it has power to make it penal to charge any other rate, as a matter of law it will become its duty to declare with certainty what specific act will constitute such crime or penal offense. Therefore in that respect, while not undertaking to justify it, as a matter of expediency I insist that in the prescription of a fixed amount, the departure from which shall be a crime, the Reagan bill, the House bill, is fairer than the Senate or the Cullom bill in that it declares with certainty what violation of the law, what act, shall constitute the penal offense.

I do not know of any reason why, if Congress has power to regulate commerce and forbid discriminating charges and combinations to prevent competition, it has not the power to prescribe rates, however inexpedient it may be to prescribe them.

To this complexion we must come at last if we deal with this subject, and deal with it we must, and our treatment of it must be in the interest and for the benefit of the great body of the people. No party and no government can resist the increasing demand of the business interests of the whole people of the United States and of all its industries that these great agencies of the modern industrial system shall be wisely regulated and controlled by law in the interest of the great body of the people, and that public man who resists this demand is not in my judgment a wise and true friend of the great transportation companies of the country. We have but to look at the action of thirty States, and of the boards of trade and commerce, and the resolutions of all the conventions of business men, to be advised of the great body and force and unanimity of public opinion on this subject.

What then is the principle on which the business of a railroad company can be regulated, whether by law or otherwise, in a fair, reasonable, and just manner both to the whole body of the people and to the interests of the railroad company itself, recognizing the fact that the interests of the two are really harmonious, and that to promote the just interest of the one is to promote the just interest of the other? Mr. Alexander, vice-president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company, on page 52 of the House testimony, Miscellaneous Document 55, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, states it as follows:

> It will, of course, be admitted that the whole volume of business done over any railroad should support the road, pay an interest upon and gradually retire its debt, and yield a fair profit upon the investment. Anything less than this would be communism.

It is but just to say of Mr. Alexander that he is a gentleman of talent and information, and is opposed to the Reagan bill and to any exercise of power by Congress over this subject. This seems to me to present the elements of future legislative adjustment of this great question. No discrimination between persons and places, no pools, nor devices to prevent competition, no fictitious capital or watered stock, a reasonable and proper valuation of the cost of construction for the purpose of establishing rates of transportation, rates proportioned to the volume of business done on the road in its relation to the payment of interest and the gradual retirement of the debt and a fair compensation on capital actually and reasonably invested in the construction of the road.

And these results, ascertained in some public and authoritative way by the authority of Congress, would seem to indicate the proper direction of future legislation by Congress. The evils which these bills propose to remedy have been affirmed by thirty of the States, by the boards of trade of all the great cities, who demand imperatively legislation by Congress. Discriminations in freights and transportation between persons and places, the use of corporate power given by law in aid of their business as common carriers perverted to an interference with the trade and business of the country, to increasing or lowering the price of commodities at their will or pleasure and interfering with the legitimate value of public securities by watering stock or accumulating great amounts of money for speculation in other securities—these things the public opinion demands shall be prevented by whatever legislation is necessary. I do not see how you can prevent these discriminations while you allow a larger rate of compensation for a short distance than a long one; you can not prevent them while you allow the same rate of compensation for a short distance as for a long one, nor can you prevent them without adjusting the charges as between one place and another on some reasonable basis and proportion of cost.

I can not perceive that the reasonable adjustment of the cost of transportation between different places can be reached by any rule that the cost for a short distance shall be the same as that prescribed for a long distance. Neither can I perceive that the proposition, wise as it appears to be in some respects, contained in the Mahone amendment, will altogether reach this case, or that it may be remedied by a rule that the charge for a short distance shall not be greater than the charge for a long distance. What is wanted is the lowest possible rate consistent with a reasonable profit to the carrier, and that rate equal and impartial to all persons and all places; this result being reached, if it be true that over a railroad with its local charges thus adjusted through freight from other lines can be carried for a smaller proportionate cost than the intermediate freights, I can see no reason why this should not be allowed by law.

Under a system properly adjusted it could never be true that the proportionately smaller cost of through transportation would be a factor great enough to discriminate against the local or intermediate freights and transportation to any injurious extent, nor would it probably overbalance reduced rate of local freights resulting from the increased profits of a company from the addition of the profits of a through business to its local business. In both of these bills the conclusion is reached and the proposition affirmed that transportation must be regulated by law.

It has been repeatedly so affirmed by the States within and to the extent of their State power, and now it is affirmed by Congress in the exercise of its natural power in relation to interstate commerce.

But, Mr. President, the action of the Board of Trade of New York and of other cities has presented to us a proposition, and I think it is fair to give them an opportunity to try it. I read from the testimony of Mr. Josiah J. White, representing the Board of Trade and Transportation of New York, page 29 of the House report:

> I can say as a member of the New York Produce Exchange that there is great danger now that all the grain produced in this country will be monopolized by a few individuals. Even during the strictest régime of the last pool discrimination was shown in the way of rebates, so that if the market declined those who were in the railroad ring (and the railroads have their agents there quoting prices every day) were guaranteed against loss. I had a little thing happen to me the other day as a shipper. I had two car-loads shipped to me as samples to know if I would take forty cars more of the same kind of merchandise. The two car-loads arrived, and I wrote to my friend accepting the rest of them. Those two car-loads were billed through to New York at 15 cents the hundred pounds from Cincinnati. I went to Cincinnati myself, and I ordered the rest of them to be shipped. Then the railroad company wanted 30½ cents per hundred pounds, a rate which amounted to a prohibition of the merchandise, and my forty cars of stuff are in Cincinnati to-day, and can not be moved, because the rate of freight exacted on them amounted to 100 per cent. of the value of the goods when laid down in New York. That is a thing that occurs every day. Here is a violent fluctuation caused by irresponsible railroad management, favoring their friends in the pool and driving other parties to the wall.
> There was another little subject in connection with this matter which I discovered when I was in Cincinnati at that time. That was that all the friends of the railroad companies that were in the pool were notified a few days before of what was going to take place, and were advised to make freight contracts. There were thousands of contracts made on the basis of 15 cents per hundred pounds, and on those contracts freight is being carried now from the West to the East; whereas the rest of us who were not favorites have got to have our commerce stopped. One of the causes of the late panic among the produce men was the rise of rates. The merchandise could not be moved and laid down on the seaboard at a price on which they could get out whole. There were great losses and failures all over the country—commercial failures. The upset of one house brought down another house. It is for that reason, gentlemen, that I feel that there must be some controlling power over the railroads. I think that half the railroads of the country want it themselves. I have talked with the presidents of various railroads with whom I do business, and I have found an almost unanimous opinion among the railroad men (whom I call anti-monopolists) in favor of Government supervision. They want some regulation of this thing.

Mr. Thurber gives his testimony as follows:

> I can imagine a state of things where it would seem very hard to prohibit a railroad that was competing with a water-line communication, for instance, to a given point, from carrying freight for 1,000 miles at a cheaper rate than it would charge for carrying freight 750 miles to a point where the water competition did not exist. But if there could be a supervision of the railroads in the interest of the public, when its rates came to the point that it was carrying freight at a loss, the railroad company would be told, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther. You may carry freight as cheaply as you please, in order to keep up your business and to keep your rolling-stock employed, but you shall not carry freight at a rate which occasions a loss, and which loss you make up by charging higher freight to the people on another section of your road." There, I think, is where the line can be drawn, and should be drawn, on that matter of greater and lesser distances.

Mr. President, I have offered this amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, not believing that it will answer all the purposes that are desired, not believing that we can avoid in this great question of interstate transportation some method of arriving at a reasonable rate, and of preventing excessive charges, but as a measure in response to the specific demand of the great commercial and agricultural interests of the country. If it shall be found to fail and not answer its purpose it could be easily altered in the coming session of Congress. I therefore offer the amendment that I have proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. HAWLEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I do not know how either would vote on this amendment.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. If he were here I imagine he would vote "yea," and I would vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] are paired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], with liberty to vote to make a quorum, and will vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—8.

Call,	Jones of Florida,	Platt,	Van Wyck,
Coke,	Maxey,	Slater,	Voorhees.

NAYS—32.

Aldrich,	Conger,	Harris,	Miller of N. Y.,
Allison,	Cullom,	Harrison,	Morrill,
Bayard,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Pike,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Butler,	Frye,	Jackson,	Sawyer,
Chace,	Groome,	Jonas,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Hale,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Manderson,	Wilson.

ABSENT—36.

Beck,	Garland,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Bowen,	George,	Logan,	Ransom,
Brown,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Camden,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Sabin,

Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Vance,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Morgan,	Vest,
Fair,	Kenna,	Palmer,	Walker,
Farley,	Lamar,	Pendleton,	Williams.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. I offer the following amendment to come in after the word "excepted," at the end of line 21 of section 6:

And any person damaged by extortion or unjust discrimination may, in addition to the foregoing, have the remedies provided in the next section of this act; but in case such person elect to bring any action for damages as provided for in said next section, said action shall be a bar to any action brought under that section by the district attorney.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall vote against that amendment simply because it is past my understanding. I can not get the scope and drift of it at all. I do not know what the intention of the Senator is. I can not understand what is the remedy provided in the next section to which he refers.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no remedy in the next section at all.

Mr. CALL. The amendment was prepared by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and I supposed I had the proper place for it to come in. The next section as I read it is:

Any such transportation company that shall be convicted under the provisions of this act of either extortion or unjust discrimination shall forfeit and pay for each offense a fine of not exceeding $1,000.

The next section is section 7. It does not contain any proper reference apparently. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida withdraws the amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I propose an amendment to the Senate bill on page 7, section 7, line 10, to insert the word "traveling" before "expenses;" so as to read:

All necessary traveling expenses incurred by the commissioners or by their employés, &c.

Mr. CULLOM. So far as I am concerned I am willing to accept that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I would say to Senators that we have had so much scandal in connection with the payment of expenses of commissions, and the Treasury Department has been so extravagantly liberal, that the allowance ought to be qualified and limited to their traveling expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Are amendments to the body of the bill in order now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I have a series of amendments, all relating to the same subject-matter. In section 12, line 3, before the word "routes," I move to strike out "and water," so as to confine it to railroads. It now reads:

That the route of any transportation company engaged in interstate commerce shall include all the railroad and water routes in use by such company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that this amendment of the Senator from Michigan and others which he proposes to offer in succession are intended to eliminate from the bill all supervision or control over transportation routes partly composed of railroad lines and partly of water communication; so that the bill, if this amendment and those which are to follow it are adopted, will be left to apply exclusively to interstate commerce by railway.

I do not want to debate this question, but I do want to state that in my judgment that would destroy, in a very large measure, the efficiency of this supervision which it is sought to have over interstate commerce. A break in the crossing of a river in a railroad line upon some State line would take that route entirely out of the scope and purview of the bill.

If we undertake to regulate this subject of commerce we must regulate all those who partly by rail and partly by water are engaged in carrying the productions of the country. If we do not do so, whatever restraints and limitations there are, whatever of this sort of thing there may be in the bill, is made to apply to one class of carriers and not to another. That will destroy uniformity, will allow liberty to certain classes of carriers that is not allowed to others, and will, in my judgment, destroy the efficiency of the measure.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I have conferred with vessel-men, and from my own knowledge of the subject I have said, and I venture to repeat now, that the provisions extending the jurisdiction of this commission and the rules laid down here over single vessels navigating the waters of the country will not only produce confusion but be absolutely destructive of the vessel interest of the country. I shall content myself with calling for the yeas and nays on each of these propositions, and shall have done my duty to that great interest by that effort. As we are coming to a final vote, I will not prolong remarks.

In section 11 we have a provision which controls all railroad freights on railroads, and provides that that shall include the right of shippers to select their route by water or by rail. That is all we need ask in this connection. But to extend the provisions of railroad restriction over the owner of a craft, of a steamboat, of a barge, of a vessel of any kind, and compel him to operate by rules made entirely for a railroad corporation, thus restricting the universal right of all the people of the United States to navigate the waters as they will, and to carry freight and passengers for whatever price they choose on the rivers and the lakes of the United States, seems to me utterly preposterous in principle and it would work great wrong in practice.

But, sir, I have said all I desire to say on this subject. I can not help it if a Senator from the interior of Indiana can not see how water communication on the little Wabash may be affected by this, because the streams in his State are of too little importance to have any navigation. The Senator is fortunate in having in his State one—and it is the only one—port on the great lakes, called Michigan City. It may not have occurred to him that it is in Indiana from the name of the town. It has some interest in the result of the motion which I have made, and its people are infinitely more interested in it than are the people down in the interior of the State along the Wabash.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has a large State and large commercial interests to look after, and he always takes a wide view of any question. I have not proposed, nor does anybody propose to interfere with any steamboat running on its own account, taking freight upon its own bills of lading and delivering it at any place else to the consignee. The bill does not relate to such cases. It does relate, as I understand—I am not responsible for its phraseology—to those through routes of transportation which are made up partly of railway and partly of water transportation. It would reach those cases where a railroad company employing its own steamers takes freight to Sandusky or Cleveland or Buffalo or some other point, and then upon its own steamers or upon steamers with which it has contracts transports it to some other point in another State. If that can be done, if the great commerce of Illinois can be brought to Chicago and can be there delivered to vessels on the lakes that are running in connection with the railroads, and can be transported to Buffalo and there taken upon a railroad and carried to New York without any supervision under this bill, then we had better not undertake legislation at all, because then those lines will be completely emancipated, while the others will be held in and restrained by the provisions of this law.

As to vessels trading on their own account, carrying freight from one water port to another, I do not suppose the bill would reach them at all; it only applies to lines that have combined to make a continuous transit, billing goods through and being composed partly of rail and partly of water transportation.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, section 13 makes every little craft on the lakes or on the rivers subject to every rule in this bill as to continuous freight, as to continuous passage, as to breaking bulk, as to stopping a part of the freight before it reaches its destination. There is no question about that, for what is the language?

That the term "transportation company engaged in interstate commerce," as used in this act, shall be deemed and taken to mean any corporation, company, or individual now owning, operating, or using any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels—

"Any railroad" "or any vessel." This commission can take any single craft, by the terms of section 13, and call any person or individual owning it a transportation company under this act, and every provision applying to a great line of railroad can be made to apply to any steamboat, vessel, or craft of any kind. These restrictions on the use of vessels, which this bill applies to a great railroad route, would be entirely injurious and detrimental, in my judgment, and destructive to the use of water craft on our rivers and lakes—

That the term "transportation company engaged in interstate commerce," as used in this act, shall be deemed and taken to mean any corporation, company, or individual now owning, operating, or using any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels, in whole or in part.

It does not say if they are part of a line; it does not say if they are owned by the railroad company and governed and managed by it. If it did there would be some propriety in the remarks of the Senator from Indiana; but it sweeps in under the provisions of this proposed law the whole vessel interest, the whole commerce by vessels on all the waters of the United States—the coasting trade, the lake trade, the river trade, wherever it may be.

Mr. CULLOM. I will only say a word. I do not think that the construction placed upon section 13 by the Senator from Michigan is a correct one, and I call the attention of the Senate to the reading of the section for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the Senator is right:

SEC. 13. That the term "transportation company engaged in interstate commerce," as used in this act, shall be deemed and taken to mean any corporation, company, or individual now owning, operating, or using any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels, in whole or in part, or that may have the right, license, or permission to operate, use, or control any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels, in whole or in part, provided such corporation, company, or individual is engaged in the business of transporting freights or property of any description by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, from one State into another State or Territory of the United States, or from any Territory into any State or any other Territory.

It does not seem to me that the fair construction of that section would interfere in the slightest degree with the operation of any man owning a steamboat or any sort of vessel simply running it upon the water on his own account; but it only applies to that sort of transportation of freight that is partly by rail and partly by water. That was the purpose of the section, and I think that is the fair construction of its meaning. I do not think it would be in the interest of the proper regulation of commerce between the States to strike out the whole subject of regulating water transportation. I think it would weaken the force of the measure in its operation if it should become a law.

I have had no disposition myself and had none when the bill was drawn to interfere with steamboat navigation upon the Mississippi River or upon the lakes as a separate and distinct business; but where railroad corporations have lines of steamers, as in the case, as I understand, of the New York Central, which are a part of their line, made so by their ownership, it seems to me that if we want to reach the evil and regulate interstate commerce, the bill ought to go as far as the language of this section does go.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll on the question of agreeing to Mr. CONGER'S amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY].

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I had a pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I have transferred that, however, to the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER]. The Senator from California and the Senator from Mississippi are paired, and I vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JONAS] generally. I notice he is not in the Chamber; but the pair gives me liberty to vote upon these amendments, and I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I desire to announce again that my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], both of them being called away from the Senate on urgent business connected with their Senatorial duties.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. My pair being transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], I vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON.]

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—5.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONGER. I will not test the sense of the Senate on all the other points in regard to water routes. The amendment which I have offered tests the question just as well as all; and I desire to remark here that I take the vote on that as the view of the Senate in regard to all the places in sections 12 and 13 where this act is extended over a single vessel and the owner and master of a single vessel. But I now move to strike out in section 13, line 3, after the word "company," the words "or individual," and to insert the word "or" before "company;" so as to leave an individual owning a vessel to run it as his interest may dictate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan offers an amendment which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 13, line 3, after the word "company," it is proposed to strike out the words "or individual," and before the word "company" to insert the word "or;" so as to read:

That the term "transportation company engaged in interstate commerce," as used in this act, shall be deemed and taken to mean any corporation or company now owning, operating, or using any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels, &c.

Mr. CULLOM. In the belief that there is no individual who owns a railroad, I believe I shall not object to that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose it should turn out that a railroad is in the hands of a receiver or assignee or trustee, what would be the effect?

Mr. CONGER. He does not own it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The railroad would be in the hands of the court in that case, and the trustee would be merely the officer or representative of the court to operate it.

Mr. ALLISON. But suppose it is in the hands of a trustee without the intervention of a court. There are trustees of mortgage bonds who often take possession of railroads under the conditions of the mortgage without the intervention of a court, and run it for the benefit of the stockholders and bondholders. I can see no objection to allowing these words to remain.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not think there is any objection to allowing them to remain, but I thought perhaps we could come to some understanding with our friend from Michigan if we allowed him some amendment that really does not amount to anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I can not hear the Senator. His remarks were interesting, I have no doubt from the faces of Senators around him, but I could not hear what he said.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It may be very interesting, but I do not think it will bear repeating, and so I shall not repeat it.

Mr. CONGER. I see by the newspapers very often that remarks are made against the Senator from Michigan which I unfortunately do not hear. I should like to hear what the Senator from Wisconsin has said. It was a very pleasant remark, no doubt, from the faces of Senators.

Mr. CULLOM. I doubt whether the word "individual" ought to be stricken out of the bill. I fear that would be taken advantage of, so that Vanderbilt or Gould or some man might own a railroad and a line of steamships running on the lakes, and the whole object and purpose of the bill so far as that railroad and line of steamships was concerned would be avoided. I hope the Senator will not insist on the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I am free to say that I am very sorry that the Senator from Illinois can not tell exactly what an amendment to this bill might do. I think a more crude and undigested section of a bill was never offered to the Senate, and I say that with the more reason because the Senate knows the Senator is not responsible for it. It came with this same crooked stick in it into his hands, and he is unable to let it go, even in respect to a single word, for fear there might somewhere spring up in the United States some Jay Gould or some man who could own a whole railroad, although every law under which a railroad company is organized provides that there shall be a president and directors and stockholders. He will not consent to an amendment because of some doubtful, undecided possibility that may arise in the future.

This law with its commissioners at $7,000 or $8,000 a year to take charge of a little boat, a batteau, a barge, with a captain, a mate, and cook, and control them, and the commissioners are to have full power to do it under this law; and when I ask to relieve it of that difficulty Senators gather around and cry out, "Jay Gould!" He is the man they are after; it is not the captain of the vessel. They will strike out of the bill neither vessel nor owner nor individual who owns a vessel. I think a Philadelphia lawyer can not explain what this section 13 means. He can not tell where it applies nor how. I challenge anybody here to tell what is excluded and what is included in the term "transportation company." It says it shall include all companies, corporations, individuals that use a vessel or vessels in water transportation. The Senator from the prairie country in Iowa may be able to navigate a ship through the dews on the prairies; he may be very learned in all matters connected with the appropriations of money; but I venture to say that if you give him half an hour he can not begin to make an intelligible statement of the meaning of this section 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] on all these questions. I make the announcement for the day.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JACKSON. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] requested me to announce his pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—5.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This bill professes to be a regulation of commerce by Congress and it supplies a remedy for persons damnified in the manner prescribed by the bill. It occurs to me that it might be construed as an act which would deprive any person injured by any railroad company of any remedy which he might have under any State law or under any other Federal law than that which is now being enacted. I do not know that it is necessary, but as a matter of precaution I have prepared an amendment, which I wish to offer, to come in at the end of section 7, reading as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive any person of any right of action which he may have against any transportation company under existing laws, State or Federal, this act being intended only to furnish cumulative remedies to persons having just cause of action against such company.

It occurred to me that, this being a regulation of commerce by act of Congress, every person who might be damnified by any railroad company in the country would be shut up to the remedy provided for in this bill, which is a remedy through the Federal courts. I have offered the amendment to exclude the idea that persons having just cause of complaint and right of action against a railroad should be deprived of such right under any State or other Federal law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 7 it is proposed to add:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive any person of any right of action which he may have against any transportation company under existing laws, State or Federal, this act being intended only to furnish cumulative remedies to persons having just cause of action against such company.

Mr. WILSON. If I can have the attention of the Senator from Delaware a moment, I will say that that same thought had occurred to me, and I had prepared an amendment in the nature of an additional section, which I will read, as I think it covers the ground and a little more than the proposition of the Senator from Delaware. It is this:

SEC. 14. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to require any person aggrieved by the act or omission of a transportation company within the provisions of this act to pursue the remedy provided in sections 5 and 6 hereof for the ascertainment and recovery of damages on account thereof; but such person may, by civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction, maintain an action as though this act had not been passed; and in such cases the duties, obligations, liabilities, and responsibilities of such transportation company in all respects shall be the same as though said action had been commenced in pursuance of the remedy in said sections 5 and 6 provided.

That carries to the action which the individuals may commence independently of this the liabilities in connection therewith that are provided in the way of penalties and otherwise in the general provisions of the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think both amendments cover about the same ground, and I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON. I had intended offering this as an independent section.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was not aware that anybody else had any amendment to offer on this matter, and it occurred to me that it was a very proper thing to do. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware accepts the amendment of the Senator from Iowa in place of the one offered by him.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to have this go in as an additional section, as section 14. I prefer to wait until we reach that portion of the bill, as I presume there are other amendments to the earlier sections of it.

Mr. MORRILL. You had better offer it now.

Mr. WILSON. Very well; I will offer it now as an additional section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

SEC. 14. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to require any person aggrieved by the act or omission of a transportation company within the provisions of this act to pursue the remedy provided in sections 5 and 6 hereof for the ascertainment and recovery of damages on account thereof, but such person may, by civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction, maintain an action as though this act had not been passed; and in such cases the duties, obligations, liabilities, and responsibilities of such transportation company in all respects shall be the same as though said action had been commenced in pursuance of the remedy in said sections 5 and 6 provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CALL. Is it in order to offer an amendment to that amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order now. It would be an amendment in the third degree.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I offer an amendment which will modify the difficulty which I have with section 13 to some extent, and to which some of my friends say they have no objection. Section 13 defines the term "transportation company," as used in this act, to mean:

Any corporation, company, or individual now owning, operating, or using any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels, in whole or in part.

After the word "part," in line 5 of section 13, I move to amend by inserting "which are run by any railroad company, making part of its route."

Mr. SEWELL. I suggest to add the words "or for;" so as to read, "which are run by or for any railroad company."

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that. Let it read, "which are run by or for any railroad company, making part of its route." I think that the amendment I propose will be unobjectionable. It will remove the objection I have to the bill and make it more certain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. The amendment offered by me yesterday, as section 14 of the substitute, was adopted with a proviso added, on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], in order to control the lines going into Mexico. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas made it practically what I wish to arrive at; but both objects can be better accomplished by striking out a part of the proviso. The proviso is in the following language:

Provided, That this shall not apply to transportation wholly by water.

I move to strike out the words "wholly by water" and to insert "on the high seas," which is a technical phrase applied to the ocean. The amendment I suggest is satisfactory to the Senator from Kansas, also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. CALL. I inquire of the Senator from New Jersey if his amendment would not apply to the arrangement between the Pacific railroads and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. It seems to me that it would authorize that present monoply of freights which is so much complained of by the Board of Trade of New York.

Mr. SEWELL. The former proviso would apply just the same. I wish to confine the operation of the section to the high seas. I do not want to make it apply to inland water navigation.

Mr. CALL. It seems to me the section had better provide that it shall not apply to inland navigation. It evidently would include the very evil so much complained of by the Board of Trade of New York in regard to the arrangement of a common rate of freight between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the Pacific railroads.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator from Florida will hear the section read he will see that it applies now to the high seas and to inland transportation. I wish it to apply only to the high seas. The section reads:

That the provisions of this act shall be construed as applicable to all railroad or transportation companies engaged in the carrying of freight from any place in the United States through any foreign territory to any other place in the United States, or from any place in the United States to any place outside the United States: Provided, That this shall not apply to transportation wholly by water.

I wish to change it so that it shall not apply to transportation on the high seas.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator also include "on the great lakes" with "the high seas?"

Mr. SEWELL. As it is proposed it applies to roads competing with the trunk lines. It will fix the Canadian transportation, which will come under this act, part by water and part by rail.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator wishes to fix it, whether he understands it or not, in the interest of a series of railroads running south of the great lakes, and to make a cut, as the gentlemen of the House of Representatives did some years ago, out of that great northwest and northeast communication which goes across the level country of Canada West for the benefit of roads running south of the lakes.

Mr. SEWELL. I have no hesitation in saying that I am in favor of protecting capital invested in the United States as against that invested in Canada.

Mr. CONGER. From Chicago to Port Huron there is a line of railroads owned by an American company running in the United States, the whole length of it. At the other end of that route there is a railroad running from Island Pond to Portland, owned by an American company, built by an American company, but leased by a Canadian company. Why should the Senator try to strike down the industry of those roads in the interest of the little New Jersey roads? It is remarkable that the Senator should ask anything for a New Jersey road, because their generous conduct, proved by New Jersey companies that corporations have souls, contrary to all the established rules, never imposes upon the people of the United States traveling through New Jersey. That is so plain that it seems to me he need not defend those roads. The New Jersey roads will be taken care of for their universal magnanimity and courtesy and kindness to the traveling public.

The Senator might take the advantages that the New Jersey roads have for locality, and he might let the Northern roads, the great transporting routes from the Northwest and New England, have the route which nature has prepared for them, without doing what a Representative from Toledo did in the same interest, if not with the same object, when he prepared a bill which would prevent the productions of the Northwestern States from being taken to Canada at all. That is the manly way to deal with it. Put in a provision here that Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, and all the Northwestern States shall not pass any of their productions over the railroads that run through Canada, and strike at the matter at once in a manly way by providing that all New England shall not send to the West from Boston and Portland and all the towns there any of their produce if it is going through Canada.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Michigan allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CONGER. I should rather the Senator would answer me some of my points than to ask me a question.

Mr. SEWELL. I wish to ask the Senator if he thinks a great wrong would be done to the Canada railroads by bringing them under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. CONGER. The bill does not pretend to have anything to do with railroads; it is water that the Senator is talking about. However strange it may sound to the Senate to have anybody talk about water, that is what it means. It is not a railroad in Canada, it is a water communication on the great lakes in the United States that the Senator by his amendment strikes at; where the communication is wholly by water, as from Duluth to Buffalo, or from Duluth to Ogdensburg, the whole length of all the lakes. The Senator seeks to strike at the whole commerce of the Mississippi and all the great rivers of the country by inserting "high seas" in place of water communication.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a second for the demand for the yeas and nays? In the opinion of the Chair there is a second. The yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. CONGER. Let the other side be counted, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan demand the other side of the count?

Mr. CONGER. If that is my right, I ask that the other side be counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks for the yeas and nays. The Chair will put the question again. Is there a second to that request? Senators opposed to the request——

Mr. CONGER. I do not ask that the question shall be taken again. I simply asked whether I had a right, before those in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays had signified their desire to do so, to have the other side also counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the United States Senate the only way to determine that fact is to count the Senators present and then ascertain whether one-fifth have voted in favor of ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. If the Chair intimates that he did that, and one-fifth voted to second the call, that is all that is necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was a simple announcement of the judgment of the Chair that one-fifth had voted to second the call.

Mr. CONGER. In that case, that is all that is required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rose to vote "nay." I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]; but I supposed he had entered the Chamber.

Mr. RANSOM. No; he is not here.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I shall not vote.

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. BOWEN. I wish to announce my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER] on the entire question.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 21; as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum having voted, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and 44 Senators answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-four Senators are present. The Secretary will again call the roll on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. SEWELL. As a number of Senators are of the opinion that section 13 covers the object I wish to arrive at, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks leave to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CALL. I now offer an amendment, on behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], to come in as an additional section after section 6 of the bill. It is the amendment I offered awhile ago, but I could not then clearly indicate the place in the bill where it should be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section after section 6:

SEC. —. That in case any transportation company engaged as aforesaid shall do, suffer, or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or forbidden, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall be guilty of any violation of the provisions of this act, such transportation company shall be liable to pay to the person or persons who may be injured thereby the amount of the damages so sustained and costs as provided in the sixth section of this act, to be recovered by the person or persons so damaged by suit in United States court of competent jurisdiction where the transportation company causing such damage can be found, or may have an agent, office, or place of business; and if the court before which any such action is tried shall be of opinion that the violation of the law was willful, it shall make an allowance, by way of additional costs, to the party injured, sufficient to cover all his counsel and attorney fees. In any action to be brought as aforesaid in any court of the United States the court shall have all the power of a court of equity to compel discovery and the production of books, documents, and papers. In any such action so brought any director, officer, receiver, or trustee of any company aforesaid, or any receiver, trustee, or person aforesaid, or any agent of any such company, receiver, trustee, or person aforesaid, or of any of them, alone or with any other person or persons, party or parties, may and shall be compelled to attend, appear, and testify and give evidence; and no claim that any such testimony or evidence might or might not tend to criminate the person testifying or giving evidence shall be of any avail, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used as against such person on the trial of any indictment against him. The attendance and appearance of any of the persons who as aforesaid may be compelled to appear or testify, and the giving of the testimony or evidence by the same, respectively, and the production of books and papers thereby, may and shall be compelled the same as in the case of any other witness; and in case any deposition or evidence, or the production of any books or papers, may be desired or required for the purpose of applying for or sustaining any such action, the same, and the production of books and papers, may and shall be had, taken, and compelled by or before any United States commissioner, or in any manner provided or to be provided for as to the taking of other depositions or evidence, or the attendance of witnesses, or the production of other books or papers in or by chapter 17 of title 13 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. No action aforesaid shall be sustained unless brought within one year after the cause of action shall accrue, or within one year after the party complaining shall have come to a knowledge of his right of action. And as many causes of action as may accrue within the year may be joined in the same suit or complaint. And any circuit or district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the persons shall have the power, upon application of any person or persons, firms, railroads, or other corporations or associations, alleging undue and unjust discrimination against a person in violation of the provisions of this act, to issue writs of mandamus against such person, commanding such person to move and transport freight or to furnish facilities for transportation for the party applying for the writ, upon such terms and in such manner as shall seem just and proper to the court, in order to prevent any undue or unjust discrimination against the relator. The proceedings shall be as in other cases of mandamus; and in cases of urgent necessity or involving the transportation of perishable goods the writs of alternative mandamus may be made returnable forthwith: Provided, That no writ or peremptory mandamus shall issue under this act until the relator shall have given security, in such sum as shall be named by the court, to pay the defendant the proper and legal charges for the services required to be performed by the writ aforesaid: And provided further, That the remedy herein given by writ of mandamus shall be cumulative, and shall not exclude or interfere with the other remedies herein provided. No cause brought under this act in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any United States court.

Mr. CALL. I merely wish to say that the amendment was prepared by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and that I offer it at his request. It is designed to furnish an affirmative remedy to a person aggrieved by a violation of the act now proposed to be passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 7, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—7.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. At the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] I move to add, after line 22 of section 5, the following words:

And such report shall in all proceedings under this act be prima facie evidence of the existence of the facts therein found to be true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. Also, by request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], I move to add, at the end of section 10, the following:

The said commission is hereby authorized to invoke the aid of a United States court of competent jurisdiction to compel the making of said reports; and if any company shall fail or refuse to make any report required of it as aforesaid, the said company shall forfeit and pay for every such neglect or failure a penalty not less than $1,000, and it and its officers shall be subject to all the other penalties prescribed in this act for a violation of any of its provisions. The reports of each company shall be certified under its corporate seal to be correct in every respect, and shall also be verified by the oaths of its president, secretary, treasurer, and chief book-keeper; and if any report shall contain any statement willfully false, the affiants thereto shall be guilty of perjury, and, on conviction, shall be subject to the pains and penalties prescribed by law for such offense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, that is an amendment to section 10, which requires the railroad companies to make annual reports at the request of the commissioners. If Senators will look at the provisions of that section, I think they will see what embarrassment it may be to require those reports. I will read it. Section 10 provides:

That the commission is hereby authorized to require annual reports from all transportation companies engaged in interstate commerce, to fix the time and prescribe the manner in which such reports shall be made, and to require from such companies specific answers to all questions upon which the commission may need information. Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued and the amounts paid therefor; the dividends paid; the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the company's property, franchises, and equipment, with a complete description of the same; the number of employés and the salaries paid each class; the amounts expended for improvements each year and how expended; the monthly earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the monthly operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss, and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the company each year. Such reports shall also contain such information in relation to rates or regulations concerning fares or freights, or agreements, arrangements, or contracts with other companies, as the commission may require.

I do not believe that the objects sought to be attained by the appointment of the commission can be aided in any way by the adoption of the tenth section. I can see very readily how a report made in compliance with it, disclosing the whole business operations of a company, may operate to the injury of the company and may destroy their credit in the community. A new enterprise just struggling into existence may by such a report be not only crippled but utterly destroyed. I can understand very well how operators in stocks in Wall street may desire to have this information. They could deal perhaps with more safety, but I can not see that the objects sought by the bill can be aided in the least by such an exposé of the private transactions and business of a company.

I am perfectly willing to adopt any measure that will limit the power of the companies to oppress the people, but I do not want to see the companies themselves unnecessarily oppressed or injured. I have no doubt there are a great many just complaints against these corporations. Perhaps some of the complaints which are made are merely ideal, but I have no doubt that there are discriminations, that there are exorbitant prices charged by some of the corporations, and that persons having to use the railroads for the transportation of their freights and products are damnified and injured by the exactions of the companies. If we can devise any means to correct that or give any remedy whatever for the evils which are justly complained of, I am here ready to do it, but I do not think our legislation ought to partake of a nature which will necessarily oppress and injure the corporations themselves. While we should aim to do justice to shippers, we ought not to be unjust, in my opinion, to those institutions upon which we are dependent for the transportation of persons and property.

In fact I have but little faith that the bill will accomplish anything. What is it? It provides simply for the appointment of nine commissioners with high salaries, authorized to incur large expenses. They must and doubtless will incur expenses amounting to two or three hundred thousand dollars annually. What can they do and what is provided in the bill that they shall do? They are simply to hear complaints. They are to note down all the complaints which are made to them and to investigate the nature of the complaints. If in the judgment of the commission the complaints are valid, what are they to do? Are they to provide any remedy? Not a particle. All they are to do is to certify that fact to the district attorney. Then he goes into an investigation, and if he ascertains that any person has been injured by discriminations or by extortion he is compelled, under the bill, at the instance of the party injured, to institute suit; but with the provision adopted on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], which reserves to the party all his remedies under State law or under the common law of the country, I should think that he would be a silly man who would seek the remedy pointed out in the bill when all the rights and remedies that he has are secured to him by the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa to the fourteenth section. I am very sure there are few suits that will be instituted under the provisions of the bill, and without suits originated by the district attorney there is no remedy secured under it to any person who has been damnified by the injustice of a railroad company.

I care very little about the measure. If it can accomplish anything by its moral influence, as was suggested yesterday by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], if it is going to be armed with such potent moral influence that the corporations of the country will stand in awe of it, it may be well enough; but I apprehend that that is a fiction of fancy, and that the corporations will not stand in such holy horror of the commission which is to be appointed that they will cease to do evil and learn to do well.

I say I care but little about the bill. I should have voted against the substitution of this bill for the Reagan bill, which did furnish some remedy, and yet I was not so perfectly in love with that bill. If there can be any measure devised that will operate to secure justice to the people interested in transportation by water or otherwise, I am perfectly willing to see it tried.

I deprecate this expense, but we are accustomed to large expenses in this country. We have had numerous commissions. We had a Mississippi Improvement Commission, and what has it amounted to? Verily in my opinion it has done no good. We have had various commissions; we have at the present time a Civil Service Commission, and so far as I understand I do not know what good it has done. I do not know what good it will do. For one, I do not hesitate to say that if I were President of the United States, charged with the responsibility of administering the executive affairs of this Government, I would do it according to the dictates of my own judgment. I should not be a butcher and turn out every man who was in office. If he was a faithful, honest servant I would keep him there for a proper time at least, but I would not feel bound to take my political enemies and keep them forever in office simply because the Civil Service Commission might have made some rule that might require me to do it. If I were President of the United States and charged with the duty of administering the executive department of this Government, I should discharge it according to the dictates of my own judgment and for the best interests of the people of the country.

We have had various commissions, and none of them has ever amounted to much. We had an Electoral Commission, the only effect of which was to deprive the people of this country of their choice for President of the United States. I have not much faith in commissions, nor have I much faith in the one here proposed. I do not think it will amount to much; but if the Senate of the United States see proper to adopt it, I have no objection. Its moral influence, I apprehend, will not amount to much, and the legal remedies which the bill provides I think will not be sought by any person damnified by the operations of railroad companies.

Mr. CULLOM. I only desire to say that I hope the tenth section will not be stricken out, and to remind the Senate that according to the understanding we are to vote upon the main question at 3 o'clock today.

Mr. PLUMB. I can not spare this opportunity to say a word or two to my friend from Delaware in regard to his feeling about the Civil Service Commission. He asks, with some apparent anguish, what good has it done? I say to him that that will be much more apparent after thirty days than it ever has been before to the ordinary Democratic apprehension.

Mr. CALL. I desire to know whether the understanding is to exclude amendments to the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not exclude amendments; it only excludes debate.

Mr. MAXEY. Before the vote is taken upon the passage of the bill it was my purpose to state at some length my reasons for favoring the House bill and for opposing the Senate proposition. I do not regard the Senate proposition as of any practical value whatever. On the contrary, I believe that it will hereafter prevent the relief that is sought, and will not answer the great public demand for legislation on the subject of interstate commerce. This measure has the appearance of being legislation on that subject, but is without any real, tangible, valuable effect of legislation. For that reason, as the vote is to be taken, and I have not time to speak, I shall vote against the bill when the question comes up on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. At the end of section 14, on behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], I move to add:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the circuit courts of the United States to aid in a summary manner the said commission in performing any duty imposed on them by this act.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. At the request of the Senator from Mississippi, I move to add as an additional section to the bill the following:

SEC. —. That every person who, being president, vice-president, director, superintendent, or general agent of any transportation company, shall authorize, or concur in, or permit any violation of this act shall be liable to the same penalties and subject to the same damages as are herein imposed on the transportation company for such violation, and every such person may be joined as co-defendant with said company in any proceeding under this act, or may be proceeded against separately, as the complainant may elect.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. Also, by request of the Senator from Mississippi, I move to add at the end of section 4 the following:

And proof that any transportation company, in all cases where it shall also appear that such transportation company has issued or has not then canceled stock commonly known as watered, then a greater charge for a shorter distance than a longer one shall be unjust discrimination in the sense of this act.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended.

The amendment as amended was concurred in, as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That for the purpose of providing for the regulation of commerce among the several States and Territories a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Interstate-Commerce Commission, which shall be composed of nine commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one of whom shall be selected from each judicial circuit of the United States. Three of the commissioners first appointed under this act shall continue in office for terms of two years, three for four years, and three for six years, the respective terms to be designated by the President; but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for incompetency or malfeasance in office. Vacancies occasioned by removal, resignation, or other cause shall be filled by the President. And not more than five shall belong to the same political party.

SEC. 2. That the commission hereby created shall have and exercise the powers and discharge the duties defined and granted in this act pertaining to the methods and regulating the operation of all transportation companies engaged in interstate commerce, and to take into consideration and to thoroughly investigate all the various questions relating to commerce between the States, and especially in the matter of the transportation thereof, so far as may be necessary to the establishment of a just system of regulations for the government of the same.

SEC. 3. That if any transportation company engaged in interstate commerce shall collect, demand, or receive, in the transaction of the business of interstate commerce, more than a reasonable rate of compensation for the transportation of freight of any description, or for the receiving, delivery, storage, or handling of property, or for the use or transportation of any railroad-car upon its railroad, or on any of the branches thereof, or upon any railroad it has the right, license, or permission to use, operate, or control, said transportation company shall be deemed guilty of extortion, which is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor.

SEC. 4. That if any transportation company engaged in interstate commerce shall, directly or indirectly, by any rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person a greater compensation for any service it may render in its transaction of interstate commerce than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person for doing for him, in a like business and under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, contemporaneously a like service, or if any such transportation company shall neglect or refuse to furnish the same facilities for the carriage, receiving, delivery, storage, and handling of interstate-commerce freights to one person that is at the same time furnished to any other person for the carriage, receiving, delivery, storage, and handling of such freights of the same class, and under substantially similar circumstances, such transportation company shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor.

SEC. 5. That whenever complaint is made to the commission, in such manner as it may prescribe, charging any transportation company engaged in interstate commerce with extortion or unjust discrimination in the transaction of such business, a statement of the charges thus made shall be forwarded to the transportation company, which shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable given time.

If such transportation company shall, within the time specified, make reparation for the injury done and the complaint shall be withdrawn, the case shall be dismissed, and the transportation company shall be relieved of liability for any other penalty for the particular violation of this act thus complained of.

If such transportation company shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified, or if it shall neglect or refuse to answer the same as required, or if either party to the proceeding shall demand a hearing, and there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating said complaint, it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the matters complained of, to determine all questions of fact at issue, to record its finding, and to furnish a report thereof to both parties.

And if it shall appear that the transportation company has been guilty of either extortion or unjust discrimination as charged, it shall be the duty of the commission to give notice to such company to discontinue the practice thereof forthwith, and to pay the complainant, within a reasonable given time, the damages, if any, to which the commission may find the complainant justly entitled in consequence thereof.

And if such damages shall be paid as required, and the commission shall be satisfied that the transportation company has ceased to practice the extortion or unjust discrimination complained of, an order to that effect shall be entered of record by the commission, and the transportation company shall be relieved of liability for any other penalty for the particular act complained of.

SEC. 6. That if any transportation company engaged in interstate commerce shall neglect or refuse to pay the damages assessed against it by the interstate commerce commission, and to desist from the further violation of this act, it shall be the duty of the commission to certify the facts to the district attorney of the United States for the judicial district in which the act complained of occurred; and it shall be the duty of the district attorney, at the request of the complainant, to forthwith commence such proceedings, in the name of the complainant, as may be necessary to recover any damages sustained by him, or to compel the transportation company to comply with the provisions of this act, or both; and the circuit court of the United States for said district shall have jurisdiction to try said cause, without regard to the citizenship of the parties. Costs shall be awarded as in other cases; but in case judgment is rendered against the defendant, the court may, in its discretion, allow to the district attorney a reasonable fee for prosecuting said cause, to be taxed as part of the costs; and in case of failure to recover, the complainant shall pay the costs of suit, attorney's fees excepted.

Any such transportation company that shall be convicted under the provisions of this act of either extortion or unjust discrimination shall forfeit and pay for each offense a fine of not exceeding $1,000.

Any such transportation company that shall neglect or refuse to make such annual reports as the commission may require, or that shall neglect or refuse to answer any question or to produce any book, paper, contract, or other document, or properly certified abstract thereof, called for by the commission in making any investigation under the authority of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000 for each offense herein described.

Any such transportation company or any person or persons that shall violate any of the provisions of this act not in this section specified, or that shall in any manner attempt to obstruct the enforcement of its provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 7. That each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $7,500, payable in the same manner as the salaries of judges of the courts of the United States. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $3,500, payable in like manner. The commission shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of such other employés as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. All necessary traveling expenses incurred by the commissioners, or by their employés under their orders, in making any investigation in any other place than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of itemized vouchers therefor. The commission shall be furnished by the Secretary of the Interior with suitable offices and all necessary office supplies. Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid to witnesses in the courts of the United States. All of the expenses of the commission shall be paid on the presentation of vouchers approved by the president of the commission and by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 8. That the commission may make such orders as it may deem necessary for the regulation of its business, and prescribe the forms to be used therein. A majority of the commission shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, except as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 9. That in making any investigation required by this act the commission shall have power to summon and require the attendance of witnesses, to administer oaths, and to require the production of all books, papers, contracts, and documents, or properly certified abstracts thereof, relating to the matter under investigation and necessary for the information of the commission in connection therewith. The commission is hereby authorized to conduct investigations in such portions of the United States as it may deem necessary, and for that purpose may delegate the powers conferred by this section to any member or members of the commission.

SEC. 10. That the commission is hereby authorized to require annual reports from all transportation companies engaged in interstate commerce, to fix the time and prescribe the manner in which such reports shall be made, and to require from such companies specific answers to all questions upon which the commission may need information. Such annual reports shall show in detail the amount of capital stock issued and the amounts paid therefor; the dividends paid; the number of stockholders; the funded and floating debts and the interest paid thereon; the cost and value of the company's property, franchises, and equipment, with a complete description of the same; the number of employés and the salaries paid each class; the amounts expended for improvements each year, and how expended; the monthly earnings and receipts from each branch of business and from all sources; the monthly operating and other expenses; the balances of profit and loss, and a complete exhibit of the financial operations of the company each year. Such reports shall also contain such information in relation to rates or regulations concerning fares or freights, or agreements, arrangements, or contracts with other companies as the commission may require.

SEC. 11. That the commission shall, on or before the 1st day in December in each year, make a report to the Secretary of the Interior, which shall be by him transmitted to Congress, and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports issued from the Interior Department. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of interstate commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation for the regulation of interstate commerce as the commission may deem necessary. And said commission shall precede its first report with an investigation of the subject of interstate commerce, which shall embrace the subjects of establishing a system of both maximum and minimum charges for transportation, and for the preservation of free competition within the limits so fixed; for the prohibition of discriminations of any kind whatever either in favor of or against cities, towns, or other localities, whether the same be competing or non-competing points, and for applying the same principle to transportation for individuals, firms, associations, or corporations in all matters relating to commerce among the States; for the preservation and enforcement of the right of shippers to select the lines and parts of lines over which their shipments shall pass, to the end that said commerce among the States may avail itself of the all-rail or part-rail and part-water routes of the country; for the prevention of such pooling arrangements and agreements to refrain from just competition as may tend to impose unreasonable burdens upon said commerce among the States, and for the protection of said commerce against unjust exactions based on a class of securities commonly denominated "watered stock;" and said commission, in conducting said investigation, shall be guided by such rules of action as will be fair, just, and equitable toward all of the interests involved, whether the same be private, public, or corporate, connected with the subject of commerce among the States.

SEC. 12. That the route of any transportation company engaged in the interstate commerce shall include all the railroad and water routes in use by such company, whether owned by said company or used by it under license, lease, or permission otherwise given. And it shall be unlawful for any transportation company as aforesaid to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, expressed or implied, to prevent, by change of time-schedule, carriage in different cars, or by other means or devices, the carriage of interstate commerce freights from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination, whether said freight is carried on one or several railroads, or partly by rail and partly by vessel. And no break of bulk, stoppage, or interruption made by said transportation company shall prevent the carriage of any interstate commerce freights from being and being treated as one continuous carriage from the place of shipment to the place of destination, unless such break, stoppage, or interruption was made in good faith for some necessary purpose, and without any intent to avoid or unnecessarily interrupt such continuous carriage or to evade any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 13. That the term "transportation company engaged in interstate commerce," as used in this act, shall be deemed and taken to mean any corporation, company, or individual now owning, operating, or using any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels, in whole or in part, which are run by or for any railroad company, making part of its route, or that may have the right, license, or permission to operate, use, or control any railroad or railroads, or any vessel or vessels, in whole or in part, provided said corporation, company, or individual is engaged in the business of transporting freights or property of any description by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, from one State into another State or Territory of the United States, "or from any Territory into any State or any other Territory;" and the provisions of this act shall apply to all persons, firms, and companies, and to all associations of persons or companies, whether incorporated or not, and to all associations of corporations engaged in thus transporting freights or property of any description, in the manner above set forth, from one State into any other State or Territory, or from any Territory into any State or any other Territory.

SEC. 14. That the provisions of this act shall be construed as applicable to all railroad or transportation companies engaged in the carrying of freight from any place in the United States through any foreign territory to any other place in the United States, or from any place in the United States to any place outside the United States: Provided, That this shall not apply to transportation wholly by water.

SEC. 15. That the sum of $90,000 is hereby appropriated for the use and purposes of this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1885, and the intervening time anterior thereto; and it is expressly provided that no pending litigation between railroad companies shall in any way be affected by this act.

SEC. 16. That nothing in this act contained shall be held to require any person, aggrieved by the act or omission of a transportation company within the provisions of this act, to pursue the remedy provided in sections 5 and 6 hereof for the ascertainment and recovery of damages on account thereof; but such person may, by civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction, maintain an action as though this act had not been passed; and in such cases the duties, obligations, liabilities, and responsibilities of such transportation company in all respects shall be the same as though said action had been commenced in pursuance of the remedy in said sections 5 and 6 provided.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], who is detained from the Senate by sickness in his family, but I am informed by his colleague [Mr. JONAS] that he would probably vote as I myself would, and therefore I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were here, I should vote "nay" and I believe he would vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BECK. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is absent. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. SABIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have been paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], but I voted supposing that he was present this morning. As I see he has not voted, I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. SABIN. I should vote "yea," if the Senator from West Virginia were present, and he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 12; as follows:

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 691) for the relief of William W. Thomas was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair now to lay before the Senate the next special order, being Order of Business 336. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3933) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4976, heretofore reported by the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1074, being the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement before the question is taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to make a statement on the pending question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed.

Mr. BLAIR. It will be recollected by the Senate that at the close of the last session the Senate was engaged in the consideration of House bill 2550, Calendar No. 863, entitled "A bill to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia." It was postponed, after being partially considered, until the 9th of December last, and I anticipated that at that time it would be disposed of. It was interfered with by various special orders, and from that day until the present time, although it came over substantially in the form of unfinished business from the last session, I have been seeking an opportunity to have it laid before the Senate and disposed of. It is a bill in which there is a very great public interest. During the interim from the 9th of December to the present time several of the Legislatures of the States have passed resolutions calling the attention of the Senate to this bill and urging action upon it, and many memorials have been sent to the Senate and to the other House of Congress, although the bill has already been passed by the other House, asking that the question be disposed of. I hope, now that the last month has been occupied by the interstate-commerce bill, which really ought not to have come in the way of this at all, as I think, that the Senate will consent to take up this bill and dispose of it. The bill urged by the Senator from Vermont may be an important bill; undoubtedly it will be disposed of; the Committee on Finance can always have this floor; but I submit that justice to the friends of this measure requires that it should be now considered.

Mr. MORRILL. I think I am in favor of the Senator's bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not open to debate. Does the Senator from Vermont ask unanimous consent?

Mr. MORRILL. I do, for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that he may be heard on this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Vermont will proceed.

Mr. MORRILL. It was the understanding when the bill in regard to silver coinage was reported that it should be considered yesterday morning. On account of the prolongation of the debate on the interstate-commerce bill, which has progressed until this time, it was not so considered. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that he call up his bill to-morrow morning in the morning hour, as I think it will not attract much debate. I must insist on my motion.

Mr. BLAIR. I think there are several bills that are already——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent?

Mr. BLAIR. I would not like the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont to go with the idea that I acquiesced in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire ask unanimous consent to be heard?

Mr. BLAIR. Yes; unless the consent already given covers that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think it covers further remarks. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to be heard again on this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAIR. Thanking the Senate for its indulgence, I wish simply to say that the morning hour, as I understand, is already occupied by one or more bills, the friends of which understand that they have the right of way, and whatever may have been the understanding lately arrived at in regard to this bill which the Senator from Vermont moves to take up at this time, much earlier understandings were arrived at between the friends of this measure and of the interstate-commerce bill and one or two others, that it should be heard so far as their assistance could enable it to receive a hearing as soon as the interstate-commerce bill was disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that I may put a question to my friend from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to be heard on this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will include in that request that he have unanimous consent to answer my question. The question is whether he intends, if his motion be carried, to press the bill until it is finally disposed of by the Senate, or whether he desires to have it brought up now simply for the purpose of submitting some remarks in support of the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, Mr. President, I do not——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Vermont will proceed. The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRILL. I am ready to submit some remarks, but I assure the Senator that I shall not occupy a large amount of time—not more than twenty-five or thirty minutes. It has never been my habit to be advocating a bill that I do not intend to press.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I inquire what is the special order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is Order of Business 336, being the bill (H. R. 3993) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I be allowed to put a question? I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Nebraska making remarks?

Mr. MORRILL. I object to further debate on this motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Does the Senator seriously object to a question being propounded to him at this stage of the matter?

Mr. MORRILL. I said, although it was not heard by the Chair, that I objected to further debate at this time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Do you object to my asking a question?

Mr. MORRILL. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please address the Chair. The Chair asked for objection and heard none. The Senator from Nebraska is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire merely to ask the Senator from Vermont whether the bill now proposed to be taken up is a House bill or a Senate bill.

Mr. MORRILL. A House bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But entirely changed and remodeled by the report of the Senate committee. Then I merely want to appeal, if I am in order, to the Senate to remember that there is now before us in order the Texas Pacific forfeiture bill, which has been lying here a long time, a matter of great importance, and I trust that it having been made special order by a vote of two-thirds of the body, it will not now be displaced by a majority vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that the Senate now proceed to consider the trade-dollar bill, so called.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 37, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Groome,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,

So the motion was agreed to.

COINAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That until July 1, 1885, United States trade-dollars, if not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, shall be received at the office of the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States in exchange for a like amount, dollar for dollar, of standard silver dollars of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the trade-dollars received by the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States shall not be paid out or in any other manner issued, but, at the expense of the United States, shall be transmitted to the coinage mints and shall be regarded and treated as silver bullion, and, at their bullion value, shall be deducted from the amount of bullion required to be purchased and coined by the act of February 28, 1878, and shall be recoined into standard silver dollars according to the provisions of said act: Provided, That the amount to be so deducted as provided in this section shall not exceed $500,000 in any month.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws authorizing the coinage and issuance of United States trade-dollars are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That the President is hereby authorized to renew negotiations with the states of the "Latin Union," and with other foreign powers, for the purpose of making treaties with them in order to secure such co-operation as may enable the nations agreeing thereto to open their respective mints to the free coinage of silver, with full legal-tender power, at an agreed ratio to gold.

SEC. 5. That in case no such treaties as aforesaid shall have been made and ratified prior to August 1, 1886, then and thereafter so much of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," as authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase from time to time of silver bullion, at the market price thereof, not less than two million dollars' worth per month nor more than four million dollars' worth per month, and cause the same to be coined into such dollars monthly as fast as so purchased, shall be suspended.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out section 5.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose the Senator from Kansas may move that amendment, though it is not exactly in order now, as I have the floor I believe.

Mr. INGALLS. I was recognized, I thought, by the presiding officer.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Kansas arose and was recognized by the Chair, and the amendment is certainly in order at this time, the Senator having the floor. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out section 5 of the proposed amendment, as follows:

SEC. 5. That in case no such treaties as aforesaid shall have been made and ratified prior to August 1, 1886, then and thereafter so much of the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," as authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase from time to time of silver bullion, at the market price thereof, not less than two million dollars' worth per month nor more than four million dollars' worth per month, and cause the same to be coined into such dollars monthly as fast as so purchased, shall be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, let me say at once that the amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance to the bill under consideration are accepted by me on the idea that it is the duty of Congress to take some immediate action upon the subjects here presented. More heroic remedies, as I believe, would be more salutary; but if any legislation is to be accomplished at the present session some deference must be paid to the conflicting opinions here and elsewhere prevailing, and the Committee on Finance have reached the conclusion that the House bill, as it has been proposed to be amended, should receive the support of even those Senators who may not be completely satisfied with the original bill or with every part of the amendments.

Instead of indulging in elaborate argumentation, I shall group as compactly as I can the main facts which surround the subject in hand, trusting that these facts may have that influence which their cogency may seem to demand, and no more. For my own part I confess that I do not feel that the Government of the United States is under the slightest legal or moral obligation to redeem the silver coin known as the trade-dollar. It originated solely from a supposed demand for export, and was stamped under the act of February 12, 1873, as containing 420 grains of silver, and at that time was equal to 118.6 cents in United States notes or 102.5 cents in gold. It is true that by some inadvertence it happened to be included as a legal tender by the coinage act of 1873, the same as subsidiary silver coins, to the extent only of $5 for three years, or until July 22, 1876, when even its limited legal-tender character was repealed. Up to that time the whole amount issued was $15,418,450. About this time silver began to depreciate in value, and United States notes had so much appreciated that a paper dollar was worth more than a trade-dollar. Speculators, therefore, carried silver bullion to the mints and exchanged the same for trade-dollars, not for export, but for the purpose of profit, if not of fraud, so that the amount coined in the fiscal years of 1877 and 1878 was over $20,000,000, swelling the total amount to $35,959,360.

The Government, being paid for barely the cost of coinage, never had any interest or profit in the trade-dollars, never received them at the Treasury nor paid them out, but furnished them only to parties who ostensibly wanted them in this form to take silver bullion out of the country and as a special favor to silver miners. Somebody blundered. There are supposed to be from seven to ten millions of these trade-dollars now held by our own people, partly by those who have received them at full value and partly by those who have received them in barter trade, or who, as brokers, have purchased them at a discount. But however held, whether helplessly and hopelessly or otherwise, our mints were left open for the birth and three years' growth of this public nuisance, and perhaps some mode for its removal should be provided. I would have preferred to have paid a very moderate premium above their bullion value, as was recommended by the President, and thus to take them out of the way, rather than to redeem them, as is now proposed, with what must be to the owners practically equivalent to an exchange dollar for dollar in gold. Some of these holders of the trade-dollar are entitled to charity, but any discrimination is hardly possible. To reach one we are forced to reach many. They have held this anomalous coin for a long time and at some inconvenience. It is for Congress to decide whether any relief shall be given or not. I have, with some reluctance, consented to the measure in order to relieve the country from at least one of the embarrassing incidents which surround the silver question.

It is proper to say that the Director of the Mint is very confident that the trade-dollars which were exported have mainly gone into the melting-pot, and that none can or will be returned. If, however, more of these should be unearthed or be brought here from Oriental nations for redemption than what has been estimated, the cost of the measure will be correspondingly increased. It will be observed that, however large may be the amount presented to the Treasury, the purchase of silver bullion is not to be suddenly interrupted, and will be only temporarily diminished monthly to the amount of $500,000.

The next amendment to the House bill proposed by the Committee on Finance, it will be seen, contemplates a renewed effort to obtain by concert with the Latin Union nations, as well as with others, a larger use of silver on a fixed and common ratio with gold. It may not be improper for me to say that a most unfounded imputation has been indulged by some parties that the members of the former monetary commission were not sincere in the purpose to accomplish the object of their mission, but the only refutation which the false suggestion requires is to bring to our recollection the names of the individuals of which that important commission was composed, names as much distinguished for fidelity to their country as for their personal purity and ability.

It is again sometimes recklessly suggested that the official administrators of the Treasury Department have not given silver dollars a fair chance to circulate or to obtain a foothold among our people. And yet it is the fact that the Treasury Department has paid, and has ever been ready to pay, the cost of the transportation of silver to any and to all the remotest regions of our country whenever and wherever it was wanted. The difficulty is the same as that which pursues the "bad penny;" it will return. The people have not been ready to receive or to hold it. To show how unjust and groundless this suggestion is we have only to compare the present outstanding circulation of the silver dollar with that in our previous history. In eighty-five years, or up to 1878, the whole amount of silver dollars coined at our mints was only $8,045,838, and the amount in circulation must have been far less. Since 1878 we have coined the immense sum of $191,947,194, and have got into circulation, according to the Director of the Mint, $41,350,040, or about five times as much as was ever coined in all our previous history. If this does not show a pushing and industrious zeal on the part of the Treasury Department to get the silver dollar into circulation I know not what would.

It is evident that all of our people prefer a paper currency, if it is only the equal of our standard coins. It is far more convenient, as the whole commercial world have ascertained, and the whole world, therefore, has not suddenly changed its habits, notwithstanding the oversanguine expectations of the promoters of the silver bill of 1878, who were unquestionably honest in their zeal, and who will be ready to claim that it has accomplished a great and important service. Certainly no one has ever pretended that it could be successful without the co-operation of other nations, and it should not be charged to these friends of bimetallism that they intended an insidious measure to separate the United States from the great commercial nations of the world by fastening upon us the silver standard of monometallism.

It is true that there are some obstacles in the way of obtaining a concurrent agreement among foreign nations for a larger use of silver, but apparently not so great as heretofore, and, if the present bill should become a law, I have no question but what the coming administration would endeavor to carry it out in absolute good faith.

It is the opinion of our Director of the Mint, a thorough-going silver advocate, that our efforts to obtain the co-operation of foreign nations would be considerably aided if the coinage of the silver dollar were to be suspended in advance of any mission in that direction, instead of making the suspension contingent, to take effect, if to take effect at all, in August, 1886. I should concur in this opinion, for the reason that such a suspension on our part would bring the question to bear upon Europe at once, and much more sharply than upon America, and self-preservation would be likely to induce early co-operation in the direction of a permanent and common use of both silver and gold throughout the great commercial nations of the world.

I do not wish to be understood as conceding that the co-operation of even many nations would add to the value of silver anything more than would naturally arise from an increased demand. If the supply ever largely exceeds the demand, the intrinsic value for commercial purposes must go down. Neither law nor sentiment, under such circumstances, will permit silver to escape the universal law of trade. But I am willing to attempt some arrangement with other nations, and do believe that a wider demand might thereby be created for the use of silver.

I would by no means be an alarmist, and while even with our present laws in force we might not fall upon silver coin alone as the standard of the money of the United States in the present year, possibly not in the next, yet the fixed line we are now pursuing, it must be admitted by all, leads in the end, whether near or remote, to no other possible result. A calamitous harvest, a failure of the wheat or cotton crop, or the dreaded presence of some pestilence, might bring the disaster on us speedily, in spite of our considerable power of resistance. Whenever our foreign exchange shall call for large shipments of gold, our resources to maintain both the gold and silver standard will be put to a crucial test.

It is plain that the law of 1878, by which we have purchased silver bullion to the amount of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 per month, has not sustained the price of silver, and so far as that was the object it has been a disastrous failure. The price of silver, United States standard, per ounce, February 28, 1878, was 108.76 cents, and the price January 10, 1885, was 98.64 cents, showing that a decline had followed the silver statute of over 10 cents per ounce; and the intrinsic value of the silver dollar January 10, 1885, was only 84.77 cents. This policy has turned out to be of no benefit to our silver mines, while it is full of evil omens to all other interests of our country.

Upon the discovery of America, and the large increase of the product of silver, its relative value was immensely diminished. According to Humboldt the proportion of gold and silver, which before the discovery was as 10 to 1, gradually changed to 16 to 1. The recent much larger increase of silver is most likely to make history repeat itself. The vast recent increase of iron and of copper has reduced the price to the amount of one-third or one-half of their former value, and silver will hardly escape the fate of other metals.

But it is said, and not in the way of jest, that if we had only coined silver dollars to the maximum limit of the law of 1878, or four millions per month, the price of silver would have immediately advanced. That is, if we had bought the whole product of our silver mines, and some millions more, and hoarded it, the Lord knows where, then with little or no silver in the market the price would have been greatly augmented. A similar ingenious policy might find some favor with the owners of copper and iron mines, but none of them have hitherto ventured to suggest it.

It may be said that there are no breakers ahead, and that masterly inactivity is the true policy. Every business man in the country knows that the first moment any considerable difference in value shall appear in commercial transactions between gold and silver, or when gold shall command a premium, that moment a great contraction will follow; gold will disappear, and the business of the country will be conducted without it.

The net gold in the Treasury, deducting gold certificates, November 1, 1883, was $158,039,000, and on January 29, 1885, it had been reduced to $129,700,000. Thus, while gold in the Treasury appears to diminish, the receipts are also diminishing in large measure. Nothing but gold was formerly used in the lawful payment of duties on imports, but it is now far otherwise. In six months, from July to December of 1883, inclusive, the receipts for customs at the port of New York of gold and gold certificates were $54,114,000; but the receipts for the same months in 1884 in gold and gold certificates were only $22,268,000, while the entire receipts from customs at that port (where three-fourths of the revenue from customs is collected) for the same period were $64,094,000, showing that but a little more than one-third was actually paid in gold or its equivalent.

Should any such diminution of receipts in gold go on for any lengthy eriod, it is manifest that the Treasury would have not much left but silver and silver certificates. As yet the gold has not gone out of the country and is supposed to be held here, though not by the Treasury. Gold that would come into the country is easily intercepted by bills of exchange and used abroad, especially when the rate of interest is higher in London than it is in New York.

There has been only a slight contraction of the currency by national banks, because the receipts for the present fiscal year have fallen off, and it is estimated will be less than last year, and for the past three months, therefore, none of the 3 per cent. bonds appear to have been called for or paid.

It is sometimes rather triumphantly said that large sums of gold have been deposited in the Treasury in exchange for silver certificates, but this only proves that the depositors fully understood that the Government would never be in a condition to force the payment of such certificates in silver, and that all of them ultimately must find their way into the Treasury on the par of gold in the payment of duties.

The Latin nations have kept silver on a par with gold by a limitation of its coinage or by ceasing to coin it in excess. Any occasional surplus has to be gathered up and held, as is done by the Bank of France; but then the French Government does not keep its mint constantly at work glutting the market.

If we can make an arrangement with other nations, or if we were to cease for some time the coinage of the silver dollar, we might hope to maintain all of our gold and silver in practical circulation, and there would be no danger of any undue contraction of the currency.

In seven years, with unprecedented effort, about 41,000,000 of the silver dollars have been pushed into circulation. We have coined within the same time and piled up in the Treasury in addition thereto 150,000,000 more; and could we be equally successful hereafter as we have been for seven years, it will require twenty-five years to exhaust our present stock. If any one can offer any good reason why we ought to keep our mints at work much longer in coining the silver dollar I should be glad to hear it. If it is useless, as I believe it to be, without some foreign auxiliary co-operation, it would seem to be sound policy to obtain that co-operation or to suspend the perpetual annual appropriation for the purchase of silver bullion, the fixed amount of which is not less than twenty-four millions nor more than forty-eight millions. This very large annual expenditure of millions of dollars should show some good results or not go on forever.

Mr. Cernuschi in France, and Mr. Horton in America, the learned and foremost leaders of silver advocates, or of bimetallism, anxious as they are to bring silver into equal use with gold throughout the world, have earnestly urged that the United States should at once cease the coinage of the silver dollar as the most effective measure to promote the result they have at heart and with which they have been so long identified. But there is apparently some unreadiness to accept the disinterested counsel of these eminent leaders, and it is not proposed by the present bill to discontinue the silver coinage under any circumstances until August, 1886. By that time not less than 42,000,000 more of these dollars will have been added to the 192,000,000 coined since 1878; and if we should finally fail of any arrangement with other nations, which are quite as deeply interested as we are, it is inconceivable that any one here should not feel that the time will have come to say, "Hold, enough!"

The amount of silver certificates issued up to December 31, 1884, was $138,168,291, and of these $23,302,380 were held in the Treasury. This queer form of paper money is rapidly increasing, and appears to be usurping the place of United States notes as well as of national-bank notes. But it is by far the dearest and most expensive paper currency ever invented. For the present they can be used in the payment of customs duties, and thus far serve the purposes of the best standard of money; but beyond this use they can only command the value of the silver nominally represented, which is all the Government in the last resort promises to redeem them with. It would seem to be very undesirable that this kind of currency should be indefinitely expanded and forced into the hands of those who may not know that they hold a promise of the Government which may ultimately prove much less valuable than that of United States notes.

The depression which now pervades so many of our industrial interests appears even more conspicuously throughout the leading nations of the world. The giants of steam and water power everywhere seem to be taking a rest. Money was never cheaper; but confidence in any business enterprises for the time is lost. The vital spark in business industries is the solid and unchanging character of the money in circulation. The financial world is always timid when a skeleton in the closet is suspected. At present the coin and paper money in circulation is very abundant. I will give the following statement, which will show our present condition in this respect as contrasted with that of 1878:

From this statement it will appear that there has been since 1878 the very extraordinary expansion of the money in circulation from $1,005,686,408 to $1,723,947,855, or a total increase of $718,261,447, being an actual incease of over $100,000,000 in each and every year. There is now, therefore, a superabundance of the circulating medium, and we are mainly called upon to preserve it from fluctuations and to guard against any possible contraction from any withdrawal of the large amount of gold held by our own country, which so largely serves to keep us in harmony with the commercial world and so well preserves the stability of the finances of our own people.

I do not wish to demonetize silver or to reduce the amount in circulation, but I would make it safe and practicable to increase the amount held in our financial institutions as well as in the hands of the people. The present bill and amendments are intended to provide against any untoward combination of events that shall leave us with only one of the precious metals to support our standard of money. We greatly need them both. It may be far off, it may never happen, but if we should be at any time driven to the single standard of silver it would be a great disaster, affecting the value of all property and of all investments. The blow, should it ever happen, would strike with the greatest severity upon the workingmen of the country, who would suddenly find their wages largely reduced by the cheaper mode of legal-tender payment. The employés in the United States are better paid than in any European country, and the London Times, in speaking on this subject, September 11, 1883, says:

> With regard to the remuneration of labor, assuming the produce of labor to be 100 in Great Britain, 56 parts go to the laborer, 21 to the capital, and 23 to government. In France 41 parts go to labor, 36 to capital, and 23 to government. In the United States 72 parts go to labor, 23 to capital, and 5 to Government.

This shows that for any depreciation of the currency which may at any time arise the laboring men of the country must bear the brunt of the loss. Capital will lose something, and the Government will also lose something by the loss occasioned through the cheaper currency with which customs duties must be paid—but labor will lose nearly three times as much as both capital and the Government. Of all the measures which may affect the welfare of laboring men, there are none more insidious or more disastrous than those which tender remuneration for labor in a depreciated currency, or a currency below that of the standard of value throughout the civilized world. We can not too carefully guard against such a far-reaching disaster.

I believe the measure before us will be some contribution, not so great, perhaps, as I could wish, toward the preservation of both gold and silver as the common standard of the money of the American people, and I leave the subject, only commending it to the deliberate judgment of the Senate.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I think the hour is altogether too late to-day to enter into any lengthened discussion of the bill, and it is certainly too late in the session to undertake to renew again the discussion of the propriety of continuing the silver coinage of the country, because no action can be taken by Congress at this session if the debate upon that question were protracted, as it was a few years ago, during some three or four weeks. Therefore, unless invited and strongly urged to do so by the opponents of the bill which has been reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate, I shall not touch upon that subject at all. I simply want to state the case as it appears before the Senate to-day. It will not take me ten minutes to do that, and then I shall sit down.

Mr. President, it has been argued in committee and elsewhere that there was no moral obligation and no legal obligation resting upon the Government to redeem the trade-dollar. I use the word "redeem" because it is a convenient term, although perhaps not a strictly proper one to employ. I think that a full answer to this statement is found in a report made by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Folger, in 1883, in stronger and better terms than I can employ in regard to it, and I will read the report of the Secretary. He says:

> The act of 1873 made the silver coins of the United States, and hence the trade-dollars, a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not over $5. Thus the reading of the laws taught the people that the trade-dollar was a coin of their sovereignty, and for the redemption of which, at an unabated value, their Government was bound. The real legislative purpose is to be blindly sought for in tradition or in the record of Congressional discussion and is indicated in the joint resolution of 1876, which took away from this coin the legal-tender quality of it, and held down the coinage of it to the call for it for exportation.
> It is plain that a busy people, finding this coin afloat in the channels of business styled a coin of the United States, would readily believe that it was an authentic issue of the Government, and to be redeemed by the Government the same as other money put out by it. From time to time, however, as it suits scheming men and the occasion fits, a hue and cry is raised against it, it is discredited in the marts, and unwary holders suffer loss or inconvenience. As it is a coin of the United States, having the image and superscription thereof, sanctioned as such by penalties upon the counterfeiting of it and once dignified as a legal tender in payment of debts and dues, it should be restored to its first state, or called in at its nominal value and melted. In the judgment of this Department it should be thus called in and melted.

In addition to the objection that I have somewhere heard stated, that there was neither a moral nor a legal obligation resting upon the Government, there is another claim made to the effect that the trade-dollars held in this country have been very largely bought up by speculators for the purpose of profiting upon them, under the belief that at some time the Government would undertake to redeem them. I have made a careful investigation as to the condition of affairs existing in my own State touching the trade-dollar, and I have in my hand a large number of reports made to me by banking institutions, very many of them savings-banks, also corporations and individuals, who have taken the trade-dollar in the way of business with the full expectation that the Government some time would redeem its own coin. The most of them were taken by these people prior to the passage of the resolution of 1876, which did not destroy the trade-dollar as a coin of the country, but simply robbed it of its legal-tender quality. I will not detain the Senate by reading any considerable number of these communications, but I will give you an illustration of how they run by reading a few.

One bank reports that it has in its bank vaults, together with customers who also have deposited trade-dollars in the vaults upon which they have borrowed money, pledging them at their bullion value to raise money to be used in their business, and are paying interest upon the money because they can not use the coin that the Government itself has issued for that purpose—I say one bank reports that there are 9,500 trade-dollars held by the bank and its customers, and every one of them received at its face value. Another bank reports $7,000 held in like manner; received at a discount, or as bullion, none. Another bank reports $33,572, a savings bank, held by itself and its customers. Another bank reports in like terms $13,600; none taken at a discount; none received as bullion, but all held by the bank and by its customers. Another reports $6,000; none at a discount, none received as bullion. Another reports $3,343 in like manner. Another reports $2,357; received at a discount, $70.

I might read all these reports, but I have given the Senate enough for illustration. About the same condition of things runs through all the reports, and these I hold in my hand are only a small portion of those I have received.

Mr. President, I shall address myself strictly for a very few moments to the legal condition of the trade-dollar in the hands of the people of the country to-day. As I understand it, Mr. President, the trade-dollar holds an anomalous position among the coins of the United States. By the act of February 12, 1873, it was made a coin of the United States. Section 15 of the act reads as follows:

> That the silver coins of the United States shall be a trade-dollar, a half-dollar or fifty-cent piece, a quarter-dollar or twenty-five-cent piece, a dime or ten-cent piece, and the weight of the trade-dollar shall be 420 grains troy * * * and said coins shall be a legal tender for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment.

There can be no question that the act which authorized the coinage of the trade-dollar first made it a coin of the United States, and secondly a legal tender at its nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5.

Acting under authority of this law, the Government coined 15,631,000 trade-dollars between July, 1873, and the 22d of July, 1876, when by joint resolution of Congress the legal-tender quality was taken away from the trade-dollar. The Government, however, continued the coinage, as was stated in the resolution of 1876, for export, and $20,328,360 more trade-dollars were coined before the existing coinage act was passed in 1878, which stopped the coinage of all silver dollars except the standard dollar.

This is a true statement of the law, and all the law, touching the trade-dollar. It will be seen that Congress made no provision for redeeming the coins which got into circulation while a legal tender, but intensified the very fraud which it denounced in the act of 1876 by continuing the coinage until 1878.

It is therefore proper to inquire what is the present moral and legal responsibility of the Government in respect to the trade-dollar.

Is not the act creating it (the trade-dollar), which says "the silver coins of the United States shall be a trade-dollar," &c., the unrepealed law of the land to-day? Is it not a coin and dollar to-day, notwithstanding the act of 1876 taking from it its legal-tender quality?

There has never been any legislation to strike the trade-dollar off the list of coins of the United States. The act of 1873 both made it a coin and a legal tender; the act of 1876 merely declared it should no longer be a legal tender. It is evident, therefore, that the law making it a coin of the United States has never been repealed. We have now two provisions of law—the one declaring the trade-dollar a legal tender; the other declaring it not a legal tender, which is the ruling provision. The first never has been expressly amended or expressly repealed. Is it not, therefore, technically an open question whether even the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar has been destroyed?

Even if we should grant that the legal-tender quality of the trade-dollar was taken away by the joint resolution of July, 1876, another question arises. The act of February 28, 1878, which authorizes the coinage of the present standard silver dollar, reads as follows:

> Be it enacted, That there shall be coined silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy standard silver, which coins, together with all silver dollars heretofore coined by the United States, of like weight and fineness, shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all debts and dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract.

The trade-dollar was not expressly excepted from the provisions of this law, and the only ground for assuming that it was to be excepted is that the trade-dollar had a greater weight than the standard silver dollar. The assumption, therefore, that the law of 1878 excluded the trade-dollar from the operation of the legal-tender clause rests upon no expression of intent contained in the law itself.

It was not generally understood or believed that it was to be the policy of the Government after the legislation of 1878 to refuse the dollar of 420 grains while it was coining with full legal-tender power a dollar of less weight and less intrinsic value. To coin money and regulate its value is a superior power inherent in the Government; but what moral right has the Government to so change its coinage laws as to demonetize in the hands of the people the coins theretofore issued as a legal tender without first making suitable provision for withdrawing said coins from circulation? In its treatment of the trade-dollar the Government seems inclined to ignore its obligations regarding that coin entirely. To say that this is disreputable is to use a mild term. No government having a decent regard for its credit would commit such a wrong upon its own people.

Casting aside all questions of law or morals touching the coinage of the trade-dollar after the act of July, 1876, it certainly will not be argued that as to those coined prior to that date and pursuant to the law of 1873, which made them a legal tender, the Government is not legally bound to either restore them to the same position they occupied as coins or redeem them in legal silver dollars.

Let me refer you to the report of the Director of the Mint for the year 1879, in which he gives the amount of trade-dollars coined each year from July, 1873, to July 22, 1876, when the joint resolution was passed taking away from those coins their legal-tender quality.

The Director of the Mint gives 15,631,000 trade-dollars as having been coined during that period, and it was the only silver dollar of the United States that was coined, and it circulated as money, and only about $12,000,000 of this 15,631,000 trade-dollars were ever exported. It is claimed, however, that inasmuch as the trade-dollar was made by the Government for the purpose of export to foreign countries, we are under no obligation to redeem it; but the Government made it a coin, the only coin in the nature of a silver dollar that it was issuing, gave to it a legal-tender power, issued $15,600,000, and then repudiated them and demonetized them in the hands of the people. Now as to these coins will it be said, as a reason why they should not be redeemed, that they were intended for export? Read the law. Examine the coin. There is no word in the law and no mark upon the coin which reveals to the holder any such intention on the part of Congress. For three years prior to the 22d of July, 1876, the trade-dollar was the only silver dollar that was coined by the United States. It went into circulation at home because it was needed, and it remained in circulation, as it would be to-day had not Congress destroyed it and left it a worthless token in the hands of the holders.

Suppose, for the sake of the argument, they were intended for export. As about eight millions are in this country to-day, it is very evident all that were coined were not exported, or, if exported, have returned to the country, and hold the same attitude and relation to the Government as do those that never left the country. This is true also as to the entire issue prior at least to July, 1876. As to those coined after the legal-tender quality was taken away, the equities involved are all on the side of the holders, the coin getting into circulation through the failure of the Government to so stamp the coin as to leave no chance for deception as to its status. We are brought to the conclusion, then, that both in law and equity the holder of the trade-dollar has the right to demand its redemption by the Government.

Now one word as to the bill under consideration, and to this I wish to call the attention of the Senate only for a moment.

It proposes to give the holders standard silver dollars in exchange for trade-dollars not defaced or mutilated. This is in accordance with existing law as to all defaced or mutilated coins of either gold or silver, and therefore works no injustice in this case. Moreover, a large proportion of the trade-dollars coined by the United States were exported and have been accepted and stamped by other nations as their own coin, and in this way became a part of the circulation of that country. A recent careful investigation reveals the fact that but few of our trade-dollars are found in the marts of trade in China and elsewhere; and as they were of greater intrinsic value than the coin there in circulation, it favors the presumption that they are being hoarded or have found their way to the melting-pot. In any event, it is not probable that any considerable number of them will find their way back to the United States in a condition requiring the Government to redeem them under this provision of the bill.

Therefore I assume that perhaps no more than eight or ten million trade-dollars are to-day in existence that will be returned to and demand exchange from the Government.

The next section provides for their recoinage into standard silver dollars, but in such limited quantities as will not perceptibly affect the operations of the Government in the purchase of bullion for the coinage of standard silver dollars or increase the number coined.

The last section relates to an entirely different subject, and one of vast importance at this time.

It provides for an international conference and legislation to enforce its decress, assuming "that, gold and silver being proper metals for coinage," their relative value can be best ascertained and rendered stable by conference and co-operation with other leading commercial nations. That such an agreement, considering the experience of the past in this direction, is possible no one will attempt to assert, but no Senator, whatever his views upon the subject of a double standard, can doubt the wisdom of this proceeding, so far as it relates to the conference itself. In case, however, no agreement is reached, the bill proposes to suspend the coinage of the silver dollar on and after August 1, 1886.

The effect of this provision can not fail to have some influence upon the final determination of the conference touching the double standard, to say nothing of the good effect such a suspension will have upon the financial condition of our own country, considering as we must the present low and lowering value of silver bullion. Before August, 1886, we shall have about two hundred and fifty millions of silver dollars in the Treasury vaults; and I submit to every Senator, whatever may be his views about the silver dollar, if it be not the part of wisdom to pause and take our reckoning anew before committing the Government irrevocably to a monetary policy which in the judgment of many of the best financial minds in the country leads to ultimate disaster and ruin. This is the simple issue presented here. If the conference fails, the bill simply asks that we wait and consider well our next step before taking it.

That is all there is in the legislation here proposed, Mr. President; first to pay the obligations of the Government with respect to its own coin, the trade-dollar; the next step, that the trade-dollar shall be sent to the mints and coined into the standard dollar, and shall not be again issued; that the amount thus received shall form part and only a small part under the provisions of this bill of the $2,000,000 of bullion which the Government under the act of 1878 is allowed or required to purchase and make into standard dollars monthly.

As to the other section of the bill, an international conference is provided for again, to get the states of the Latin Union, the commercial states of Europe, to act conjointly with us in an attempt to keep silver and gold at par with each other and to make the two metals run side by side in doing the business of the world. In the event, however, that the conference fails, it is proposed to discontinue the coinage of the standard silver dollar; and it is proposed in this bill to give notice, in advance of such conference, to every other nation that we have tried it; that the United States alone can not maintain the equality of these two metals, and that we do not propose to try to do it longer.

Mr. BOWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Colorado if he desires to go on with his remarks at this late hour?

Mr. BOWEN. No; I prefer to say what I have to say to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado will be entitled to the floor when the consideration of the bill shall be resumed to-morrow.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BECK. Before that is done I desire to say a word, if the Senate will allow me.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. BECK. It has been stated by the chairman of the committee, and by the member of the Committee on Finance from New Jersey, that this was the report of the Finance Committee. It is in one sense, and yet it was understood and agreed among us all that there was hardly a provision in it that has the concurrence of a majority of the committee. The fifth and sixth sections did barely have a majority, and other sections were also opposed. I desire the Senate to understand that this is not a unanimous report by any manner of means.

That is all I desire to say now.

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to submit at this moment a conference report.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, and 7; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
JOHN J. INGALLS,
AUSTIN F. PIKE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN F. FOLLETT,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont or any one in charge of the pending bill to allow it to be laid aside informally at this time, in order that the contract-labor bill, House bill 2550, of which I spoke some time ago, may be considered at this time. The bill is a short one. I do not think it will excite discussion. I think it can be very readily disposed of this evening. I ask that the pending order be informally laid aside that it may be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the Order of Business?

Mr. BLAIR. Eight hundred and sixty-three.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not see the chairman of the Finance Committee in his seat. I would ask the Senator from New Hampshire not to displace the pending bill.

Mr. BLAIR. My request was that it be laid aside informally that the bill to which I referred might be considered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. This bill being the continuing business.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not believe the bill which the Senator from New Hampshire has charge of will be able to get through as readily as he thinks, although I am not aware of any opposition to it on my part. I am in favor of it with some amendments; but it is very late now, and we shall get into some wrangle about it if it is taken up. He might as well let it go over until to-morrow, I think, and therefore I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 4, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. BELFORD, representing the State of Colorado, appeared and took his seat.

REPORT OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the House, under the statute, for reference to the Committee on Printing, a concurrent resolution of the Senate, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 30, 1885.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1884, for distribution by said Superintendent.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN ENGROSSED BILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask consent of the House to submit also at this time a House bill, which has been recalled from the Senate by the action of the House for the purpose of correcting a clerical error, the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 691) for the relief of William W. Thomas.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 30, 1885.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 691) for the relief of William W. Thomas.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the corrections to be made in this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out in line 13 the words "June 30" and insert "March 3;" in line 14 strike out "64" and insert "65;" in lines 20 and 21 strike out "June 30" and insert "March 3;" in line 22 strike out "65" and insert "64;" in line 27 strike out "80" and insert "60;" so that it will read as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to William W. Thomas, of Portland, in the State of Maine, the sum of $309 (being the amount of coupons of United States bonds lost by him, and now unpaid, namely, coupons due December 15, 1867, of five-hundred-dollar 7.30 notes, numbered 132909, 132911, 142262, and 142268, act of March 3, 1865, dated June 15, 1865; also coupons due January 15, 1868, of one-thousand-dollar 7.30 notes, numbered 24199, 24204, 39406, and 64136, act of March 3, 1864, dated July 15, 1864; and coupons due January 1, 1868, of bonds numbered 1437, 86826, and 86827, for $1,000 each, act of July 17, 1861), upon said Thomas giving a bond of indemnity in double the amount to be paid, with sureties satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection these corrections will be made in the bill, and the same will be returned to the Senate as corrected.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule of the House adopted on yesterday, which the Clerk will now read, the order of business for to-day is changed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That each morning during the remainder of this session, immediately after the approval of the Journal, there shall be set apart one hour for motions to take up and consider such bills or resolutions on any of the calendars of the House, or on the Speaker's table, or bills favorably reported from the calendars undisposed of, as the member making the motion may designate. And the bills or resolutions so designated shall be immediately considered, unless objected to by at least ten members. But no bill or resolution taken up for consideration under this order shall be debated for more than ten minutes, which time shall be equally divided between the supporters and the opponents of the measure. If the yeas and nays shall be ordered on any such bill or resolution, or any proposed amendment thereto, and the call of the roll shall be commenced before the expiration of the said one hour, the same shall be completed before the regular order of business is entered upon: Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees, or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour begins at seventeen minutes past 12 o'clock.

PUBLIC BUILDING, COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

Mr. PUSEY. Mr. Speaker, under the operation of the rule adopted on yesterday, I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 441) for the completion of a public building at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. PUSEY. I ask the reading of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury in this connection showing the necessity for the construction of this building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first question is, Shall the bill be considered?

Mr. HOLMAN. What constitutes an objection to the consideration of a bill under this rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that under this rule a bill called up in its proper order shall be immediately considered unless there shall be objection made by ten or more members to its present consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the objection come in after the bill has been considered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the rule is imperative and clear in its language that the bill shall be considered unless the objection of ten members shall be interposed. The bill is read in the hearing of the House in order that members may determine whether or not they will object to its consideration under the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. But is it not proper, prior to asking objections to the consideration of the bill, that the report should be laid before the House in order to inform the House as to the nature of the measure proposed to be considered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the report could only be read within the time allowed for debate under the rule. It forms no part of the bill itself, and is not necessarily read, and can not be read, except by unanimous consent, prior to asking objection of the House to the consideration of the measure. If the report shall be first read, it would be in the nature of debate, and it would then be too late to object to the consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope I will be indulged for a moment further. Under the system of rules formerly prevailing in the House when the House was in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar a single objection was sufficient to postpone the consideration of a measure. It was held by the Speaker, as I now remember, that the reading of the report might be demanded before objection was called for.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask if this hour is to be taken up in the consideration of the rule?

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes. This is a question as to its effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that five minutes is allowed, under the rule, for debate for and against the measure which is proposed to be considered. The Chair knows of no rule under which the gentleman from Indiana is proceeding except by unanimous consent, which will be charged to the time allowed for debate upon the measure proposed.

Mr. HOLMAN. But certainly this time occupied on a question of order, to ascertain the meaning and application of the rule, would not be charged to the hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as rising to a question of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am insisting that, according to the practice heretofore prevailing in regard to objections of a similar character, the report should be read before the question of objection shall be submitted. That was the practice heretofore in the case already mentioned, where a single objection postponed the consideration of a measure, and it was held that the reading of the report preceded the call for objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think the point of order is well taken. The Chair knows no rule of the House requiring the reports accompanying a measure to be read, nor of any practice of the House which allows it to be taken otherwise than as a part of the debate upon the proposition.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to know whether under the present rule this bill, the consideration of it being objected to by the requisite ten members, on the next morning hour can be again called up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair does not feel called upon to respond to the gentleman's question. The question is whether there is objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STORM. How is that to be arrived at?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated in as distinct language as it can command that objection must be interposed by at least ten members before the proposition to consider the measure is defeated.

Mr. STORM. How is the objection to be signified?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask members objecting to rise, and it will then be ascertained if the bill is objected to by the requisite number. As many as object to the present consideration of the bill will rise and remain standing until counted.

More than ten members rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently more than a sufficient number have risen to object, and the bill is withdrawn.

Mr. WELLER. I now rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. I wish to inquire if the Speaker has made a decision which will govern the House in signifying objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state such has been the decision made.

PAY OF GRADUATES OF NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. THOMAS. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7752) to equalize the pay of graduates of the Naval Academy.

The bill was read.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to inquire of the Chair if ten minutes are allowed for debate before objections are called for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes are allowed on either side, and the Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio, as the Chair has already stated, that after debate it is too late to object. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

More than ten members objected.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT WAYNE.

Mr. LOWRY. I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 6412, a bill to amend chapter 464 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, entitled "An act to provide for a public building at the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana."

The bill was read.

The consideration of the bill was objected to by the requisite number of members.

DAM ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. NELSON. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6764) to authorize the Mississippi Water Power and Boom Company, of Brainerd, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River.

The bill was read.

Mr. NELSON. I ask leave to make a brief explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to call for objections.

Mr. WELLER. There is an amendment which the gentleman from Minnesota has that doubtless will obviate any objections that gentlemen may have to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been reported by the Clerk as it is proposed to be amended.

The consideration of the bill was objected to by the requisite number of members.

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS, ETC.

Mr. HERBERT. I call up for consideration the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill to amend the law in relation to the compensation of United States district attorneys and United States marshals, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state this bill is not covered by the rule. It is a new bill not on any of the calendars or reported by the Committee of the Whole House to the House; nor is it on the Speaker's table. It does not belong to the class of bills embraced in the rule.

Mr. HERBERT. This is a bill reported last session by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. It is a bill which passed this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] furnish the number of the bill that it may be found on the Calendar if it occupies a position there?

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the Chair to permit me to complete my statement. This is the bill that passed this House last session on the sundry civil appropriation bill. It went to the Senate on that bill, and was stricken off because it was new legislation. It has been reported, and as I understand it comes within the terms of the rule. It is a bill which has been reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that the bill which he has sent to the Clerk's desk bears no number or information of its status on any calendar or on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HERBERT. But I have furnished the information to the Chair as to the status of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must be governed by the Calendar of the House, and is informed by the Clerk that this bill is not on any of the calendars or on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HERBERT. There is nothing on the calendars that contradicts my statement. I state to the Chair this is the identical bill that was reported by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice last session; it is word for word exactly as it passed this House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can explain this matter. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is being observed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state——

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest there should be no debate allowed, or else the objection should be permitted to come in at the end of the ten minutes' debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already stated that when debate has been had on a bill it is too late to object. There is no debate now proceeding.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to make this explanation. This bill has been reported as the gentleman from Alabama states, and I desire to show that the gentleman from Alabama and the Chair are both correct. This bill was introduced anew this session, was referred to the committee of which I am chairman, and I am authorized to report it back and to move to suspend the rules and pass it. I have not had an opportunity of doing so as yet. The Chair is correct in stating the bill is not on any calendar, and the gentleman from Alabama is also correct in his statement.

Mr. WELLER. I understand that all this is proceeding by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think this bill which is sent to the Clerk's desk comes within the rule. The bill as sent to the desk does not enable the Chair or the Clerk of the House to find that it is either on the Speaker's table or on any calendar or reported to the House by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HERBERT. The Speaker will permit me to remark that it is only necessary to look at the records of this House to find that what I have stated is absolutely correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not questioning the accuracy of the gentleman's statement at all. The Chair has called upon the Clerk for information as to whether this bill, either upon its face or in fact as the Clerk is now enabled to examine his Journal, comes within the limit of the rule, and the Chair is informed that there is no such information to be had, either from a hasty examination of the Journal or from the bill which the gentleman has sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HERBERT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill for the present in order to give time for a full and proper examination, giving notice that I will call it up hereafter at the first opportunity.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to ask the Chair if by unanimous consent the rule under which we are now acting can be amended?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can not.

Mr. PERKINS. Not by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to make another inquiry. Can a motion be entertained by unanimous consent to permit the objections to be interposed (if objections are to be interposed) after the ten minutes' debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would say not. This rule expressly prohibits the Chair from entertaining a request for unanimous consent.

RELIEF OF WEST VIRGINIA TROOPS.

Mr. GOFF. I call up for present consideration a bill which has been reported unanimously by the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, the bill (H. R. 3462) for the relief of West Virginia troops acting under authority of the governor of the State.

The bill was read with amendments.

Objection to the consideration of the bill was made by the requisite number of members.

DRAWBACK ON DUTIES.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7651) to amend section 3019 of the Revised Statutes, relating to drawback on duties on imported material when manufactured and exported.

The bill was read.

Objection to the consideration of the bill was made by more than the requisite number of members.

JOHN P. PETERSON.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6270) for the relief of John P. Peterson.

The bill was read.

Objection to the consideration of the bill was made by the requisite number of members.

D. O. ATKINSON.

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not at this time entertain a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. CASSIDY. Under the rule, I mean.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain a request for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. CASSIDY] asks the present consideration of the bill which he calls up, and which is the bill (S. 1455) for the relief of D. O. Atkinson.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask to have the report in that case read.

Mr. CASSIDY. This is fully authenticated by the Post-Office Department, and it only provides for the payment of $170, due on lost vouchers.

Objection to the consideration of the bill was made by the requisite number of members.

Mr. CASSIDY. I will pay it myself if the Government can not afford it. [Laughter.]

REPORT OF HEALTH OFFICER OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up, for the purpose of correcting a clerical error, the joint resolution (H. Res. 288) authorizing the printing of 2,500 extra copies of the annual report of the health officer of the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was read with Senate amendment.

Objection to its consideration was made by the requisite number of members.

ADJUSTMENT OF LAND GRANTS.

Mr. ANDERSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 6416) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads in the State of Kansas.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill. Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to withdraw that bill for the present.

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Kansas has a right to withdraw his bill.

Mr. WELLER. Then I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Why call for objections?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not called for objections.

JOHN L. LAKE, JR.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 2331) for the relief of John L. Lake, jr.

The bill was read.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that the report of the Committee on Claims on this bill be read.

Objection to the consideration of the bill was made by the requisite number of members.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAMB. I move that the House adjourn——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. LAMB. Till Judge HOLMAN is ready for the House to transact business.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. LAMB to adjourn, there were—ayes 105, noes 105.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for tellers.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 37 voting therefor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Now let us have tellers on agreeing to the motion.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, they were not ordered—only 28 voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the motion to adjourn the ayes are 105, the noes 105; and under the rules the motion is not agreed to.

Mr. NEECE. I desire to take from the Speaker's table, by unanimous consent, a bill for reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think it in order during the hour covered by this special rule to ask unanimous consent even for the reference of a bill.

DISTRIBUTION OF LAWS AND RECORD.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 2449) to provide for the distribution of the statutes of the United States and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to designated incorporated bodies, institutions, and associations within the several States and Territories.

The bill was read.

The consideration of the bill was objected to by the requisite number of members.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move that the House adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion, there were—ayes 41, noes 63.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move that the House take a recess for fifteen minutes.

Mr. WELLER. I move to amend the motion by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "ten."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I accept the amendment and modify my motion accordingly.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a point of order. I desire to raise the question whether this hour, under the new rule, is not to be devoted to requests for the consideration of bills, and whether the time consumed in these dilatory motions is to be taken out of the hour allowed for this purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not the understanding of the Chair that the House, by the adoption of this new rule, robbed itself of its inherent power to adjourn or to take a recess.

Mr. SPRINGER. Nor do I so understand, but under the rule is not this hour to be devoted to the purpose designated? Otherwise this hour may be consumed entirely by motions to adjourn or other dilatory motions. It seems to me this rule has set apart one hour for a particular purpose, and if time be occupied for other purposes the time so consumed is not to be considered as a part of the hour. I make this point now, as the practice under this new rule to-day may control its construction hereafter. I submit that this rule is to be construed as having some meaning, and in such a way as to give the House some relief in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not agree with the gentleman in construing this new rule. The Chair thinks that the time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is now occupying in discussing a point of order of his own raising must, under the rule, come out of the hour which the House has set apart. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg leave to differ with the Chair. If it is an improper construction to allow this hour to be consumed by motions to adjourn, &c., then certainly a point of order which may stop such a proceeding is a proper consumption of time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, as modified, that the House take a recess for ten minutes, there were—ayes 9, noes 27.

Mr. WASHBURN and Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, called for tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted, tellers are ordered under the rule, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. WARNER, and the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. WASHBURN.

Mr. WASHBURN. I withdraw the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I also made the point, and I insist upon it.

The tellers took their places, and the House proceeded to vote.

During the count by tellers the following proceedings took place:

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This proceeding is the regular order. The House is dividing.

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order that the hour has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The expiration of the hour does not affect the taking of the vote on the motion for a recess.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw the point of order that no quorum voted.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I renew the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon this motion no quorum has yet voted. The Chair asks gentlemen to vote on one side or the other.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw my motion for a recess.

Mr. HAMMOND. I make the point that the hour under the new rule has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. In other words, the hour for obstructing business has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion for a recess is withdrawn; and the hour appropriated for the consideration of business under the new rule has expired. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

MORNING HOUR.

Mr. WILLIS. I move the morning hour be dispensed with.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 55.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the morning hour was not dispensed with.

Mr. WILLIS. With a view to proceeding to the public business I withdraw the motion. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the reference of this proposed change of the rules to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the rule adopted on the 3d of February, 1885, as follows:

Strike out the words "but no bill or resolution taken up for consideration under this order shall be debated for more than ten minutes, which time shall be equally divided between the supporters and opponents of the measures," and insert "not exceeding ten minutes' discussion, which time shall be equally divided between the supporters and opponents of the measure, and amendments shall be in order during such ten minutes."

Mr. HAMMOND. Does that lie over?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HAMMOND. I make the point of order that a motion to amend the rules is not a matter of privilege except on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the rule it is, and under the uniform practice of the House, so far as the Chair is informed, it has always been held to be a privileged motion.

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not remember what the change has been, but it was held in the Forty-first Congress, by Mr. Blaine, then Speaker, it was not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman desires it, the Chair will have repeated decisions made on this subject read.

Mr. HAMMOND. If the Chair is quite certain I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is quite certain.

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. OATES. I move the following amendment to the rules for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the present session of Congress the House of Representatives shall begin its sessions each day at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. OATES'S motion was agreed to, and the amendment was referred to the Committee on Rules.

PHINNEY & JACKSON.

Mr. REED, of Maine, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 689) for the relief of Phinney & Jackson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

R. 7706) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZA J. RAY.

Mr. HISCOCK, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6201) for the relief of Eliza J. Ray; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LANDING GOODS, ETC.

Mr. GLASCOCK, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 2834) to amend certain provisions of chapter 4, title 34, Revised Statutes, relating to the movement of vessels and the landing of goods and personal effects; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS TENSAS RIVER, ETC.

Mr. SEYMOUR, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 7450, a bill (H. R. 8174) authorizing the construction of bridges across Tensas River, Boeuf River, and Bayou Bartholomew, in the States of Louisiana and Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed; the bill H. R. 7450 being laid on the table.

ASTORIA AND WINNEMUCCA RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. SEYMOUR, from the Committee on Commerce, also reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 7652, a bill (H. R. 8175) to grant the right to the Astoria and Winnemucca Railroad Company to construct bridges over navigable water courses; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed; the bill H. R. 7652 being laid on the table.

CONFIRMATION OF TITLES.

A bill (H. R. 2417) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Marie Louise Craven;
A bill (H. R. 2461) for the relief of Elizabeth Aurand; and
A bill (H. R. 7333) for the relief of Harriet P. Blake.

HENRIETTA M. SANDS.

Mr. CULLEN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (S. 1286) for the relief of Henrietta M. Sands; which was ordered to be laid upon the table, and the accompanying report printed.

JAMES H. REID.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 2068) granting a pension to James H. Reid; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HARRY H. G. KISLINGBURY AND OTHERS.

Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7618) granting a pension to Harry H. G. Kislingsbury, Walter F. Kislingbury, Wheeler Schofield Kislingbury, and Douglas E. L. Kislingbury, respectively, children of the late Frederick F. Kislingbury, a lieutenant in the Eleventh Regiment United States Infantry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH DENNY RIPLEY.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back the bill (S. 150) granting a pension to Sarah Denny Ripley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REFUND OF MONEY UNDER DIRECT TAX OF AUGUST 5, 1861.

Mr. PRICE, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6047) to credit and pay the several States and Territories all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask, Mr. Speaker, the privilege of submitting a minority report to accompany the bill just reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does not that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it does.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How, under the new rule, can the Chair entertain the request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will admit that under the rule adopted on yesterday the Chair does not think it could entertain the request for unanimous consent for the consideration of a measure. But the Chair does not think that under that rule it is precluded from entertaining a request for unanimous consent of this character. The Clerk will read that provision of the rule.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wanted the Chair to pass upon it, as there is so much difficulty in doing anything by unanimous consent.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be seen that under the rule the Chair is not precluded from entertaining the request for unanimous consent in this instance. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio, and he will have permission to submit the minority report hereafter.

MRS. JULIA HARTLEY.

Mr. WOLFORD, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. 7952) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Hartley; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH FLEMING AND OTHERS.

Mr. ELLWOOD, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 1140, a bill (H. R. 8176) for the relief of Elizabeth Fleming, Frances E. Robinson, and Mary and Margaret Johnson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, the bill H. R. 1140 being laid on the table.

EXPENSES IN DEFENSE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7919) to settle and adjust the claims of any State for expenses incurred by it in defense of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PAYMENTS MADE BY MISSOURI.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2366) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers of the State of Missouri for payments made since April 2, 1882, to officers and enlisted men of her militia forces for services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, and to report to Congress; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported a bill (H. R. 8177) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

WATER SUPPLY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8140) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF NAVAL AND MILITARY REPORTS.

Mr, ROGERS, of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. Res. 292) authorizing the printing of certain naval and military reports; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PRINTING OF REPORT ON SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation a concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 3,000 copies of the communication of the Secretary of State containing a list of claims against France by reason of spoliations committed prior to the 21st day of July, 1801, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. LORE, from the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 8072) relating to shipping commissioners; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DOCUMENTING VESSELS, ETC.

Mr. DINGLEY, from the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 8071) to amend sections 4153, 4177, and 4371 of the Revised Statutes as regards documenting vessels and designating their numbers and tonnage; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call of committees for reports has been completed. The Chair will ask consent that such gentlemen as were not in their seats when their committees were called be permitted to report now.

There was no objection.

J. P. BUSH AND M. GRIGSBY.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7766) for the relief of John P. Bush and Martin Grigsby; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORVILLE HORWITZ.

Mr. HISCOCK, from the Committee on Ways and Means (for Mr. BLACKBURN), reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 734) for the relief of Orville Horwitz, assignee in trust of C. D. De Ford & Co.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

POSTAGE ON SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Mr. MONEY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported a bill (H. R. 8178) to reduce postage on mailable matter of the second class; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HONORABLY DISCHARGED UNION SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. MUTCHLER, from the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 7548) to prohibit the removal of any honorably discharged Union soldier, sailor, or marine, or the widow or dependent relative of any deceased Union soldier, sailor, or marine, from any office in the civil service of the United States except for specified cause; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLARD. I desire to give notice of the presentation of a minority report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] asks permission to file a minority report. The Chair hears no objection. The report will be printed with the report of the majority.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I rise to make a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (S. R. 104) providing for the printing and distribution of the Descriptive Catalogue of Government Publications.

Mr. WILLIS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a privileged report under the rule.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed and half-bound in leather, with the exception of the reserve sets, which shall be full-bound in leather, 6,600 copies of the Descriptive Catalogue of Government Publications, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate; 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; 4 copies for the library of the Senate; 12 copies for the library of the House; 60 copies, 50 of which shall be for foreign exchanges, for the Library of Congress; 2 copies for the library of the Executive Mansion; 40 copies for the Department of State; a copy to be sent to each legation of the United States abroad; 25 copies for the Treasury Department, including its bureaus; 20 copies for the War Department, including 1 for the library of the Military Academy at West Point; 20 copies for the Navy Department, including 1 for the library of the Naval Academy at Annapolis and 1 copy for the Naval Observatory at Washington; 25 copies for the Department of the Interior, including its bureaus, the Railroad Commission, the Geological Survey, and the Census Office; 818 copies to be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior for distribution to such libraries, not depositories of public documents, as shall be named for this purpose by each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress; 10 copies to the Post-Office Department and its bureaus; 10 copies for the Department of Justice, including a copy for the library of the Supreme Court and a copy for the library of the Court of Claims; 2 copies for the Department of Agriculture; 2 copies for the Smithsonian Institution; 2 copies for the Government Printing Office; 1,000 copies to be bound and distributed with the reserved documents, and 50 copies for the use of the Joint Committee on Public Printing, to be distributed among those who have aided in the compilation of the work.

SEC. 2. That the Public Printer shall print 500 additional copies of the above-named work, to be half-bound in leather, and sold at 10 per cent. advance on cost price, to any person applying for the same, a notice stating the price to be inserted at least once a week in the daily edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD until the edition shall have been disposed of.

SEC. 3. That all provisions of law under which any additional copies of the above-named work might be printed are, so far as they apply to the above-named work, repealed.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York how large a volume will this be?

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I do not know how large a volume it will be. It is a work which has been ordered by previous Congresses, and has been compiled under the direction of previous Congresses.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does it come down to the present time?

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. Yes, sir; there is a report here, if the gentleman desires to have it read.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, from the Committee on Printing, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 26, 1885.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum for the year 1884 be printed, and that there be printed 16,060 extra copies; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,060 for the House of Representatives, and 7,000 for the Smithsonian Institution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the motion by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that at 5 o'clock to-day the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening; my object being to go on with the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves that the House take a recess from 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will not the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] modify his motion to include the method of passing over certain items.

Mr. WILLIS. I will state to the gentleman and to the House that I have no objection to an understanding that none of the matters that are in dispute shall come up at the evening session, and, if this motion prevails, I am willing to agree that no item in the bill larger than $50,000 shall be considered at the night session.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, that is going to prevent the discussion of the bill, by preventing the attendance of members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is that at 5 o'clock to-day the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I want to know whether it is understood that no other business is to be taken up at this night session.

Mr. WILLIS. That is my intention in making the motion.

Mr. KEIFER. That no other business shall come up?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, Mr. Speaker, let it be so understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] knows, that can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that; but I suppose there will be no objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to an understanding that no other business than the river and harbor bill shall be taken up at the session this evening? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so understood.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to say that these arrangements by which we guarantee that nobody will be present in the House at an evening session merely amount to a provision that nothing shall be done. Now, if we take a recess, and have an evening session, let it be done in such a way as to have the members of the House present, and let us do some business. What is the use of some of us coming here when others will not, and when the House will probably find itself without a quorum? I am willing to come here to-night, but I want to come for the purpose of transacting business. Therefore I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that he had better modify his motion.

Mr. WASHBURN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] agree to modify his motion?

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the night sessions begin to-morrow night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that at 5 o'clock this afternoon the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, at which night session, by unanimous consent, there shall be no business transacted or considered except the river and harbor bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. Then the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is that at 5 o'clock this afternoon the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that, instead of taking a recess and holding a night session, we come here to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIS. We can not do that without changing a rule of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky that at 5 o'clock this afternoon the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 114, noes 25.

Mr. PETERS. I make the point that there is no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will therefore appoint tellers, and will designate the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS, and the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. PETERS, to act as tellers.

Before the count was completed the demand for tellers was withdrawn; and the motion of Mr. WILLIS was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, in this connection I understood from the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] awhile ago that certain points in the river and harbor bill were to be passed over at this night session.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir. No gentleman need have the slightest doubt on that point. Only items under $50,000 will be considered.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS]——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that this is a matter with which the House has no earthly concern, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has demanded the regular order.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on river and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Rockland, Me.: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in the limited time allowed for discussion, under the rule, I would like to call the attention of this House to the character of attacks that have been made upon this measure. The enemies of this bill have put in the forefront objections to the improvement of the Mississippi River. For years the demand has come up from the central portion of this continent, from the country lying west of the great Appalachian region, north of the Gulf and south of the lakes, for the improvement of this great national highway. In the beginning of the Forty-sixth Congress the law was passed creating a commission to be intrusted with this improvement. The criticisms now directed against this work come, I discover, first from Wisconsin. The gentleman who spoke on Friday last on this subject [Mr. PRICE] began his argument by endeavoring to prove that a part of the plan being executed by that commission is not only fruitless but uselessly expensive; and he stated in substance that this particular feature of the commission's work is the only object of the commission. I refer to his remarks regarding levees.

Mr. Chairman, in the act creating that commission for the improvement of this river not one word is said about levees. The title of the act reads thus:

An act to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters.

That body of scientific men has adopted certain plans for this improvement. Had we then known the wisdom of the gentleman from Wisconsin, possibly we would have induced the President to put him upon that body. All that he says is negatived by the opinion of these scientific men in charge of this work.

The distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] says, without the slightest qualification, that this work is to cost $150,000,000. I have been astonished to hear on this floor statements embracing inaccuracies of the very wildest character; but never before have I known one so boldly made against a measure so meritorious as this, and purely with the object of prejudicing this body against it; for, sir, there is not one figure to sustain such a statement.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JONES, of Wisconsin, obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], whom I do not now see in his seat, stated on this floor a few days ago that Mr. Eads had said this work would cost $100,000,000. Mr. Eads corrected him the next day by telegram, to the effect that he had never said this work would cost exceeding $30,000,000. There is no warrant, no authority whatever for the statement made by the gentleman from Maine; and the highest estimates I have seen for this work have not exceeded $45,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, it is an easy matter to rise here now with criticisms and complaints directed against the river and harbor bill. This has been made a convenient horse for every man to mount who wishes to create some popular impression in his own district against appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors. These bills are called "steals" and "log-rolling schemes." But I would call the attention of this House to the fact—and there is no possibility of its being negatived—that the bill called the river and harbor bill comes in here after more careful scrutiny than any other measure introduced into this House. First, a survey must be made; recommendations must come from the Chief of Engineers as to the amount of money that can be properly expended upon this work. These recommendations must be indorsed in turn by the Secretary of War and by the President of the United States.

No bill, I say, that comes before this House is more carefully drawn; yet no measure has been more maligned before the country. What has been the spirit prompting these misrepresentations regarding this measure? I can not here more than suggest that it is the vast transporting lines of railway which compete with the cheap freight ways; for we know that as rivers go down freights go up, and as freights go up rivers go down.

An attack has been made here on the purpose of this committee in the effort to improve the harbor of Galveston. No one can look at the vast population and territory now dependent upon that outlet to the sea without sympathizing with those men in their efforts to afford relief—a relief demanded for the purpose of furnishing food supplies and supplies for the manufacture of the commonest articles of daily necessity. Already we read that in the city of New York beef is too high for the poor man to eat. If you can get cheap ways of transporting meat from Texas I will guarantee that the people of that great city will not want for cheap beef.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attenion of this Committee of the Whole to the fact that this bill is a worse bill than the river and harbor bill of 1882, which was vetoed by the President, by which veto the Democratic party was greatly benefited. I desire to call attention to the further fact that the Democratic party has changed front on this important question of internal improvements. I wish further to call attention to the fact that if this bill passes, the Democratic party, if it can do so, stultifies itself before the country. In the Democratic platform adopted at Chicago on the 10th of July last the Democratic party asserted that—

The Federal Government should care for and improve the Mississippi River and the other great water ways of the Republic, so as to secure for the interior States easy and cheap transportation to tide water.

Does this bill provide for no streams except the "Mississippi River and other great water ways?"

It was that very idea upon which the President of the United States wrote his veto message of 1882. That river and harbor bill appropriated $18,000,000, far less than recommended in the Engineer's Report, on the recommendation of the members of Congress who were invited to go before that committee and were patiently heard by the committee. Even such a distinguished Democrat as Senator BAYARD came before that committee to urge appropriations for streams in the little State of Delaware. The President's veto message was on the idea that in that bill were appropriations for catfish streams and for little trout streams.

I call attention of this Committee of the Whole and the country to the fact that this bill by the side of that dollar for dollar appropriates infinitely more for little catfish streams and little trout streams than the bill of 1882 did.

I call the attention of this committee and the House to the further fact that but for that veto message of the President of the United States, which put the idea before the country that a river and harbor bill was a great steal, and that members of Congress were thieves and were endeavoring to get certain appropriations for certain localities in order to elect or re-elect corrupt American citizens to the Congress of the United States—but for that idea inculcated by that veto message, Mr. Chairman, the Democratic party would not now be in power. You met in Chicago, through your chosen representatives——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STEELE. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman from Indiana for his courtesy.

As I was saying, the Democratic party of this nation met in Chicago, through its chosen representatives, and avowed in its platform last July, for the first time, that it was in favor of the Government appropriating money for "the improvement of the Mississippi and other great water ways of the Republic."

Is the Big Sunflower one of the great water ways? [Laughter.] Is the Great Pee Dee one of the great water ways? Is the Suwanee River one of the great water ways? You not only do that but you have put in your bill appropriations to survey streams that have not been heard of even up to this day. Where is the Pond River in the State of Kentucky? Where is the Little River in the State of Kentucky, and where is the Little River in the State of Louisiana? Apply this criticism to other States and you will find this bill is a bill to survey creeks and bayous and little streams which can not in any sense be considered as great water ways of the Republic. This bill launches out not only to improve the Mississippi River and other great water ways, but proposes to discover streams which have not yet been discovered. If that is your theory, if that is your platform, I then ask you in what respect you differ from the old Whig party?

There is in this bill, as I shall attempt to show as we go forward, an utter disregard of the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. If we are not to rely upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, if your committee sitting with closed doors and not hearing what members on this floor, elected by the people of the several districts to represent their constituents, have to say on this subject, then who shall tell us how to prepare a bill which will give relief to the commerce of the country, which is the object sought in the passage of any just river and harbor appropriation bill?

I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who believe there is but one true ground upon which to prepare a bill making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and that is to prepare it in accordance with the needs of commerce, and if such a bill has to carry $35,000,000, and it is made up upon a true principle, I shall support that bill. But to state in a national platform one thing and then to prepare a bill upon an entirely opposite basis, and then to ask Congress to support it when Congress does not know how it was prepared—does not know what it contains—has not had an opportunity to learn by full and fair discussion, but only as each member has learned for himself by looking at the report of the engineers and bringing to bear on the subject the knowledge which we individually have of our several districts—I say, under these circumstances, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to expect us to swallow this bill without having more light on it than we now have.

It was very proper that the chairman of this Committee on Rivers and Harbors should want to have night sessions when nobody would be here to discuss this bill or have its enormities pointed out.

And I want to call the attention of the House to another fact, that the Democratic party has made rapid progress. I should like to incorporate in my remarks a protest presented to a former Congress, signed by the chairman of this committee and by the Speaker of this Congress and by many others who have been converted to this important doctrine of the Whig party that internal improvements are for the benefit of the whole country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, withdrew his formal amendment.

Mr. HORR. I renew it. It is unnecessary for me, Mr. Chairman, to state to the members of this House that I am in favor of a judicious river and harbor bill. I am also in favor of one that is built in a spirit of fairness toward all the great and all the small water ways of the country. For a stream which is national that needs only $5,000 is just as much entitled to it as one that needs $5,000,000, and should be as carefully looked after by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors as the larger work.

But, Mr. Chairman, I rose more for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that this debate had drifted a little into sectionalism. It is not a part and parcel of this bill; and I was astonished at my friend from Texas, Judge REAGAN, who has had so much experience on this bill, that he should have taken part in that discussion in the manner in which he did. He undertook to claim that the States of Michigan and Wisconsin had received enormous sums of money in proportion to the other States.

Mr. REAGAN. I alluded to Wisconsin, not to Michigan, and then only in response to the gentleman from Wisconsin himself.

Mr. HORR. Then another gentleman mentioned Michigan, and I may be permitted to say that she is entitled to be mentioned in this bill, because she has got a large amount of necessities. But here is what I was coming to: My friend from Texas enumerated eight States which he compared with the State of Wisconsin, and claimed that that State alone had got more money from the Treasury of the United States than all of these eight States put together, and my friend, Mr. BLANCHARD, said that Michigan exceeded Wisconsin in the amount drawn from the Treasury for such purposes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas will stop for a moment he will see that in that list five of these States are States which the Mississippi River passes through in large part, or along the coast of them, and he will find that his estimate is perhaps inaccurate in one respect. Will he tell me what amount of the Mississippi River appropriations he has charged against these respective States? I ask this because when you come to compare the amount with Michigan, and estimate that she is to receive $8,000,000, you charge up to her the improvements on the Sault Saint Mary's Canal, on the Saint Clair Flats, and on the Detroit River, which amount to more than $5,000,000 of the $8,000,000 you charged to Michigan, whereas that is a simple thoroughfare for the commerce of Lakes Michigan, Superior, and Huron. Lake Superior touches, of course, upon Michigan, but the commerce of that great channel is the entire commerce of the West. Now I ask the gentleman frankly, if he charges $8,000,000 to Michigan, whether it would not also be fair to charge to these other States their proportion of the Mississippi River improvements?

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Michigan will confine himself to answering me, I would then be able to make response to his inquiry; but since he is discussing Michigan, to which I did not refer, I can not answer him.

Mr. HORR. But you gave the amount appropriated in Louisiana in your list, and I ask why is the amount appropriated for the Mississippi River improvements not to be charged to Louisiana on the basis of consistency, when you charge Michigan with all of the improvements that I have named?

Mr. REAGAN. Because the Secretary of War did it, and I take it from his figures submitted on the 14th day of January, 1884, in his report made to this House in answer to a House resolution.

Mr. HORR. But, Mr. Chairman, the Mississippi River is just as much a local enterprise as the Sault Saint Mary's Canal, and it should be charged to those States just as much as the other improvements I have mentioned in Michigan are charged to her.

Now, sir, I do not do this for the purpose of claiming that you charge too little or too much, and only state it to illustrate the fact that this is a national bill and not a State or sectional measure. I do not care which part of the country a harbor is in; if it needs improvement you should not inquire what State it is in, but simply whether it is a national work and needs improvement. I do not sympathize with the sensitiveness of some of my friends over here who object to telling what part of the country a specific improvement is in. If a member on this floor happens to state that a certain great expenditure is in a certain part of the country, they seem at once inclined to raise the cry of sectionalism. Why is it anything against the harbor because it happens to be in Texas instead of Michigan? It may be tough on the harbor, it is true, but it does not justify anybody in raising that as an objection. [Laughter.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. HORR.

Mr. HORR. Now, Mr. Chairman, the great bulk of this bill has been prepared, in my judgment, with great care. There are things in it that I do not like. I object at present to the launching out on an expenditure of $750,000 for Galveston Bay. Why? It is not because I would not vote for it if I was satisfied that the harbor was capable of improvement, and that was the place to construct the harbor. But I am not satisfied that it is the place and I will state my objections to it. I was on the committee which appropriated over $200,000 for the improvement of that harbor. No man was clearer in his judgments or more complete in his demonstrations with reference to the possibility of that improvement than my friend from Texas. He was satisfied with the plan on which that money was being expended. He thought it was the one that would improve the great harbor at Galveston. He had back of him a gentleman, Mr. Mansfield, I believe. Am I correct in that?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Mansfield appeared before our committee, and I have heard some strictures upon him throughout this discussion; but for myself I may say that no one appeared before that committee, among all who appeared before it, who in my judgment seemed to have a cooler brain or clearer head than this Army engineer. He stated that he was sure of succeeding; and we gave, at the special instance of my friend from Texas, a large amount of money for Galveston Harbor, which they tell us now, for all purposes of improvement, might just as well have been dumped into the sea. Now, I want to stop dumping money at Galveston until we know what we are about. They need an adequate harbor on that coast. I am in favor of the United States Government proceeding with that work when it has been determined that Galveston is the best place for it. When that is done I am for Galveston. But we do not know yet about it.

I am at a loss because good engineers differ about it. Is there not some other point on that coast where those quicksands are not so terrible as they are at that harbor? We have already sunk in that harbor a good deal more than a million dollars. How much more water have you got now than there was before you commenced that process?

Mr. OCHILTREE. Three inches.

Mr. HORR. About three inches, says my friend from Texas. That is an expensive process; a million dollars for each inch.

Mr. OCHILTREE. Three hundred thousand dollars for each inch.

Mr. HORR. I believe that that harbor is such a one that such an expensive work should never be commenced upon it until we have had careful investigation and know what we are about. Who has made this careful investigation to offset the theory of the Government engineers, which they have been working on for the last ten years? What body of men have made this examination? I am told there are harbors on the coast of Texas where these sand shoals can be avoided. I am told there are outlets where railroads center. If that is true, let us seek one of those places and improve it. If Galveston is the place, I am for Galveston.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker pro tempore resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HARRIS, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. PIKE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HORR. I withdraw it.

Mr. REAGAN. I renew the amendment. I will notice the last point made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] first. He seeks to prejudice the present appropriation because of my urging an appropriation under a different plan, and because he said that I recommended that plan as the right plan. Well, sir, his statement is all right with this understanding in relation to it that I am not an engineer. I have never given opinions as an engineer because I am not an engineer. I took the reports of the Secretary of War and the local engineers and accepted them as good authority. Upon their making the recommendation the gentleman speaks of I approved and did what I could. It is right to say the gentleman from Michigan was fair generally in reference to appropriations of that kind.

But the gentleman from Michigan takes me to task for giving a sectional cast to this debate. Why, Mr. Chairman, I served upon that committee for eight years. I have had a considerable part in the formation of every bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors which was gotten up during those eight years. During that time I was never governed by sectionalism. I was as liberal and as earnest in the improvement of the water ways connected with the great lakes as I was in reference to the improvement of the water ways in any other part of the country. I believed the Sault Saint Mary's Canal to be a great and necessary national public work, and I supported large appropriations for it. I believed that the deepening of the shoal water at Detroit was a great and necessary national work, and I approved it. I was never governed by sectionalism, and I have no feeling now that prompts me to be governed by sectionalism.

It seems to me, with all deference to the gentleman, that it would have been more proper for him to have rebuked the gentlemen on his own side of the House who introduced this sectionalism and made a point out of it than to have attacked me for it.

I desire to say another word on that subject, for I mean that gentlemen shall understand when they assail the work at Galveston on the ground of sectionalism that they shall have the benefit of the assault they make. I do not mean that this fight shall be all on one side, as gentlemen will learn before they get through. The gentleman who raised this cry of sectionalism, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], has had from first to last for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in his State, $2,280,750 93. There has been that expenditure on a work that will never be completed, and that the engineers have more than once said could not be completed according to the original plan on account of the quicksand shoals on the Wisconsin River. But by some sort of juggling between the State and Federal authorities these two millions and nearly three hundred thousand dollars have furnished a great deal of valuable water-power for private parties to use.

Mr. REED, of Maine. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED, of Maine. When did we originate that scheme?

Mr. REAGAN. More than a dozen years ago.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There have been none like it lately?

Mr. REAGAN. That work has been appropriated for year after year for the last ten or twelve years.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There have been no new schemes of that kind lately.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has expired.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to say the least, acted very injudiciously in not allowing a more full discussion on the bill. This is a very important measure, and every member of the House who has any views should have an opportunity to express them. I personally am in favor of the legitimate improvement of the water ways of the country, and more especially now when so many people are unemployed and business depression prevailing.

As to the provisions of the bill, I think that such rivers as the Mississippi and Tennessee and others, if possible and practicable, should be improved, but there are great projects in the bill which are open to very severe criticism. Among these I shall speak first of the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Galveston. I have no doubt that James B. Eads is a man of superior ability, but I am loath to admit, after all that has been said in his favor on the floor of this House, that the Almighty should have called in Mr. Eads when he planned this continent. [Laughter.] After hearing my eloquent friend from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] in his chaste and Chesterfieldian way pay such a beautiful tribute to Mr. Eads, I looked in the book of Genesis to see if Mr. Eads's name was not as plentifully sprinkled through that book as it is in this bill [laughter], and disappointed in my researches I respectfully suggest to the learned and reverend gentlemen who are now revising the sacred volume that it might be improved in that respect.

Mr. Chairman, what does this bill propose to do as far as Galveston is concerned? Why, sir, we are giving Mr. Eads the harbor and the United States Treasury—giving him the harbor to do what he likes with it, and giving him the Treasury to pay him for doing it. [Renewed laughter.]

It is a matter of speculation. It is a question on which engineers have differed and disputed and still dispute. Millions already expended have produced little or no results, and we have only Mr. Eads's word for it that seven or eight millions more will insure a success.

Another thing: We have an Engineer Corps in our Army. It is supposed to be the very cream of the service. Men are admitted into it by reason of their superior capacity and fitness. Now, sir, is not the Galveston provision in this bill tantamount to saying that the members of our Engineer Corps are unfit for their positions? If the members of the Engineer Corps are incapable of coping with this problem, then let the corps be abolished, and let us give the whole business of internal improvements over to Capt. James B. Eads. If they are incompetent and unreliable at Galveston, can they be trusted at New York or Charleston? Of what value are their opinions or decisions on any improvement? Nearly all the legislation in these bills is founded upon their opinions and recommendations, so that if we now pronounce them unreliable the rest of this bill is under grave suspicion.

Mr. Chairman, in the limited time allowed me I am obliged to deal very hurriedly with the provisions of this bill; but there is another item to which I object—the appropriation for the improvement of Big Sandy Bay in Massachusetts, for making a "harbor of refuge" there, a sort of a marine boarding-house, an oceanic Yellowstone Park, where the wanderers of the sea can run in and enjoy themselves and admire the princely liberality of our Government in providing this beautiful harbor for them. Why Sandy Bay when you have Boston and Portland? Are mariners afraid of the culture of the one and the lack of refreshments in the other? So far as this bay is concerned, there is no definite plan proposed, and there is no need for the work. If you are going to build a harbor of refuge on the New England coast, why not build one also on the New Jersey coast south of Sandy Hook? But I for one can not agree, when our rivers, our great national highways, need legitimate improvement and are asking for aid, that we are called upon to expend the national funds to build harbors of refuge on the New England coast.

Then as to the item of the improvement of the Mississippi River, it is very strange that after the many years that we have been expending money on improvements of that river there is scarcely an instance in which those improvements have withstood the floods that periodically sweep down the bed of the mighty stream.

If we are to improve the Mississippi, why not take a sufficient sum and make one direct test case as to the best plan of improving that river, instead of appropriating $100,000 one year, $200,000 another year, $1,000,000 another year, and so on, to be sprinkled all along the stream? Let us have a fair scientific test made of what can be done before we are called upon to make these appropriations. At the last session of Congress such a proposition was voted down by friends of this bill.

Mr. ELLIS. It has been made.

Mr. MCADOO. I doubt it.

Mr. ELLIS. It has been made, and has succeeded.

Mr. MCADOO. Let that test be made, Mr. Chairman, and then if you find that the Mississippi River can be improved on that plan, I for one am willing to vote sufficient money to improve the entire great stream. The whole country is interested in the improvement of this free, natural highway, which in its freedom for commerce and travel rivals the railroads and cheapens every product to the consumer. But so far in the works made upon and along its course the awful forces of nature have not been successfully curbed by scientific experiments. Let us do for it whatever is practicable and necessary, but avoid expenditures which are blind ventures and bring no beneficial results.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I yield my time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Now, Mr. Chairman, under the shadow and protection of these great schemes we find a host of little fellows creeping in. We are making these appropriations under what authority? Under the clause of the Constitution which says that we shall have power to regulate commerce between the States. It would seem that a stream of sufficient importance to make its improvement a national matter ought to be known to members of this House generally, but I venture to assert that if my distinguished friend from Indiana, who sits on my left [Mr. HOLMAN], and who is one of the best informed men in the country, were before the Civil Service Commission for examination he could not tell a thing about the Yallabusha [laughter] or about the Scoma Loosha. I venture to say that he could not tell whether the Scoma Loosha is a continuation of the Yallabusha, or whether the Yallabusha is a continuation of the Scoma Loosha. [Renewed laughter.] Yet, Mr. Chairman, under the provision of the Constitution to which I have referred, we are called upon to make a considerable appropriation for the improvement of the Yallabusha. [Laughter.] Then, sir, looking through this bill to find the Yallabusha, I come to the Salkehatchie, Waccamaw, Wapoo Cut, Wateree, Coosa, Caloosahatchee, Choctawhatchee, Withlacoochee, Big Sunflower, Noxubee, Tallahatchie, Tchula Lake, Chifuncte, and the Boeuf—which latter, I suppose, runs soup—together with the Stielaquamish, the Hiawassee, and the universally known Hay Lake. Here, for example, is an appropriation for the improvement of the Wateree. Now, sir, the Wateree is not a river at all, it is a lumber yard.

On that subject I refer gentlemen to the report of the War Department, which states that there is no channel there—that it is a mere "net-work of logs." That being so, the proper way to improve and protect the Wateree would be to send down a couple of fire-engines to see that the river does not burn up. [Renewed laughter.] The report, however, adds that here we can profitably—to what or whom we must conjecture—spend a handsome sum of money.

Then here is Romerly Marsh. Now I venture to say that very few gentlemen know on what part of the map to find Romerly Marsh; yet we are called upon to make an appropriation for its improvement under our constitutional authority to regulate commerce between the States.

Although I have looked over the most modern atlas, I was unable to find Romerly Marsh, not even on the beautiful map which the friends of the Hennepin Canal have kindly presented to me. It is modestly mentioned in the Engineer's report, and appears to be a canal, to begin work on which the Florida and Georgia Steamboat Company kindly donated $5,000. So far as it is concerned the bill is a misnomer, for it is neither a river nor a harbor, but a canal to be cut through a marsh. I am in doubt whether it is a private and local enterprise or a matter of real interstate commerce.

Here is the Gasconade, this blustering stream which meanders through the sylvan shades of the State of Missouri. I find on turning to the report of the War Department this significant language:

The only work done on this stream—

Says the report of last year—was in the office, because there was not sufficient appropriation.

Now, it is a problem such as confronted the philosopher when he saw a calf's tail sticking through a knot-hole, as to whether they brought this boastful and vaunting stream, the Gasconade, into the office and improved it there, or whether their profound minds in the precincts of the sanctum cogitated plans how to improve it without the office.

Yet this is just the class of little fellows that creep in under the shadowing protection of this gigantic scheme about Galveston Harbor, and this harbor of refuge on the New England coast, and this improvement of the Mississippi. These modest, retiring little fellows coming in, each walk off with a bag of United States coin to the tune of five, ten, or fifteen thousand dollars, or $100,000, or even much more.

Why, sir, here is the Big Sunflower. I spent some time examining Mitchell's Atlas to find out where this flowery and æsthetic stream hid itself.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "dollars," in line 10, insert:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission, to consist of two officers of the Engineer Corps of the Army and one from civil life, to make surveys for the construction of reservoirs on the Poudre, Platte, and Saint Vrain for the storage of surplus water to be used in irrigating and reclaiming the public lands located in the State of Colorado, and to report the probable cost of the construction of such work; and the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated to defray the expenses of such commission."

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order on this amendment.

Mr. BELFORD. Well, I hope my friend from Kentucky will reserve his point of order until I can be heard upon this amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I will reserve the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks leave to reserve points of order on this amendment until the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] has been heard. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is the only bill before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in which my section of the country has no "pork" whatever. I have but one single objection to this bill of my friend from Kentucky, which I shall vote for; and that is, he has not made the slices of "pork" sufficiently large.

I want to tell you gentlemen who have undertaken the contract of wringing out and sweeping the carpet on which Republicans have walked for the last twenty-five years, what you ought to do with the appropriations of this Government. You have in the Treasury of the United States to-day—[laughter]—oh, yes; this is the old story, "unlock the Treasury;" but wait till I get through with it. You have in the Treasury of the United States to-day $145,000,000 of available cash. [Laughter.] Not one dollar of that sum is expended by this administration. [At this point Mr. BELFORD walked over to the Democratic side of the House.] I want to get over here and talk to my friends. [Laughter.]

In the last Congress Mr. Speaker CARLISLE, a man whom I profoundly honor on account of his justice, his integrity, and his impartiality, introduced in this House a bill to refund the national debt at 3 per cent. You can all readily recall the filibustering we had in this House at that time, and you can also readily recall the fact that on every vote in that filibustering epoch I stood up with you Democrats like a lone pine tree in the desert. [Laughter.] We broke that "deadlock." We passed that bill. Rutherford B. Hayes—who, in my judgment, never was elected President of the United States [laughter and applause on the Democratic side], although I voted to beat you Democrats, because you had not the courage to stand up for your rights [laughter]—Rutherford B. Hayes vetoed that bill.

Then Garfield came in. He was going to call an extra session of Congress to see whether he could not get a refunding bill which would suit the administration better than that bill introduced by Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE. The banks had brought a pressure on the Treasury of the United States. They had sent in, I think it was, over $18,000,000 under a contract with John Sherman that when the pressure went by he would return the money to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman is exhausted.

Mr. MILLS. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BELFORD. Thanks. I have not been heard for two months. Just give me a chance. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Democrats came into power in this House, and we told Mr. Sherman he should not return the $18,000,000 to those thieving, villainous bankers in the city of New York, who were seeking to control the currency of the whole country. That is point No. 1. Now I wish to give you point No. 2. I wish to see whether you Democrats have the nerve and the heroism and the courage to do what is right in the next four years. I recollect walking down from this Capitol, when Garfield was inaugurated, with one of the most distinguished Senators from the South—I mean up the Avenue from the Treasury Department—and he said: "There is no use talking about it, you Republicans have this country for twenty-five years;" and in six weeks we were all together, pulling each others ears from the coast of the Atlantic, where the sun first stops to take up the dew-drops, to the coast of the Pacific Ocean, where he stoops to cool his hot axle. [Applause.]

That is what you are going to have now. What was the campaign you fought last year? What was the sum and substance of it all? The great Republican party that had conquered the most magnificent army on the face of the earth, our Southern friends, came out with a broad declaration, floating all over the nation, with one single objection that was suspended in the sky like a magnet, and that was that Grover Cleveland kissed a widow one day too late. [Great laughter.] Was not that the whole substance of the campaign? Then the Democrats, to equal it up, to cover it over on every side, came out with the magnificent issue that another candidate for the Presidency had kissed a maiden one day too soon. [Renewed laughter.] Was not that a beautiful issue to present to a great nation by two great parties of this country? The result of it was that the great mass of the people preferred the widow on the ground that she had more information and experience on that subject. [Renewed laughter.]

But what I want to call your attention to is this. I stated that you had $145,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury of this nation. You have callable, redeemable bonds at this hour to the amount of $197,000,000. Why do you not take this $145,000,000 out of the Treasury, buy $145,000,000 of these Windom bonds and discharge our debt to that amount?

Mr. SPRINGER. We have not got the key of the Treasury yet.

Mr. BELFORD. And you will not do it when you do have the key. You have got a bill pending here to-day where the estimates, I am informed, amount to $34,000,000 while your appropriations amount to $12,000,000. I wish to God Almighty the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in this House could be afflicted with the disease called the malady of thought in the direction of liberal appropriations. [Laughter.]

Now, why am I in favor of this Galveston Harbor? We are building a railroad from the city of Denver to Galveston. We expect to avail ourselves of the products of Texas and ship her cattle through Colorado to the East.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time is exhausted.

Mr. BELFORD. I will have to get in the balance of what I want to say some other time.

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order against the gentleman's amendment that it is not within the jurisdiction of a bill appropriating money for rivers and harbors. Besides, it is the substance of a pending bill, and therefore not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BELFORD. I expect the Chair will rule my amendment out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado admits his amendment is obnoxious to the point of order, and the Chair rules it out.

Mr. BELFORD. I think any amendment on the subject of water is obnoxious under the general rules of this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last three words of the pending paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of this committee to the further fact that works which have been begun have not been prosecuted with that zeal and economy which should characterize great national works, and I call the attention of the committee to this fact: that the Chief of Engineers does not know how much we are paying annually to civil engineers, how much we are paying annually to the regular Engineer Corps; and he has not the remotest conception of what the value of the plant is. But we know enough to understand that there are men in this employment at salaries varying from $350 down to $85 per month as engineers. I shall incorporate in my remarks what I have been able to find of information on this subject. This much I learn, that the officers in charge of the work, I mean the civilian engineers as well as the regular Engineer Corps, are paid annual salaries, amounting in the aggregate to half a million dollars a year.

More than this, I find that the annual pay of employés whose names appear in the last Blue Book, those who are above the grade of laborers, was $515,000 for the Mississippi River Commission alone. (See speech of Mr. HEPBURN, first session Forty-eighth Congress.) Now all these expenses go on whether we make a large or a small appropriation for rivers and harbors.

I desire to read now from a report of the Chief of Engineers, General Newton:

Hon. Mr. WHITE, House of Representatives:

SIR: In reply to your telephonic message, just received, asking the salaries paid to civil engineers employed by the United States on rivers and harbors, as well as the value of the plant employed on rivers throughout the United States, I have the honor to state that the salaries paid the assistant engineers vary from $250 to $85 a month.

He made a mistake there, for it is from $350 down to $85.

The total number of these assistants is one hundred and eighty-three. It is impossible to state the value of the plant employed on rivers throughout the United States, except by addressing the individual officers of the Corps of Engineers in charge of the works or improvements.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, Brig., Brt. Maj. Gen.

Is not that a beautiful officer to have at the head of these great works?

Again he says in a telegram:

WAR DEPARTMENT, January 31, 1885.

Hon. JOHN D. WHITE:

It is impossible to answer your question without a careful examination of office records, which would require much work for many days. If no appropriations are made and no work is to be done, the plant could be sold and expenses reduced to zero in a very short time upon many small works.

JNO. NEWTON,
Chief Engineers.

Now, sir, the point I desire to make is that no matter whether that bill carries $11,000,000 or whether it carries $25,000,000, you have the annual expense of the machinery, of the plant, of the engineers, and the annual salaries of officers and employés above the grade of laborers, and if your bill is a small one so much the less goes for your public improvements.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact, also, that this bill of $11,000,000, when the Engineer Department of the Government, under their sworn statements, tell us they can use judiciously, wisely, profitably, and economically $34,000,000, amounts simply to saying that you do not have faith in the capacity of the engineers to form a judgment, or that you have an abiding faith in your committee that acts with closed doors.

If we are convinced that the engineers are correct in their methods and estimates, then we ought to appropriate the full amount of money recommended by them.

In the protest against a river and harbor bill of a former Congress, to which I alluded a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker CARLISLE, Mr. WILLIS, and Mr. COX, and a number of Democrats signing the protest, the theory was laid down that, in the first place, the appropriation was unconstitutional, and in the second, that we did not have the money in the Treasury. If your Democratic platform of 1884 can be relied upon as the basis of your belief, then your constitutional objection is overcome. If you can rely upon the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury that there are now $146,000,000 in the Treasury, the second objection is overcome. The question then recurs, do the people want cheap transportation? If they do, how are they to get it? I answer, by improving the rivers, by improving the harbors, and by compelling the railroads to come in direct competition with nature's own water ways.

But if you are going to make any of these improvements, where will you stop? Will you stop with the Cumberland River on the idea that it is a great river, or with the Great Pee Dee River on the ground that it is a great river; or will you stop with the Big Tombigbee River on the idea that it is a great river? There is no limit if you carry out the theory embodied in the decision of the Supreme Court, that every river on which there is commerce is a navigable river. And, in my humble opinion, we shall make adequate appropriations from the abundance in our Treasury to improve all the navigable water ways of the Republic, and thus insure competition with railroads and secure cheap transportation for the people of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Bangor and Penobscot River, Maine: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 12 insert:
"Improving the mouth of the Narraguagus River at Millbridge, Me., $20,000."

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, that proposition to put an item into the appropriation bill for that improvement was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and as the members of the House were not given the permission or privilege this year of going before the committee, we were obliged to place propositions of that kind in the hands of some member and trust to the action of the committee upon them.

I have been informed that the reason why the committee failed to include that item in the bill is because it is not recommended in the Book of Estimates for this year, and that the committee in preparing the bill had adopted the rule or usage that they would not insert anything in their bill not embraced in the recommendations of the Book of Estimates.

I found upon inquiry of the engineers connected with these works that a survey had been made and a recommendation filed in the year 1880 by the board of engineers. The suggestion was then made that an item be inserted for a survey for this work. I was informed by the engineer in charge of that portion of the coast that he had examined the report made in 1880 by General Thom, of the engineers; that the report seemed to be adequate, and that if a new survey were ordered he should be obliged to state that it was unnecessary. Upon making that suggestion the item for the survey was stricken out of the bill; and therefore as the bill stands now no provision has been made.

The proposition for the improvement of this river is based upon the report of the engineers, to be found upon pages 535, 536, and 537 of the report for 1880. It is a report on improving the mouth of the Narraguagus River at Millbridge, Me. In that report the engineer making the survey states:

The improvement proposed to be made at this place consists in dredging a channel from deep water below Turner's Point to the deep water of Fickett's Point, called the "Deep Hole," the only available anchorage in the harbor. As this place is only accessible at or near high tide for vessels navigating these waters, it is now of little value for vessels seeking shelter during heavy weather and at time of low water. At present there is only five and a half feet of water at mean low water, or four feet at extreme low water, over the several bars crossing the channel. This improvement would also enable the steamers of the Portland, Bangor and Machias Steamboat Company, which touch at this port four times a week during the entire year, to land passengers and the heavy freights for this place at the lower steamboat wharf, whereas now they have to make the stop in the lower bay (except at high water) and transfer passengers and freights on board of a lighter, at great expense and loss of time.

Much of the lumber manufactured in the saw-mills at Cherryfield (about seven miles above the draw-bridge) is shipped from the port of Millbridge. Vessels of the larger class are also built here at three different ship-yards.

I will state also, Mr. Chairman, that this point is a landing point for the line of steamers between Mount Desert Ferry and Annapolis, Nova Scotia. Without going any further into the details of the matter I ask for the adoption of my amendment appropriating $20,000 for this improvement. The engineers recommended $50,000, but I have placed the amount at $20,000, bringing it as near as possible to what I believe has been the pro rata proportion adopted by the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think it is hardly necessary to say more in connection with this matter than to state the fact that there is not a line before the committee with reference to this improvement. Whatever information we have in regard to it is in old reports of the engineers, and as there is no report bearing upon it before the committee it was not under consideration and has not received any consideration.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest that I endeavored in every possible way to have information with regard to this matter placed before the committee? I conferred with no fewer than three members of the committee. I submitted to them this report and placed before them my correspondence with the engineer in charge of the coast of Maine, one of whose communications I hold in my hand, which declares that a further survey and report are unnecessary, because the survey heretofore made was entirely adequate to justify the appropriation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The point is that we had no current report, which is usual in such cases from the engineers; a fact which is not in conflict at all with the statement made by the gentleman from Maine. As to cases of that sort, the committee saw very clearly there was almost an indefinite number of them. There were more of a current character than we could deal justly by, and they did not consider it expedient to enter into that class of cases.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What class of cases does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The cases that have not got current reports and are not indorsed by the Chief of Engineers. Once you throw open that door, and there is no end to the appropriations that would be demanded at the hands of the committee. Therefore we discarded that class of propositions without beginning to express an opinion upon them, having more submitted to us than we can do justice by. This is not a condemnation of the project but a non-examination of it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Permit me to say that it seems to me impossible under the rule adopted by the committee for any appropriation to be obtained for any improvement that may have been recommended in the past. There is no way to get a new survey and a new recommendation, because the engineers have already made the survey and it would be a waste of money to survey it again. I appeal to the House to act upon this on the merits of the survey made and reported on in the regular mode some years ago.

The question being taken on agreeing to Mr. BOUTELLE's amendment, there were—ayes 51, noes 57.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Maine, Mr. BOUTELLE, and the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 81, noes 84.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word of the paragraph.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of this committee to the further fact that while we have got one hundred and forty-six millions in the Treasury we have, under Democratic influences, the same President who vetoed the river and harbor bill of 1882 appointing a free-trade Democrat as Secretary of the Treasury who is also a free-whisky Democrat, and has gone so far as to lend millions of money to the whisky "ring;" and yet, sir, the Republican party went out of power because it appropriated eighteen millions and a half for the people's public works. I desire to read here a statement from a Democratic paper in accord with the President. It says:

As a matter of fact the President has all along sympathized with the distillers in their distress, and was glad when it was discovered that a remedy remained within the law. Friends of the measure who were urging it did not neglect, of course, to lay their case before the Executive, and were greatly encouraged at every step of the proceedings by the knowledge that his good wishes attended them. There was never a moment, indeed, when the President would have thrown a single obstacle in the way. This talk that the distillers have succeeded in securing from the Secretary of the Treasury what Congress had denied to them reveals only the pigheadedness of some people.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the country to the fact that while this Committee on Rivers and Harbors has been able to report an appropriation only one-third as large as that which has been recommended by the sworn engineers, the Chief Executive, through his Cabinet, has been able to lend to the most infernal whisky monopoly in this country millions of dollars, money which under the law has fallen due, and which under the action of this Congress in its first session and under the action of the Forty-seventh Congress in both its sessions was required to be paid when due.

Again, sir, I want to call the attention of the country to the fact that this bill is going to be put through by a Democratic majority, composed, in part, of at least forty members who are not entitled to seats upon this floor. I remember when a most elegant gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] the other day called attention to the fact that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] had not been returned to the next Congress. I wondered whether it had come to this, that a member occupying a seat on this floor by the small vote of 3,514 in a district containing 87,000 colored people and only 65,000 white people, a district which has a colored majority of 22,258, and in which there are at least 25,000 voters—I wondered, I say, whether we had reached the point where a gentleman occupying a seat under such conditions would comment here upon the fact that another gentleman had failed to be returned to the next Congress. If it be said that the gentleman from Georgia had no opponent, I desire to call attention to the fact that in the election of a Congressman at large the vote was only 3,348 for the Democratic candidate at large, and only 162 for the Republican candidate at large in this district containing at least 25,000 voters, and having a colored population of 23,258 in excess of its white population. You may apply this test to gentlemen on the other side of the House and you will find that there are at least forty of them sitting here who have no right to their seats.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improving breakwater at mouth of Saco River, Maine: Continuing improvement and repairs, $10,000.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last two words.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not time to itemize the vote in the counties, but I shall do so in my printed remarks.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is not discussing any question that is before the House or that is germane to the bill under consideration. This is a water bill, and not a whisky bill or an election bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Whisky and water naturally go together, the more you take of one the more you want of the other. [Laughter].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] will confine his remarks to the question before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REAGAN. Do I understand the Chair to overrule the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. On the contrary, the Chair held the point of order to be well taken, and requested the gentleman from Kentucky to confine his remarks to the question before the committee.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to the fact that I am coming rapidly to Galveston Harbor. [Laughter.] I hope the gentleman will possess his soul in patience, for I am aware of the fact, which he will not deny, that nearly $2,000,000 have been sunk in Galveston Harbor, and that the proposition of this bill which will meet with most universal condemnation is the one to create a harbor for a city where there is shoal water for fifty miles in front of it.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic party has come into power upon such doctrines as this: "We believe that labor is best rewarded where it is freest and most intelligent;" and yet, sir, in the Georgia district to which I have alluded there are 152,000 people, over 25,000 of them voters, and less than 4,000 actually voting.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I must insist upon the point of order. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is discussing an election in the State of Georgia, and not anything contained in this bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is better posted in the history of this matter than I am, but the country does not know as much about it as my friend from Texas does, for he was in a position for four years to know all about it.

These are some of the Democratic doctrines:

We believe that labor is the best rewarded where it is freest and most enlightened. We oppose sumptuary laws which vex the citizen and interfere with individual liberty——

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I must again call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the gentleman from Kentucky is not discussing the measure before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] will suspend. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will please cite the rule to which he invites the attention of the Chair, and which he thinks is violated by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, do I have to cite a rule to show that in a five-minute debate a gentleman is not entitled to discuss matters that are not relevant or germane to the bill we are considering? If so, I will take my seat.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

In reply to the gentleman from Texas, I want to say that, if I am not mistaken, when the House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union anything which relates to the welfare of the Union is admissible in the discussion. If I can show to the intellect of the gentleman from Texas that whisky regulation by the Treasury Department was made because there was abundance of money in the Treasury, and because there were Democratic influences brought to bear upon it—if I can show that the Democratic majority in this House and in the other wing of the Capitol is not the old Jeffersonian, not the old Jacksonian Democracy, but the late seceding Democracy; and if I can show to the entire satisfaction of this House that we have more money in the Treasury for rivers and harbors than we have to lend to whisky men, I think the House will pardon me for the slight allusion which I have made to whisky in discussing a water bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Not on the point of order. I desire to proceed with my remarks, if the gentleman from Texas will allow me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read from the Digest, page 282.

The Clerk read as follows:

"A member shall confine himself to the question under debate and avoid personality."—RULE XIV, clause 1; but in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union he is not bound to confine himself to the question under debate—Cong. Globe, 2, 30, p. 587; 1, 31, p. 1475; 1, 32, p. 1856—except where a special order is pending, when the debate must be confined strictly to the measure under consideration.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Now, in reference to this point of order I would like to say one word further. I am aware of the fact that on yesterday general leave was given to print in the RECORD; but this proviso was put in, that nothing should be printed under that leave which did not directly relate to the river and harbor bill. And it was just to suit the case of the gentleman from Texas that I rose to make these remarks, so that I would not have to print them in the RECORD under that general leave. I am glad to have the gentleman's attention, and I hope I shall be allowed to proceed.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my colleague [Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky] will be permitted to go on, and that the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his point of order. I believe this Committee of the Whole desires to proceed as business men in the consideration of a business matter.

Mr. REAGAN. I think it is an imposition upon the House to indulge in general remarks of this character when we are operating under an order of the House to consider the river and harbor appropriation bill. We are not in Committee of the Whole for general debate; but we are considering the river and harbor bill under the five-minute rule. It has been ruled a hundred times in my hearing within the last few years that under these circumstances remarks must be confined to the question before the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no hesitation as to the proper ruling in this particular case. By order of the House, the Committee of the Whole is proceeding to consider the river and harbor appropriation bill. The Chair, therefore, regards it as a special order; so that the general rule in regard to debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union does not apply, but members are required to confine their remarks to the question under consideration. Therefore the Chair holds that the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky were out of order. The gentleman has two minutes left, in which he may proceed in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to the fact that from the foundation of this Government down to the present time we have appropriated for purposes of this kind not $105,000,000, as was stated by several gentlemen who are members of this close corporation called the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but we have appropriated $142,000,000; and if this bill passes we shall have appropriated $154,445,339.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Not counting what the Senate will add.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Not counting what the Senate will add, as my friend from Maine suggests.

Now, General Gillmore, in his report on the Charleston Harbor, states:

It has been the subject of profound regret on my part that the importance of this great national work has not been recognized in Congress by liberal appropriations.

Mark the language, "liberal appropriations."

Frequent stoppages and increase in the ultimate cost of the work have been the result of this policy.

He asks for $600,000, and this committee proposes to appropriate the sum of $150,000. In reading such statements as this from the engineer's report, I naturally inquired as to the annual cost of the plant, the machinery, and all the equipage for carrying on this work, together with the salaries of the men who must be employed whether we make large or small appropriations. I desired to get at these facts in order to show to this committee and to the country that in view of all the outlay necessarily made a small bill is niggardly; a small bill is not up to the needs of the times; and as no Congressman can get a dollar of the money appropriated for rivers and harbors, the President's insinuating veto message to the contrary notwithstanding, we should appropriate liberally for public works so as to insure their economic and early completion.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Portsmouth, N. H.: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. HAYNES. I move to strike out "$10,000" and, in lieu thereof, to insert $20,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment in good faith, and from a knowledge that the sum recommended by the committee in their report and in the bill before the House is totally inadequate to carry on the work now in progress at Portsmouth Harbor. I think I do not underestimate the peculiar difficulties under which this committee labor in their work; but this I must say, that taking this item by itself, independent of every other item in this report, I am unable to understand by what course of reasoning they have arrived at the conclusion they have. But taking it in comparison with other recommendations herein contained for harbors of much less importance and for harbors of less magnitude, I am still more in the dark. We have here one of the most important harbors on the Atlantic coast, a harbor in a great many respects unexcelled by any harbor of this country, a harbor where the heaviest vessel that floats, or ever will float, can enter at all stages of the tide and in all seasons of the year, a harbor that contains one of the great naval stations of this country, a harbor where, in the last year, by the report before me, over eight hundred vessels arrived.

Now, the Chief of Engineers recommends, and I think he simply reiterates the former recommendations, that all appropriations for this harbor shall be expended at one point until the work there is completed, namely, for the removal of what is known as the Gangway Rock, a dangerous obstacle in the channel of the harbor, right in the jaws of the commerce that enters that port. The character of this obstruction he states as follows:

Owing to the strong tidal currents in this harbor, Gangway Rock has proved to be a serious difficulty to navigation, and especially so to United States vessels which have visited this port and the navy-yard.

It is not alone, Mr. Chairman, a menace to private interests and private, commerce but to Government interests.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to say in regard to Portsmouth Harbor that the committee were governed by the following fact: The Chief of Engineers reports, as the gentleman states, that Gangway Rock is the only point upon which work should now be done; that nothing else should be touched until this was out of the way. His report shows that Gangway Rock is half removed, and the estimate for that was $85,000—leaving $42,000. There are $24,000 on hand and $10,000 appropriated in this bill—making enough to remove that rock; and until it is removed no other work can be done. The committee has endeavored to be just to this harbor, as its importance requires. I ask for a vote.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 60.

Mr. HAYNES. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. WILLIS and Mr. HAYNES.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friend will not make that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on it?

Mr. HAYNES. No; I will withdraw the point.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Burlington, Vt.: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I desire to offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this and all other improvements of rivers and harbors provided for in this bill shall be conducted by the Engineer Department, under the authority and direction of James B. Eads.

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will state his point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. We are not on the question of legislation. We are considering rivers and harbors; and the amendment is not within the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I ask leave to strike out everything that relates to any other portion of the bill except this particular clause.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friend will withdraw that, and let us go on as business men with this bill.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I think it would be easier to finish the matter by inserting that amendment; but I will move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized on that amendment.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I shall probably be absent from the House at the time the clause is reached which contains the name of Mr. Eads as putting him in charge of the improvement at Galveston and elsewhere, and it was a desire to put myself on record on that point which led me to offer the amendment while I yet had the opportunity to be heard.

I occupy, it is true, a position, sir, upon the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, but I am frank to confess I know no more about the subject now than I did when I attended the only meeting of that committee which has been held since I had the honor to be upon it, and I speak upon this subject as a sufferer to some extent by the very proposition which is now made.

I speak as one who knows that the question of Mr. Eads's ability, the question of the success of his plans, of his enterprises, the question as to whether he is a great success or a great failure as an engineer is a mooted question in the minds of the people of this country, scientific or otherwise, and not a concluded question by any means as this bill assumes it to be.

I have observed, sir, the unanimity with which the gentlemen from that section of the country who represent it here on this floor seem to espouse the idea of his ability; and I give them credit for their perfect good faith in what they have said and all they propose to do concerning it. But there are hundreds and thousands of men in the Mississippi Valley to-day, as I know from ownership and interest in Mississippi and Louisiana property, who believe honestly that the system and schemes proposed by Mr. Eads as prosecuted to-day are going to ultimately ruin the Mississippi Valley. There are men who believe that under the present system of engineering adopted or recommended by him he will force the river through the Bonnet Carré crevasse or the Atchafalaya River, as it is inclined now to go under the present system of improving the river as far as it has gone.

The tendency is already in that direction. There are men there in that valley, scientific or otherwise, who believe this is to be the result; and yet the proposition of the committee in reporting this bill to the House is to absolutely ignore the whole Engineer Department of this Government, headed by the Chief of Engineers, who wears the stars of a general upon his collar and who has been educated at the national academy where millions and millions of dollars have been spent to give the best engineering instruction that the world can give. The proposition embodied in this bill to-day is that we are to ignore and set aside that whole Department, and on the ipse dixit of a non-professional committee to put aside a regularly organized department of this Government and place one of the largest, greatest, and most important improvements proposed in this whole country in charge of a gentleman whose theories and schemes are at best but problematical.

Now, sir, I desire to place myself on record as being opposed to that in toto, and I maintain if this is to be carried out here we might as well at once abolish the department of engineering at West Point and let the Committee on Rivers and Harbors take full control.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LIBBEY obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I am very much obliged to my colleague.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have pretty much said all that I desired to say in this connection. I say, only to complete the sentence which was on my lips when my time expired, that if this recommendation of the committee is to be taken, if their plan is to be adopted, let us follow it up to its legitimate conclusions by the announcement that the United States academy at West Point is a failure.

Let us follow it up by the announcement that we have an organization containing hundreds of men educated at a vast expense to the Government, paid millions of dollars in salaries, as has been shown by the statistics furnished by General Newton, who do not know what they are about. I ask you to follow it up by that announcement. But, Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to follow it up, because the very act which has been presented here for our adoption is itself an announcement that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House of Representatives of the United States knows more about engineering science than the engineers of the Army, and that they and Mr. Eads can run this Government, while there is nothing for the Engineer Department to do but to draw its pay and take a back seat.

I have never in my life seen a proposition which not only ignored but absolutely insulted the Department of Engineers as this does. I say that it is a proposition which assumes that a mooted and vexed question about the Mississippi River and its treatment is settled, and settled by the views of Mr. Eads, and that that system carries with it a right and title to take possession of the vast improvements of this Government and control them at will and establish plans based on any kind of theory, while the Engineering Department of the Government is to stand by and idly suck its thumbs. That is what it means.

Let me add in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that I do not make this statement as an enemy or opponent of this bill. I make it as a friend of river and harbor improvements, and I make it as a man who will vote liberally for the enlargement of these appropriations from Maine to Florida, and as one who deprecates the introduction here of the idea by anybody that "you get more than I do," or that "your section gets more than mine." When it comes to Boston Harbor, which has had more money poured out into it than my whole State ever got, I mean to vote for Boston; and if there is anybody here who believes it to be necessary and wants to move to increase the amount, I will vote with him for it. But the greatest calamity that could have befallen this bill was the introduction of this personal direction clause in it.

I say it is not right, sir, to tie up the fortunes and theories of a private individual with the adoption of a great measure of national importance such as this. I say it is a misfortune that an adventurer and his fortunes should be linked with a measure of public policy; and when this bill is to be voted upon I shall vote for every appropriation it contains, and more besides if it is believed that they are not sufficient, but that proposition I can never sustain.

I only desired, Mr. Chairman, in this hurried manner to record before this House and the country my view that the proposition to make the fortunes of one man by incorporating his name in a great national measure in defiance and to the exclusion of the Engineer Department of this Government in its boldness and audacity surpasses anything I have ever witnessed in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 16 insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the sums in this act appropriated shall be paid to civil engineers; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to detail from the Army of the United States such a number of captains and lieutenants as will perform the labors of the civil engineers now employed under the direction of the Secretary of War."

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order on that amendment, and pending that I appeal to my friend from Iowa to withhold it until we get to the section where it would have a better application.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have offered this amendment in perfect good faith. It applies as well to the bill if attached to the paragraph which has just been read as if attached to any other. With reference to the point of order, I would like to hear what it is.

Mr. REAGAN. The point of order is that the amendment changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. The law is now that this work is to be done under the direction of the War Department. The gentleman from Iowa proposes to change that and adopt another rule which does not reduce expenditure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair could not on account of the confusion in the committee hear distinctly the point of order that has been raised.

Mr. REAGAN. I will restate it. The amendment changes existing law and does not reduce expenditures. The existing law requires these works to be done under the direction of the Secretary of War. This adopts a new and different rule, not existing in the law now, and it does not retrench expenditure.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have been utterly unable to hear what was the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to state his point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has made the point.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to state it. The Chair can not hear me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair heard the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], but thought the gentleman was repeating a point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. REAGAN. I was not aware the point of order had been made by the gentleman from Kentucky; otherwise I would not have made it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have been unable to hear what point of order has been raised on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the Chair is informed the point of order raised is that this is new legislation and does not on its face decrease expenditure.

Mr. HEPBURN. I suggest to the Chair that this is not a general appropriation bill, and that point of order can not be raised in connection with it. I desire to suggest, secondly, that while the amendment may not specifically upon its face curtail expenditures, yet it must be plain to gentlemen that it must have that effect.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee further than to state what is in my judgment the foundation of this rule which does not allow new legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the gentleman from Kentucky claim that this is a general appropriation bill covered by the twenty-first rule?

Mr. WILLIS. I claim it is a general appropriation bill to the extent of excluding new legislation changing existing law and which is not in the line of economy.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the further point of order that the amendment is not germane to this clause of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. We give these appropriation bills the right of way, and, as they have the right of way, we hamper their jurisdiction; and this being one of the appropriation bills having the right of way, I take it it comes within the rule prohibiting new legislation unless in the line of economy; and moreover the amendment is not germane to this part of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Allow me to call the attention of the Chair to the ruling found on page 381 of the Digest, where, under the caption of "River and harbor bill," I find this:

Not one of the general appropriation bills. See debate and decision of Chairman CARLISLE.

Mr. BOUTELLE. On this very point now raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no difficulty on that proposition. This is not a general appropriation bill; but the Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] as to the amendment being germane to the bill under consideration. The point as made by the gentleman from Kentucky is that the amendment is not germane to the clause; the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is that it is not germane to the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not germane to this clause of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. This bill is for the purpose of carrying on certain works of improvement. Engineers are essential incidents to carrying on all these improvements. They must be provided for in some way, and it is proposed by this amendment to provide for them in part. It seems to me that it is clearly germane to the general purpose of the bill, and therefore germane to all of the clauses of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again read the amendment for information.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, it is certainly competent for this House, while it is making an appropriation, to say how that appropriation shall be expended. If this is not a general appropriation bill and not subject to the particular rule, then certainly it must come under the general rule which enables Congress to direct the manner of the expenditure, and it has been repeatedly ruled. In such a case, if it does come under the particular rule, or under the reason of the rule, the employment of officers already under the pay of the Government is on its face a retrenchment. This amendment provides that none of the money shall be paid to civil engineers, but that Army officers who are already under the pay of the Government shall be detailed to do that work.

Mr. LONG. I understand the question to be whether this amendment is germane. The amendment is in the form of a proviso, and that proviso by its very terms applies to the whole bill and not to any part of it. The proviso is germane to the bill. The mere place in the bill where that proviso shall come in is of no consequence. It applies to each clause and to the whole bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I submit that in the present posture of the case this amendment is not in order, because it has no relation to the precise subject now under consideration. I think that while this is not a general appropriation bill, it is in the nature of a general appropriation bill, and in Committee of the Whole is to be dealt with as an appropriation bill so far as it is found necessary or practicable to observe the rule which requires the committee, in dealing with a general subject-matter, to take it up by sections. The point I wish to make is this, that while the general subject now under consideration is the river and harbor bill, by the practice and usage of the House we deal with such a bill section by section, and therefore, when we are dealing with the particular clause now under consideration, the question to be considered is whether the amendment proposed is germane to that particular part of the bill. Now the question raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is a question of administration, which relates to the general character of the bill, and, as has been said, it comes in appropriately in the latter part of the bill where matters of administration are considered and provided for; but to attempt to raise a question of administration and put it into the bill at this point is only to cause confusion in our method of transacting business.

Therefore, in my judgment, if we are to observe the rule or the usage of the House which requires us in dealing with bills of this nature—I do not claim that this is a general appropriation bill—to deal with them by sections. I think we shall find it extremely inconvenient if we undertake to insert in this part of the bill a matter which has no relation to the precise question now under consideration. I call attention to the seventh clause of Rule XVI, on page 196 of the Manual, which provides that when a motion or proposition is under consideration, no subject different from the one under consideration shall be admitted under color of an amendment, and I submit that under the true construction of that rule we are now dealing with a proposition which is not the entire bill, and that this amendment has no relation to the paragraph under consideration, and therefore is not germane.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] seems to me to involve simply a matter of literary taste, as to where this amendment should come in. I submit that if it can not be attached to the paragraph now under consideration, there is no portion of the bill to which it can be attached, according to the gentleman's argument, because the paragraphs in the bill all apply to distinct matters, and this amendment proposes that this principle shall apply to all the paragraphs—that it shall be general in its operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The clause of Rule XVI, cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE], reads as follows:

And no notice or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

The Chair thinks that the subject under consideration is the improvement of rivers and harbors, and that this amendment is not upon a different subject, because it is not passing to a different subject for the committee to undertake to prescribe how the money appropriated in this bill for such improvements shall be expended. The point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say when interrupted by this point of order that there is a popular belief in this country that these works of improvement are carried on by the engineer officers of the Army, and that to that extent at least—the matter of engineering—there was no additional expense imposed upon the Treasury. I desire to suggest to the committee that that is a serious mistake. A report recently made to this House by the Secretary of War develops the fact that two hundred and two civil engineers are now employed upon the various river and harbor improvements, and that a monthly expenditure in excess of $35,000 is incurred in their payment. Four hundred thousand dollars is paid annually by this Government to engineers outside of the Army of the United States. We have at this time nearly 1,500 educated engineers of the class named in this amendment. These gentlemen have all received the same education that is received by those who are graduated with such rank as entitles them to appointment in the engineers.

There is no difference in the character of the instruction received by West Point graduates, and it is therefore reasonable to suppose that those graduates of that institution who are not in the Engineer Corps have such capacity as is needed for carrying on these works. There are 1,500 gentlemen from whom these details might be made. It is complained on every occasion when we are discussing an Army appropriation bill that the Army of the United States is top-heavy; that it has entirely too many officers. It is a fact known to at least a hundred gentlemen now present that three officers are not needed in time of peace for the command of a single company. Very many of these officers are loitering away their time at frontier posts, where they are absolutely doing nothing; and by a proper detail they might be placed in such a situation that they would be earning their monthly pay and saving the Government $400,000 a year. I am entirely unwilling to believe that these gentlemen have not the capacity for this work, or that they are not equal to other gentlemen who are now taken from civil life and employed upon these public improvements. It often happens that a county engineer or a county surveyor is employed upon these works, and often it is a mere matter of favoritism as to who shall receive the large stipends that are paid.

I believe it would be a wise procedure to put these officers to work, thus saving this large amount of money and securing this better character of educated talent to carry on with increased efficiency these various needed improvements.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to one or two very important features in this amendment. It proposes to take two hundred officers out of the line of the Army, detaching them from their regiments and from their present duty, and put them upon the engineering works of the Government. The gentleman who submits this amendment presents no information from the Secretary of War that the public service can stand such a detail. This of itself is a very weighty matter to be considered. We are at present employing in round numbers one hundred military engineers upon our civil works and two hundred civil engineers upon the same works. Our works are in charge of the military engineers, who employ the civil engineers.

But the real foundation proposition of the gentleman's amendment is to keep civil works entirely in the charge of military engineers. Now, the growth and drift of enlightened thought in this country is in the other direction. Engineering science is so extensive, is so great in all the elements of greatness, that those countries which have achieved eminence in the specialties of that science have found that men must devote themselves to the special features of it. I have a letter, which is only one of many from learned men upon this subject, from the president of one of the most eminent universities in this country, who states that he has examined the working of this system in every European nation and with unusual facilities for getting at the facts; and that none of those countries permit their military engineers to have anything to do with their civil works, nor do they permit their civil engineers to run their military works. They do not go upon the "jack-of-all-trades-and-good-at-none" plan. They compel their military engineers to confine themselves to that engineering which has reference to the art of war, and their civil engineers to confine themselves to the civil engineering features of that vast and intricate science. This is only in accordance with the sound doctrine of a division of labor as laid down by Adam Smith, as due to the "utility" of Bacon, and as can not be successfully controverted by any man.

What would be thought of us, if in time of war we should put all our great military operations under the charge of civil engineers? What ought to be thought of us, if in any time of peace we put all our civil operations under the charge of military engineers as we do now? It is foolish to the last degree, as reason and results loudly testify. Each, in subordination, can supplement the other as occasion may require; but we should regard economy and the public weal, and stick to reason.

There are points of analogy between the two professions; but there are great differences between them, and in none of our great institutions where civil engineering is taught, one branch being enough to constitute the life-work of even a great man, do they ever pretend to trench upon the great science of military engineering. It seems to me that our military engineers are making a grave mistake. They ought to resent, as far as is practicable and proper, being employed out of the strict line of their profession. We have had twenty years of peace. Let us have twenty years more. Let us work our military engineers to death on civil works. Let us get into war with a foreign country. What kind of men have we then? How will they contend with the great military engineers of foreign countries? Our old men are dead. Our new ones are untrained in war. How much blood and treasure is needed to fit them for duty? We need them now and soon will employ them on our coast defenses, and we have not enough for needed work. We need to work them in this, and to send them abroad for study.

I have stated what is the drift of enlightened opinion in this matter. There is now before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a bill, introduced by me, which I have not asked the committee to take action upon this session, but which I expect to perfect and to ask them to take action upon next session—a bill to create a river and harbor bureau, with the view of ultimately putting this whole business upon the basis that it occupies to-day in every enlightened country except ours.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLANCHARD obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I thank my friend for his kindness. We put these works in the hands of men not trained to this division of the science. What is the result? We find works at all the great harbors along the coast in such a wretched state of dilapidation and disorder that our committee by a unanimous vote incorporated in this bill a measure which I introduced for the appointment of a United States harbor board to take these harbors all under consideration.

Our committee unanimously adopted a provision under which this board is to embrace four civil engineers, only two Army engineers and one member to be detailed, for his technical knowledge, from the Coast and Geodetic Survey. I argued this nearly a whole day and a half before my committee. We went all over the books. We did more than I can cite here. At the very inception of the great marine works of America, some ten years ago, the gentlemen in charge of those works, instead of sitting like Paul at the feet of Gamaliel to learn of those who had made a special study of this business, got into an unfortunate wrangle—our military engineers upon the one hand, and the civil and hydraulic engineers and the balance of mankind and the laws of Almighty God upon the other hand. The result has never been shrouded in a particle of doubt.

There is not on earth, with all the magnificent sea-works that exist, some of them over a century old, a single one embracing any one of the essential features of these submerged fascine works in salt water, where there is no mud or silt-bearing stream. There is nothing to countenance such a system. I have seen it mentioned but once in the annals of high foreign authority, and then with ridicule. Having gone into this line of experiments, they have brought the work on the Mississippi River to-day to a point where, as I can show by turning to their reports and as I briefly outlined in my remarks the other day, and as I will show in my printed remarks, as promised, by clear citations of the text, they propose and practice a plan of work which is a complete and radical abandonment of the original plan for improving that great river, and their wretched experiments are attended only with failure. They forced an eminent civil engineer off the commission; and they have now a plan of operations sketched out to spend, as stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], $150,000,000. The calculation is a very plain one; and there is not in any of their work a guarantee that it will last twelve months.

This incubus of untrained engineers——

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that. I hope his statement will receive the attention of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Your statement is correct.

A MEMBER. In what?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will show you in what. They have put the cart before the horse and brought it to a point where they propose to carry on a systematic course of revetment to prevent caving, instead of contracting, as a condition precedent, the shoal places in order to bring about uniformity of width, uniformity of depth, uniformity of velocity, thereby minimizing excessive depth and excessive velocity, the causes of the caving. And their calculations are, in round numbers, that the system will cost $150,000 a mile, and there are nearly a thousand miles of the Mississippi River in this condition, and it has two sides to it, and one side is always caving in where the other is forming a bar; you have, I say, a thousand miles at $150,000 a mile, making an aggregate of $150,000,000; and yet they can not point us to any experiment in this departure from the original plan and from reason showing that it will stand twelve months after a single rise.

Therefore I have agreed with those who have urged that this incubus of mediocrity of untrained engineering talent in this line be taken off that river, or in some way subordinated, and it be put back to the original plan adopted by Congress which Captain Eads formulated, and which, clear in reason and sustained in practice, has never failed. That is in strict accordance with the safe, ascertained laws of hydraulics throughout the world, as indorsed by the most eminent hydraulic engineers, as both in harmony with science and common sense. In no place where it has been carried on has it been a failure, while in no locality where these experiments have been carried on have they been a success. They have brought that grand river and its improvements to the verge of collapse. We have got to that point at which this school of untrained men in this specialty, who, in this and other important works, have abandoned the beaten track in this regard, have shown that in their wretched quarrels pique has been stronger than reason, and they have brought the public interest into this direful state of suffering.

Galveston Harbor is an instance of those harbors improved by that untrained engineering skill of a like character with this so-called improvement of the Mississippi River, involving the same conspicuous fundamental error, and therefore I say the whole drift of American thought, interest, and experience is in just the reverse direction to that indicated by the gentleman's amendment.

And, Mr. Chairman, I trust his amendment will not be adopted, but that we will go on and incorporate sound principles in this bill as far as we seek to incorporate them now, leaving more for the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I will take the floor and yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from Arkansas answer a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. When did this change of policy and plan on the part of the Mississippi River Commission take place?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It took place and is expressed in the first report they made after Eads was forced off the commission. I will take pleasure in showing my friend the exact text of that plain and emphatic determination of that Mississippi River Commission, as I have gone over the whole matter quite recently. It took place in the first report they made after Captain Eads was forced off the commission.

Mr. HISCOCK. When was Eads forced off the commission?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. He was forced off very soon after that second report.

Mr. HEPBURN. Prior to your argument on this bill last year?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It was, and I did not understand it as well when I made my argument last year as I hope I do now, or I would not have indorsed this commission with the confidence I then felt in them.

I look upon that river as a national question. The people of this country have got to a point where commerce demands outlets, and all these bars and all these barriers which clog up the energy and enterprise of our country have got to be removed, and to remove them we may well expect to make expenditures commensurate with the difficulties involved as other nations have been forced to do under like circumstances. And I need only call attention to the fact that France the first year after the Franco-Prussian war appropriated $1,000,000,000 on works of this kind, $100,000,000 to be spent each year for ten years. While we can not go to that great length at once, yet we need not hope to overcome the great natural barriers at much less cost than other nations have to pay under similar circumstances. We have reached the time for a turn, and the battle is joined right here, now.

And, sir, the people of this country do not begrudge expenditures of this kind which bless twice. They bless those who give as well as those who receive. They make goods cheaper to the buyer and higher to the seller. All that the people of this country want is the inauguration of a plan in which they have confidence. But in order to give confidence you must put men at the head of these works of acknowledged success and ability; and then, and only then, will this country prove true to its great duty and destiny. And I trust, sir, in the prosecution of this work that no backward step will be taken, as is proposed here, so much at variance with what we believe to be the only available plan commensurate with the needs of the country, but that we will proceed in the plain, beaten track of modern progress. [Applause.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to listen to the remarks of the gentleman from Arkansas. I am glad to have him re-enforce the statement I made to this House, that an ultimate expenditure of $150,000,000 is proposed for the Mississippi River, and that we can not get out of that work inside of that amount——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman misunderstands me; I did not say that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Under this plan.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I say under the experimental plan.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Under the experimental plan?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But Captain Eads states that under a proper system of conducting the work the whole thing should be done for between $25,000,000 and $50,000,000, and nearer $25,000,000 than $50,000,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes; Captain Eads makes that statement, and——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. And we could not have better authority.

Mr. REED, of Maine. All of these other gentlemen have been making similar statements, and that is just what I complain of. Last year I took a stand against the Mississippi River appropriation, and I did it upon an indication that I saw here in the House. A proposition was made, a sensible business proposition, that we should content ourselves with the prosecution of the work on the two reaches of the river then under process of construction, to see if the plan contemplated in that work was to be a success. If it was a success, then we could go on; if it was not a success, we could suspend operations.

But that business proposition was rejected by an overwhelming crowd of votes. That satisfied me that there were a great many gentlemen who were more interested in the expenditure of money than they were in the navigation of the Mississippi River. Now the gentleman from Arkansas comes before the House and re-enforces by facts the suspicion which the conduct of these gentlemen at that time engendered in the minds of thinking men. It is well, therefore, for us to have fastened on our minds the tremendous fact that there is a proposed expenditure of $150,000,000 involved in this question.

Nor is it any information to me to be told that Captain Eads or Captain Anybodyelse says that he can do it for $25,000,000; for the distinguished men whom we have found out, whom even members of the committee have found out, announced that they could do it for $33,000,000; and the two reaches which have been operated upon originally had an appropriation of $2,670,000, and all of these famous gentlemen told us that that was amply sufficient for all the purposes, on which assurance we were beguiled into this tremendous expenditure. And now one of these commissioners says, and he is the only one who has the manliness to say anything about it, that it is ascertained to-day that these improvements will cost three times the amount they estimated it would cost, and may not last twelve months, as my friend from Massachusetts suggests. But, sir, the three times as much is by no means a certainty.

No man knows what it may cost eventually. No man who has been up and down that river will doubt the fact that a work of this character is like undertaking to chain a tiger with a bullrush.

I intend when we come to this paragraph referring to the Mississippi River in this bill to make some remarks about it. My object now is to impress upon the House the great fundamental fact admitted and asseverated by the gentleman from Arkansas, that $150,000,000 will not see the end of this unjustifiable expenditure.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I confess to a great deal of pleasure in hearing the acknowledgment made by the gentleman from Arkansas as to the probability of the ultimate cost of this work; and I ask him to bring in here the evidence that Captain Eads has not indorsed from the beginning the very plan now pursued by the Mississippi River Commission. I assert that he has indorsed it to the country and to Congress, and that he has never given to the country or to the House any other plan. He has gone out of the commission. They have made changes there. Why? Because 25 per cent. of the money we have appropriated for the improvement of the Mississippi River has been expended in repairing the work that has been done since 1881.

The experience of the last few years has demonstrated that all you are doing is being washed down the river and washed into the Gulf of Mexico. Captain Eads discovered it, and we can fairly draw the inference that, knowing the fact and recognizing the failure of his plan, he voluntarily retired from the commission.

Now, I insist that we can demonstrate here that he is recognized by the Government and the country as having given his indorsement of the present plan as it is now being prosecuted; and I ask the Committee on Rivers and Harbors if they have investigated the question of the amount of money that has been expended for repairs on works that have been done under this plan within the last two years?

Why have you not informed the House on that subject? I assert that of the $8,000,000 which have been appropriated and expended in this work nearly $2,000,000 have been expended in repairs on these mattresses and this revetment work; and yet that fact has been kept from the House, and kept from the country. This committee, with full power to investigate, with full power to ascertain all the facts upon this question, have brought in this bill and attempted to change the manner of doing this work, claiming we must call this Captain Eads to the helm and that he has some new plan, some new method that will give success to this great scheme of public plunder.

No, sir, I say to my friend do not leave this question since you have thrown down the gauntlet on that point, do not leave it till you have brought in the proof that Captain Eads has ever advised against this scheme and against the plan as prosecuted to-day.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HERBERT. I shall endeavor, Mr. Chairman, to bring this debate back to the question really before the committee. When we get to the appropriation for the Mississippi River, gentleman can then discuss that question. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to adopt the principle underlying the amendment of the gentlemen from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] when we get ready for it; but we have not yet made the necessary preparation.

This Government, in expending so many millions of dollars as are appropriated annually in the river and harbor bill, ought to have the benefit of the very best talent and of the services of the men who have received the very best education. The education at West Point in engineering has been increased very much during the last twenty years. But gentlemen will find that the education given there in that branch is not equal to that received in the schools of arts and mining in the New York and Columbia Colleges, or in the special school at Harvard, or in the École Polytechnic of France, or in certain schools in Germany.

We will not be prepared to adopt this policy of using only the talent and education, the skill and ability of our Army officers until we have improved our system of education at West Point. I believe we ought to add another year to the curriculum at that institution, and let it be devoted to the science of engineering. We have not much use now for our officers except as the nucleus of an army. We might as well extend the time and appropriate the money necessary for educating these young men another year, devoting that time especially to the science of engineering. When we shall have done that and turned out graduates who have had the additional time at West Point, then we will be prepared, and not till then, to adopt the principle of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

As it is now, Mr. Chairman, we are simply doing what is done by every government in the world—availing ourselves of the very best talent to do the work. The Government ought not to be limited in its choice. In England the officers who conduct the ordnance survey are most of them civilians, eminent men, who have special qualifications from education and experience. I believe that that is the best policy to pursue. I believe it is the best policy to pursue here until we can, as I have said, provide for giving at West Point the very best education on this subject of engineering of which the human mind is capable.

Mr. WILLIS. Before moving that the committee rise I will ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to withdraw his amendment with a view to renewing it in the morning.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa can withdraw his amendment and renew it when he pleases.

Mr. HEPBURN. With the understanding that I can renew it in the morning, I now withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withhold his motion for a moment.

Mr. WILLIS. I will do so.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In yesterday's discussion the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] made this statement: "That of the appropriation made last year of $520,000 for that portion of the river of which I was the advocate, only $135,000 had been expended; and that, in other words, Congress had appropriated far more than it could judiciously expend." These are the exact words in the RECORD.

Now, as regards the appropriation of last year, I have here a communication from the Chief of Engineer, in which he states that all that money has been expended but $240,000, and that every dollar of that will be expended before the close of the present fiscal year, on the 30th June next. I desire to insert in the RECORD his statement and also a dispatch from the resident engineer at Saint Louis, Major Ernst.

Mr. WILLIS. That is exactly what I said. There has been appropriated a much larger sum than has been expended.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. But will be expended before June 30 next.

The following are the communications referred to by Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1885.

SIR: Your telegram of the 2d instant received to-day. I hasten to inform you that the balance of former appropriation for Mississippi River between mouth of Illinois and Cairo unexpended is $247,000, which will all be expended before close of the fiscal year.

For further information please see report of Major Ernst, herewith, pages 1411, 1417, &c. Estimate submitted by him for next fiscal year, $1,000,000.

This work is now under control of the Mississippi River Commission.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN G. PARKE,
Colonel of Engineers, Bvt. Maj. Gen. United States Army.

Hon. JOHN J. O'NEILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SAINT LOUIS, MO., February 4, 1884.

To Hon. JOHN J. O'NEILL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Amount now available, about $247,000, will all be expended by end of fiscal year; $1,000,000 can be advantageously expended next year. The works stood the heavy break-up of ice a month ago without damage.

ERNST, Engineer.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I now renew my motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asks the consent of the House to submit certain executive communications.

There was no objection.

SURVEY NEAR GUTTENBURG, IOWA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Chief of Engineers of a survey of the Mississippi River near Guttenburg, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a supplemental report of Indian depredation claims reported to the Interior Department since January 13, 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAWCATUCK RIVER, RHODE ISLAND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of a survey of Pawcatuck River, Rhode Island; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. GLASCOCK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2278) correcting the military record of Wickliffe Cooper, deceased, late major Seventh Cavalry and brevet colonel United States Army;

A bill (S. 1242) to reimburse Elizabeth Comstock for customs dues paid by her on articles donated for the relief of colored emigrants;

A bill (S. 468) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary K. S. Eaton; and

A bill (S. 1111) granting an increase of pension to Sally Rodman, widow of General Isaac P. Rodman.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, for one day.

Mr. BENNETT was excused from attendance on the evening session, on account of sickness.

Mr. HERBERT was excused from attendance on the evening session, on account of sickness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the order of the House for a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has that order in mind, but nevertheless the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is in order.

Mr. WILLIS. But that motion will not affect the recess, because the motion to take a recess was agreed to and the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that, but, in the judgment of the Chair, the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is in order under the rule.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is called for, and, the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the regular order is the execution of the order of the House to take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening. The House therefore stands in recess until 8 o'clock this evening, when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] will preside.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at 8 p. m., Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No objection being made, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late with his demand, but the Chair is not disposed to cut him off.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I made it as quickly as I could.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not disposed to take advantage of the gentleman's delay. Does the gentleman [Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky] now call for tellers?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do.

The question was taken, and no one rose to second the demand for tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No one having risen, tellers are refused.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That fact has not been ascertained. Tellers are refused. The House has resolved to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] will take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the next paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Burlington, Vt.: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by making that appropriation $21,000. As I have not the estimates of the Chief of Engineers at hand, I desire to call attention to the anomalous position that we are in here to-night, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to consider a river and harbor bill carrying over $12,000,000, and yet not one-quarter of the members of this House present, not one-half of a quorum present, and by a gag we are forced into this committee. Let the country take notice of that fact. We are here, too, not to discuss this bill, but to discuss such parts of the bill as the Committee on Rivers and Harbors desire, for be it remembered that it was the chairman of the committee who made the motion that we should discuss no item of appropriation here to-night that exceeds $50,000. We are here to discuss the small items in this bill, the trout streams, the catfish streams, and the ponds.

Now, I desire to call attention to the fact that in the Forty-seventh Congress a bill was passed, which has been condemned by a portion of the people, which was uniformly condemned by the metropolitan press controlled by the railroad interests of the country, and which was further condemned by the veto message of the President, which inured to the benefit of the railroad magnates who do not want water transportation in competition with the railway lines. I desire to call attention to the fact that in that bill there was appropriated for the Big Hatchie, for the Great Pee Dee, for the Clinch in Tennessee, for the Big Sunflower in Mississippi, for the South Fork of the Cumberland in Kentucky, for the Tradewater in Kentucky, for the Big Tombigbee, together with the Niagara—for all these there were appropriated only $26,000.

But in your Democratic bill of last session you appropriated for the same items $49,500—nearly double what was carried by the bill of the Forty-seventh Congress. You may apply the same comparison to this bill, and you will find that it is with equal justice condemned.

In the bill of 1882 there were thirty-two rivers for which $5,000 each was appropriated; one for which $4,500 was appropriated; seven with an appropriation of $4,000 each; two, $3,500 each; seventeen, $3,000 each; one, $2,500; seven, $2,000 each; four, $1,500 each; four, $1,000. Your Democratic bill of last session appropriated for twenty-eight rivers $5,000 each; three, $4,000 each; two, $3,500 each; sixteen, $3,000 each; seven, $2,500 each; nine, $2,000 each; one, $1,500; and one, $1,000. In the Forty-seventh Congress the aggregate was $339,000 for these small streams; and at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress it was $257,000. The difference in respect to these streams is not very large.

Now we are here to-night to discuss that part of this bill which it seems is intended to carry the Galveston appropriation, to carry the Mississippi River with ease, to carry the Hennepin Canal, and to carry the other enormous appropriations in this bill. I say we ought to have a full committee. We ought to discuss this thing with the light of day, with three hundred and twenty-five members present, not with an attendance of forty members as we have to-night. And, sir, when the proper time comes I shall call for a quorum; and if your side does not produce it here, you will not make any progress to-night.

Mr. WILLIS. It is very evident that there is not a quorum in the Hall to-night; but the House has been in session only a few minutes. It is well known to members that to-day, for the purpose of expediting the public business, this arrangement for an evening session was made, so that all who desired to oppose any item in this bill could have an opportunity to be present. The question now simply remains whether we shall call here a sufficient number of members to make a quorum, or whether those items which are not in dispute—items which have been carried in every river and harbor bill for the last ten years, items which certainly were in the last bill and the one prior to that—can be disposed of to-night, thus making way for those matters which are in dispute and which can only be determined upon a full vote of the Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors in bringing in this bill stated frankly to the House and to the country that they had no hope of reporting a measure which would escape criticism. As chairman of that committee I felt it to be my duty in the brief opening statement which I made to call attention to four or five items—the Hennepin Canal, if you please, the Galveston Harbor, the Sandy Bay appropriation, and the improvement of the Mississippi River—which would excite debate. Those matters can be discussed and settled when there is a full House.

We are now met here as business men and Representatives of the people, not desiring to waste public time, but disposed I trust to proceed with this bill and get rid of that portion upon which we are all agreed. I appeal to my colleague as a Representative on this floor to let us go on with these matters upon which we can agree; and if we come to any matter really in dispute, it can be passed over. In the interest of public business and with a view to the discharge of our representative duty, I ask him and I ask other gentlemen to let us go on in this way, confident that those objects which all of us have in view will in the end be best secured.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Do I understand that this amendment is still open to debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I thought my colleague [Mr. WILLIS] was discussing the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. He opposed it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to oppose my colleague. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a point of order. Is it in order for the gentleman from Kentucky to discuss this question in the absence of a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not appeared to the Chair that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If that point is to be raised, I hope it will be raised and settled before the gentleman from Kentucky proceeds further with this discussion.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Very well; I am willing if the Committee of the Whole is ready to vote on the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to make another motion to strike out.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I do not withdraw my motion to increase this appropriation $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on that is exhausted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Then I call for the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 64.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum has voted. Let us have a call of the House if we are going to make appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers Mr. WHITE of Kentucky and Mr. BLANCHARD.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 11, noes 97.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the roll will be called.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN) having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, when one hundred and thirty-six members had answered to their names, and he was directed to report the names of the absentees to the House, to be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to state that my colleague, Mr. HERBERT, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. My colleague, Mr. CABELL, is absent on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not the time for excuses; that will be done further on.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order, and it is this, that the roll-call having been proceeded with and the Chair having announced that excuses were in order and they having been begun, it is not now in order for gentlemen to interrupt that roll-call which the House is now executing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is in error as to the statement he makes. Members were offering excuses for absentees when the Chair announced it was not in order for excuses to be made at that time.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I stand corrected, but I understood the names of absentees were about to be read under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair begs leave to state there is no rule of the House requiring excuses for absentees to be rendered at this time. In case of further proceedings for the purpose of compelling the attendance of absent members, it will be in order to receive excuses for absent members.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. COSGROVE. Pending that I move the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 85.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STORM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The last vote on a call of the House disclosed a quorum was not present. Can any other business be transacted except to proceed with the call of the House or to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there has been no proceedings in the House determining the fact that no quorum is present. There was a call in the Committee of the Whole, but there has been no ascertainment of the fact of no quorum in the House.

Mr. STORM. That fact was reported to the House, and the House is in possession of that information.

Mr. HOLMAN. The roll-call showed there was no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 2.

Mr. BELFORD. The call of the roll shows a quorum is not present.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to ask a question for information. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee. finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and he then reported the names of the absentees to the House. Now, that list of absentees has never been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the rule requires the names of the absentees to be reported to the House to be entered upon the Journal. That does not require the reading of the names of the absentees.

Mr. DUNHAM. Have the names been reported to the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They have, and been entered upon the Journal as the rule requires.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is the report of one clerk to another reporting to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules on the point of the gentleman from Illinois that the usual course has been pursued. It has been the uniform custom of the House to proceed as has been done this evening.

The Chair appoints Mr. WHITE of Kentucky and Mr. BLANCHARD as tellers, and they will take their places.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 124, noes 8.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move that there be a call of the House. We ought to have a quorum when discussing a bill that carries $12,000,000 and over.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask for a division on that motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 62.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, there are here about the usual number of members who legislate, and in order to get more it would be necessary to exhaust the patience and time of those who are here, and that I am unwilling to do. I have, as the House will bear me witness, done everything I could to advance this bill as expeditiously as is consistent with its proper consideration; but I do not feel it would be right to ask the House to tax the members who are present by keeping them here until a call of the House can be enforced. I will only ask the members who are present and those who may be here to-morrow to give the committee all the aid they can in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing before the House, and I move that we now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. And in view of these facts and the obstruction that has been foisted upon the House, I move that it do now adjourn.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, I have already made that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the House do now adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. Which gentleman from Kentucky?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky on the right of the Chair [Mr. WILLIS] is recognized as making the motion, he having the floor, and not the gentleman on the left, who interposed the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition and papers of John A. Fairfax for relief as to certain losses during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BAYNE: Petition of Rev. E. E. Swift, D. D., and others, of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, praying the early consideration by Congress of the Mormon question—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BEACH: Petition of citizens of Newburg, N. Y., on the Mormon question—to the same committee.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of citizens of Cambridge, N. Y., requesting early consideration of the Mormon question—to the same committee.

By Mr. CARLETON: Petitions of Robert N. Jenks and about 75 others, of Saint Clair; and of D. Lester and about 75 others, of Saint Clair, Mich., asking for the purchase by the United States of the Portage Lake Canal, and to make the same free of tolls—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HAYNES: Petition of Avetas Blood and others, of Manchester, N. H., for legislation to put in force the reciprocity treaty with Mexico—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. A. S. HEWITT: Petition of the New York State Cider and Cider-Vinegar Association, asking for the repeal of the vaporizing law of 1879—to the same committee.

By Mr. J. T. JONES: Memorial of the Alabama Legislature, for improvement of Coosa River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. LOVE: Petition of Mrs. L. C. Marks and 50 others, of Thomas McCorkle, jr., and 23 others, of J. H. Nixon and 30 others, and of George Gray and 31 others, citizens of Wilmington, Del., for the suppression of Mormonism by law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PIERCE: Petition of William H. Kellough, executor of Eleazer Woods, deceased, of Gibson County, Tennessee, asking compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHIVELY: Petition of John F. Kendall and 95 others, citizens of La Porte, Ind., for action by Congress looking to the suppression of Mormonism in the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Petition of 23 citizens of Greene, Trumbull County, Ohio, asking an increase of widows' pensions—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEMPLE: Petition of citizens of Schenectady, N. Y., urging action by Congress upon the bills for the suppression of Mormonism—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WINANS: Petition of the Racine Wagon and Carriage Manufacturing Company, for legislation favoring the reciprocity treaty with Mexico—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. YAPLE: Petition of Mrs. C. Case and others, citizens of Niles, Mich., for an increase of widows' pensions—to the Committee on Pensions.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill, with Senate amendments, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Of citizens of Sullivan County, Missouri.

By Mr. ANDERSON: Of 62 citizens of Clyde; of 13 citizens of Rice, Cloud County, and of 55 citizens of Sutphen's Mills, Dickinson County, Kansas.

By Mr. J. H. BREWER: Of citizens of West Point Pleasant, Ocean County, and of Aaron Wilkes Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Trenton, N. J.

By Mr. CARLETON: Of S. H. Avery and 200 others, of Port Huron; of Peter B. Cade and others, of Romeo, and of Daniel George and 65 others, of Sanilac County, Michigan.

By Mr. W. W. CULBERTSON: Of 163 voters of Ashland, Ky.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Of citizens of Chase, of Lake, and of Newaygo Counties, Mich.

By Mr. EATON: Of citizens of Hartford, Conn., and others.

By Mr. ELDREDGE: Of J. M. Branson and 159 others, of Tecumseh, Mich.

By Mr. ENGLISH: Of Adam L. Ogg and 126 ex-soldiers, of Hancock County, Indiana.

By Mr. FUNSTON: Of citizens of Urbanna, of Ochiltree, and of Hepler, Kans.

By Mr. FYAN: Of B. R. A. Jones and 370 others, of Carthage, of Charles Jacobs and others, of R. M. Peck and 38 citizens, of Webb City, of James Spain and 27 citizens of Carthage, Jasper County; of D. SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 5, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho Territory, praying that so much of the lands in that Territory as are not actually required for the use and occupancy of the Shoshone and Bannock Indians may be restored to the public domain and opened to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho Territory, praying that so much of the lands set apart in that Territory for the Nez Percé Indians as is not actually needed for their use may be opened to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Joseph Cunningham and other citizens of Iowa, praying that a pension be granted to John Q. Deakins, late a soldier in the Black Hawk war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRISON presented the petition of Samuel Barr and 45 other citizens of Tippecanoe County, Indiana, praying that an appropriation of $100,000 be made for the improvement of the Wabash River between La Fayette and Terre Haute, and Pittsburg, Ind.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SABIN presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Whereas the Senate of the United States passed certain resolutions of date of April 22, A. D. 1884, directing the honorable Secretary of War to have examined and to procure information as to cost, condition, and value of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canal Company's canal and the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company's canal (canals that cut a channel across the base of Point Keweenaw, making an open passage from Keweenaw Bay to Lake Superior), said examination to be made with a view to determining a fair value of said canals; and

Whereas the honorable Secretary of War designated Col. O. M. Poe, of the United States Army, to make full examination of these improvements and report all the facts, in accordance with the terms of said Senate resolution; and

Whereas the honorable Secretary of War, after receiving a full and careful report made by Colonel Poe, did submit his report to the Senate of the United States on January 5, A. D. 1885, wherein the purchase of these two canals is recommended at a fair and reasonable price, and that they be made free water ways to the commerce of the Northwest and the great lakes; and

Whereas the tolls and tonnage dues collected by these companies are a serious burden to important industries and a large number of people who are mainly supplied by these canals, and also a serious tax to the vessel interest and the commerce passing through them to the Northwest; and

Whereas these canals, form important channels, that should be made free to the great commerce of the Northwest and that is tributary to Lake Superior; and

Whereas the general use of these canals shortens the distance through Lake Superior via these canals over two hundred miles in going east and west, and permits of a quiet and safe passage, avoiding the most turbulent and unsafe portions of Lake Superior; and

Whereas these canals may be made harbors of refuge where Lake Superior is the most dangerous in navigating, and where these canals may be made the most available shelter from the storms that occasion serious disaster in this lake and in the vicinity of these canals: And therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be urged to use their influence in procuring such legislation as will result in acquiring the title to these canals to the United States for the purpose of making them free water ways to the commerce of Lake Superior and the Northwest.

Resolved, That the clerk of the house be instructed to furnish duly certified copies of the foregoing resolutions to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the State of Minnesota.

Adopted by the house of representatives January 15, A. D. 1885, and concurred in by the senate January 23, A. D. 1885.

J. R. HOWARD,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONGER presented the petition of James Moffat and 21 other citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of the bill providing for the purchase by the Government of the two canals across Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, State of Michigan; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4382) for the relief of William H. Davis, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5207) granting a pension to Adalbert Stickney, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. JACKSON. On behalf of the minority of the committee I present their views upon that bill, which I move be printed and laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2617) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 406 of the city of Washington, for the enlargement of the Post-Office Department building, and to provide accommodations for the city post-office; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2799) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., to report it with amendments.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask the consent of the Senate to take the bill up for present consideration. It is identical with one previously passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator is willing to let it stand over until after the morning business, I shall have no objection.

Mr. JACKSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

EULOGIES ON REPRESENTATIVE DUNCAN.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 323) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late William A. Duncan, to report it favorably and without amendment. It provides for the usual number under such circumstances, and I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLICATION OF TREATIES.

Mr. MANDERSON. There was referred to the Committee on Printing a message of the President of the United States of January 23, 1885, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, copies of all treaties and conventions, except postal conventions, entered into by the United States and now in force. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the message, with the accompanying documents, with a resolution providing that the usual number shall be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the copies of treaties and conventions called for by a resolution of the Senate dated January 5, 1885, and transmitted by the President of the United States on the 23d of January, 1885, be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska why not print some copies for distribution. It is an exceedingly valuable document, and it will be required and called for by a number of persons. Simply to print the usual number will give us, I believe, but two copies apiece unbound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Until I get some information I shall object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is objected to.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I should like to have some information on the subject before insisting on the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, debate will proceed by unanimous consent on the question of present consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think this is a document which should be printed, so that we can have some copies in addition to the ordinary and usual number that is printed simply for storing in the libraries and committee-rooms.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the usual number?

Mr. MANDERSON. Nineteen hundred. I ask consent to reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. MANDERSON. To print the usual number will require simply the Senate resolution I have presented. It is proposed to stereotype the work, so that other copies can be ordered at any time. The cost is ascertained, and after the usual number, 1,900, is supplied, by a concurrent resolution any number that may be required may be ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is simply a Senate resolution?

Mr. MANDERSON. It is simply a Senate resolution for printing the usual number of a Senate document.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw objection to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I was just going to say that it is my intention to bring in a concurrent resolution for publishing a large number. Five thousand copies of the document will propably be necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. This being a Senate resolution, it is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask consent that the letter of the Secretary of War, communicating a list of clerks and employés, &c., in that Department during the year ended November 30, 1884, with the accompanying list, being Order of Business 1070, heretofore reported to the Senate by the Committee on Printing adversely to the printing of the same, be recommitted to the committee for further investigation and report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that Order of Business 1070, being a letter from the Secretary of War, communicating list of clerks and employés, &c., during the year ended November 30, 1884, be taken from the Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Printing. That order will be entered, if there be no objection.

INVESTIGATION OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof appointed by its chairman, is hereby instructed to inquire into the condition of the naval establishment of the United States, including all vessels embraced in said establishment, the navy-yards of the United States, and to investigate all questions touching the organization of the Navy, the line and staff corps of the same, and all ranks and grades in said establishment, together with the pay of the same, and the question of promotion affecting such ranks and grades, and all other questions pertaining thereto; and for that purpose may sit during the recess of the Senate, at such times and places as the committee may determine, and shall have power to send for persons and papers, examine witnesses, employ a stenographer, and shall report their proceedings and such recommendations as they may see fit to make at the next session.

That all actual and necessary expenses of said committee, or subcommittee thereof, be paid on the approval of the chairman of said committee out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2615) to authorize medals to commemorate the completion and dedication of the Washington Monument; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (S. 2616) to authorize the readjustment of the compensation of postmasters at certain fourth-class post-offices; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SABIN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 118) for the relief of actual settlers on the lands of the late Sioux Indian reservation in Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD DEBT.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to inform the Senate what amounts were due the United States on December 31, 1882, from the Union Pacific Railroad; also, what amounts have become due from that date until December 31, 1884, according to the rule established in a decision lately made in the Court of Claims between the United States and said road; also, whether the annual settlement was made February 1, 1885, as provided in the Thurman act.

ADJUSTMENT OF POSTMASTERS' SALARIES.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to inform the Senate what number of clerks have been employed in adjusting postmasters' salaries during the present fiscal year under the act of March 3, 1883; the amount found due such postmasters in the adjustments now completed; the probable approximate amount that will be found due in adjustments that will be made within the present fiscal year with the present clerical force, and the probable approximate amount that will be found due during the next fiscal year with the increased clerical force asked for.

ARMY COURTS-MARTIAL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire and report to the Senate as to whether any legislation is required, and, if so, what, in regard to the appointment of courts-martial and the regulation of proceedings and practice in trials before such courts in time of peace; and whether under existing law an officer may be tried before a court-martial appointed by the President in cases where the commander of the accused officer to be tried is not the accuser.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Be it resolved by the United States Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1883-'84 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the ordinary number printed. I move that the resolution, with the accompanying paper, be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

MOQUELEMOS GRANT.

Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish and transmit to the Senate copies of all correspondence, affidavits, petitions, arguments, reports, and decisions on file in the Department of the Interior, or rendered by any of the officers of that Department, with reference to or in connection with the Moquelemos grant in the State of California, and the surveys thereof, and the status of settlers thereon.

RULE AS TO AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. INGALLS. I give notice that I shall to-morrow move to amend the third paragraph of Rule XVI by striking out that part thereof which forbids amendments proposing general legislation on general appropriation bills. This notice is given under the provisions of Rule XL. The amendment that I shall propose is as follows:

Strike out the words "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any," and insert before "amendment," in line 2 of said clause, the word "no." In line 3 strike out the word "the," before "bill," and insert "any general appropriation;" and insert after the word "bill" the word "shall;" so that when amended the clause would read:

No amendment not germane nor relevant to the subject-matter contained in any general appropriation bill shall be received, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator send the notice to the desk? The rule requires that the notice shall be in writing.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall also ask that it be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the notice of the intended amendment will be printed.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator's proposed amendment to the rule had better be printed in the usual form also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has been made.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to state that to-morrow morning, immediately after the disposal of the strictly morning business, I intend to ask the Senate to take up the private pension bills on the Calendar and pass them.

PRINTING OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers, which was passed by the Senate yesterday, be printed for the use of the Senate as passed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 104) providing for the printing and distribution of the Descriptive Catalogue of Government Publications.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for the printing of 16,060 extra copies of the Annual Report of the Smithsonian Institution and National Museum for the year 1884.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

A bill (S. 468) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary K. S. Eaton;

A bill (S. 1111) granting an increase of pension to Sally Rodman, widow of General Isaac P. Rodman;

A bill (S. 1242) to reimburse Elizabeth Comstock customs dues paid by her on articles donated for the relief of colored emigrants; and

A bill (S. 2278) correcting the military record of Wickliffe Cooper, deceased, late major Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel, United States Army.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT MEMPHIS.

Mr. JACKSON. I now renew my request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2799) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn., which was reported this morning by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 21, to strike out "district" and insert "circuit;" so as to read: "circuit court of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 5, after the word "maintained," to strike out the words "at the time of erection of said bridge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 16, to strike out "district" and insert "circuit;" so as to read "circuit court of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The Chief Clerk calls attention to a mistake in the print in the last line but one of section 7. The words "of the" are repeated. They will be stricken out in the second place if there be no objection. In the first line of section 6 there is a typographical error, which will be corrected at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to have the last section of the bill read. If I understand it correctly it provides for the building of the bridge by the Government of the United States in a certain contingency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last section, section 7, will be read as amended, at the request of the Senator from Delaware.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, on satisfactory proof that a necessity exists therefor, to require the companies or persons owning said bridge to cause such aids to the passage of said bridge to be constructed, placed, and maintained, at their own cost and expense, in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for the guiding of rafts, steamboats, and other water craft safely through the passage-way, as shall be specified in his order in that behalf; and on failure of the company or persons aforesaid to make and establish such additional structures within a reasonable time, the said Secretary shall proceed to cause the same to be built or made at the expense of the United States, and shall refer the matter without delay to the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute, in the name of the United States, proceedings in any circuit court of the United States in which such bridge, or any part thereof, is located, for the recovery of the cost thereof; and all moneys accruing from such proceedings shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent at this time to have changed the reference of the petition, presented by my colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] a few days ago, from Amos A. Lawrence and 15 other citizens of Boston, Mass., praying that they may be made a corporation, for the purpose of promoting immigration to the Territory of Utah and developing its agricultural and mineral resources, with such privileges and immunities and subject to such restrictions as Congress may grant or impose. It was referred to the Committee on Territories, and it should have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the reference of the petition be changed from the Committee on Territories to the Committee on Public Lands.

The request was agreed to.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes. It is the second bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. GARLAND. I know it is not, but I wish to ask a question, with the consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. GARLAND. Does the Senator from Kansas expect to get the bill through in the morning hour?

Mr. PLUMB. I hope to have the Senate decide it some way. I hope the Senate will finally pass the bill, but we shall have to take the chances of debate on that, I suppose.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to say that there is no possible chance of getting the bill through to-day if all day be devoted to it. I make that statement now for what it is worth.

Mr. PLUMB. That condition of things will be no more aggravated to-day than it would be to-morrow or next day. Certainly I think it is proper, and I feel sure the Senator from Arkansas himself will agree that it is entirely proper, that the Senate should at an early day say "yes" or "no" upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARLAND. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary began to read the report submitted by Mr. PLUMB April 8, 1884, from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to suggest that by some mistake a different bill has found its way into the report from that reported by the committee. It was a mistake in compiling the report, I suppose. The bill contained and recited in the report is not the bill reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill reported by the committee has been read. It will be unnecessary, therefore, to read the bill in the report.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the documents, letters, statutes, &c., may be omitted in the reading of this report. I think it will facilitate time to omit them.

Mr. GARLAND. What is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the further reading——

Mr. ALLISON. No; there are a number of statutes quoted in the report and a number of letters from the Departments, &c., recited. I ask unanimous consent that they may be omitted by the Secretary in reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that in reading the report the statutes and letters be omitted.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to have them read. There can not be an understanding of the question involved unless everything is read.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report and continued till 2 o'clock without concluding.

COINAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being House bill No. 4976.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. INGALLS to strike out section 5 of the substitute reported from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOWEN. Mr. President, this is the first occasion since I have been a member of this body that any legislation touching the great question of silver coinage has been brought up for consideration here, and I regret that it is being pressed now, because it is too great a subject to be considered in the short time which the Senate—in view of other pressing business—can afford to devote to it, because it can not be fairly and justly considered as an abstract proposition, but must be looked into in connection with many other questions which cover the entire range of the general financial and monetary policy of the Government in a direct way, to say nothing of the incidental bypaths into which we must of necessity extend our researches before we shall be prepared to arrive at conclusions satisfactory to our own intelligence or that of the people of this country.

The issue is directly presented by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the House bill which we are now considering. The amendment, if it shall become a law, stops the coinage of standard silver dollars, while the House bill simply retires the trade-dollars, without at all interfering with the coinage of silver as now being carried on by the Government. It is, I believe, generally conceded that the trade-dollars should be retired, and in this general opinion I most fully coincide; but while doing so I am utterly opposed to injecting into the consideration of this one piece of legislation the many questions necessarily involved in any and every discussion of the question of bimetallism.

And right here and now, Mr. President, I desire to disabuse the minds of all who suppose that we view this question solely from a standpoint of local self-interest. Nothing can be further from the truth; for while we plainly confess that the silver interest is one in which the mountain States and Territories are most vitally and directly interested, we at the same time believe that the whole nation, with all its varied resources, industries, and interests, is affected—although not so directly—as much as our people at home. No, sir; the views of those of us who represent upon this floor the people of those States are neither blinded nor circumscribed by the narrow abstractions with which we are accredited. If we were, why do we sit here and give our votes and lend our co-operation to those who advocate the protection of industries domiciled in the great Atlantic States?

Sir, in the State of Colorado we produce—without limit as to quantity—the material, and from it manufacture the finest Bessemer steel rails in the world; and yet we need no protection by law for that great industry. Still we are protectionists, believing that policy to be for the best interest of the whole country. We are protected in this regard naturally and absolutely by over a thousand miles of railway transportation. We are protectionists, not that our immediate constituents need any protection for the interests I have just alluded to, but because we believe generally in the protection of all American industries and all American labor, fully satisfied as we are that the extensive area within our borders has resources varied and boundless beyond human comprehension, which can make this nation of people self-sustaining in every regard, and that we should legislate not for the world at large, but for the people of this country.

Sir, we should not commit the fundamental error, either in reason or act, of basing our action here upon the theory that we have no natural advantages superior to any or all of the older countries across the sea; because the moment we do we commit an error so fatal, so elementary, that we shall stumble at the beginning and find ourselves floundering to the end. Let us, therefore, begin right, by realizing that it is unfair to this country for us to reason or act upon the hypothesis that our capabilities, resources, and natural advantages are equal only to those of the old countries. It is sufficiently humanitarian that we do in the future as in the past, and keep our portals open wide to the oppressed of all lands, limited only by our unquestioned right to exclude all contract criminal and pauper labor.

Bimetallism can not be discussed intelligently without touching extensively upon the many questions so directly connected with it. Our entire monetary and financial system and policy is necessarily involved in such a discussion, including our legal-tender acts, banking acts, loan acts, resumption acts, &c., to say nothing of the great questions of labor and the protection of home industries and productions. Therefore we deprecate all attempts to open up these general questions at a time when Congress can not, for want of time, give them the consideration which their importance deserves. I shall therefore offer but few suggestions at this time.

Mr. President, I have already suggested reasons for favoring a protective policy. I have also intimated why we need no protection for our own iron industry; to show that while considering our own immediate interests and realizing the natural protection afforded us by distance and the cost of transportation, we are not unmindful of the interests of other States, and not unwilling to give them our support when the general good is best subserved thereby. Standing upon the apex of the American continent, and looking from the door of my own mountain home, I can see nearly the whole of my own State, and in the distance can see into the great Territories of Utah, Arizona, and New Mexico, the whole covering an area greater than a dozen of the Atlantic States—its mountains, gold and silver ribbed, teeming with millions in value of the precious metals awaiting only the hardy pioneer to discover and the necessary capital to mine and reduce the ores. Shall that great and extensive country be excluded from the policy which favors home products and home labor? Have we no part or lot in the grand scheme of American aggrandizement? Shall we join in the protection of all American industries save our own?

This question is directed more particularly to members of my own party. We do not ask for a tariff by which silver shall be protected; but we have a right to expect that it will be protected by the coinage acts of Congress in view of the undisputed fact that silver coin was embraced in the money contemplated by the Constitution.

Sir, it is worse than idle to say that because certain European governments have demonetized silver that we must perforce do the same. The reasons which actuated them may have been sufficient for their purpose. It is a long story, and will be told in full when this whole question comes up for discussion; but not now. Even then it should only be interesting to us as a matter of history, and should not in the least govern our action here.

This is a great country, and can not afford to treat as equals in natural resources the old nations with their overcrowded populations, parts of which populations, beginning centuries before Christ, have been migrating from east to west in search of new homes in new lands, making more room in their retreat for those they left behind, and thus constituting themselves the safety-valves of countries too narrow to hold so many souls.

The problem of population is one of stupendous magnitude and bears directly upon us whenever we consider policies bearing upon the future as well as the present; but that problem must also be remitted to a future period, when with ample time we can enter into the consideration of the great reform legislation which sooner or later we will find it necessary to consider.

A few passing words can not, however, do any harm. In a country of vast expanse and boundless resources we see, we feel nothing of the difficulties which environ nations with limited territory and a superabundant population. Up to this time there has been a path of egress into broader fields for those who, crowded together in unwieldy masses beyond the sea, sought a breathing place in this hospitable and liberty-loving land; but how shall we stand affected here when we begin to feel a like pressure? We occupy the ultima Thule. From here there is no escape, no relief by emigration; and human wisdom and forethought must solve the problem.

Mr. President, I beg pardon for this digression, if it be such. Time may vindicate the wisdom of the thought. I find it impossible to think of our financial and monetary policy without entering into a field so wide that my mental vision aspires not now to see its other side.

Errors, fundamental errors, must exist in our financial monetary system, and, in my humble opinion, no lopping off of dead or useless branches will be of any avail; no tinkering can ever perfect a superstructure, the foundation of which is weak and imperfect. The ax must be laid at the root of the tree in the one case and the foundation-stone must be well and truly set in the other before the situation can be fully relieved.

Since the establishment of the Bank of Venice—the first effort ever made to create money—down to the present time every conceivable monetary theory has been promulgated; but as yet each has been marked with the seal of manifest failure.

The cry for honest money is the just sequence of these failures. What is money? It is nothing more nor less than a medium of exchange. Give this medium of exchange the most substantial and desirable basis possible, and you give the most honest money possible. Congress can do no greater work than to give this country a monetary system as sound and perfect as human wisdom can invent. Guided by the experiences of the past, including absolute failures as well as partial successes, I indulge in the hope that such efforts will in the end be crowned with success. You ask me for a panacea, but I do not consider myself the Moses to lead you out of the financial wilderness. If, however, I can drop a single thought sufficiently suggestive to cause our financial fathers here to even question the wisdom of any of the lines of thought in which they have heretofore indulged, I shall feel more than compensated, more than gratified.

Honest money is the best money that can be made with the material and power within our control. Gold and silver have an intrinsic value. They are the metals out of which money has been made all over the world for centuries; and this intrinsic value has been everywhere recognized. When you add to this intrinsic value the money function, the general legal-tender quality, backed up by a powerful nation at peace at home, at peace abroad, the area of which is grand and magnificent and the products of which make its people absolutely self-sustaining and independent, even if they should be surrounded by an impassable wall over which they could not buy or sell anything whatever, you have a money as perfect as human ingenuity can devise. But you do not have enough of it. To meet this deficiency, what are we to do? Having coined all our gold and silver and made it a legal tender for all debts public and private—saving and excepting, however, from the provision last named all existing contracts and obligations heretofore made payable in any other manner—proceed to issue legal-tender notes with a like money function in quantity sufficient, when added to the gold and silver coin, to make a circulation per capita commensurate with the progress and business interests of the country, which amount—and it should be too large rather than too small—can be arrived at with reasonable certainty by drawing upon the experience of the world. With a constantly increasing population, and the constantly growing business of a new country like ours, the volume of currency should be correspondingly increased from year to year, say about 3 per cent. per annum, which is about the usual increase of population. If fifteen hundred millions is an adequate circulation for 40,000,000 of people, it is fair to presume that double that amount of circulation would be necessary for double that population, and so on.

For convenience and to save loss by abrasion, &c., the gold and silver coined and uncoined might, and I think should, be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and gold and silver certificates in denominations of not less than $5 issued therefor, this gold and silver, either coined or uncoined, to be held there in trust for the purpose only of redeeming these gold and silver certificates, which certificates should have the full money function the same as the coin itself, as should everything which professes to be money. Having submitted this statement of my own views, I wish to point out one danger which above all things should be avoided, and that is, not to issue a single dollar professing to be payable in coin or bullion unless we have the coin or bullion in the Treasury with which to redeem it on sight; for to do so would be to make dishonest money, which we do not want. That is the rock upon which Mr. John Law's financial scheme in France split and went to pieces long years ago. His French money professed on its face to be payable in coin, and all went well so long as confidence lasted, but when that ceased to exist and the bills were presented for redemption he had nothing but real-estate mortgages to pay with. The money was a lie upon its face, and the system met its just and legitimate fate—absolute failure.

Speaking of confidence, it is a hidden rock upon which more business lives have been wrecked than on all the financial shoals in Christendom. It is said to be of slow growth, yet it is not a hardy shrub. Its universal fate is withering and death when brought in contact with the cool breath of doubt and suspicion; and no financial policy or transaction is anything beyond a delusion and a snare, which depends solely on confidence.

About the time of our late resumption of specie payments some years ago, it was the common remark that confidence was the one great thing needed; that when a man found he could get his money he would not take it; he only wanted to know if he could get it if he wanted to, &c. This is all well enough in times of prosperity and peace, because in such times all goes well naturally; but when adversity, disaster, and panic overtake us, confidence vanishes like a mist in the morning—is worse than a broken reed. A financial policy or monetary system designed to stand only the shocks incident to good times, reminds one of the Russian Grand Duke's apprehension and distress when the Crimean war was declared. He regretted it because it would ruin his beautiful regiment of the imperial guard.

Sound finance requires that a government's monetary system should rest upon a solid foundation, and not be subject to the whims or caprices of any man or nation. I have already shown how a part of the money we need, namely, gold and silver certificates, having full legal-tender quality for all debts, public and private, and secured by deposits in the United States Treasury of gold and silver bullion or coin, will be absolutely sound and secure. The legal-tender notes, having full money functions, needed in addition to these certificates to bring up the circulation per capita to the proper point will, if they do not profess to be redeemable in something which we have not on hand to redeem them with, be the next best money we can have.

Having determined the kind of money we are to have and the amount of circulation needed, the next important point is to get this money out and keep it out, so that debtors and creditors can alike rest assured that all payments will be made on the same basis of circulation upon which they were contracted. How to get this money out and how to keep it out, so that no stringency can occur in the money market, is another of the most important questions to be determined, for if it is not kept in circulation, it had just as well not exist. Business can not be done without money, nor can it be done to advantage without plenty of it. More spot money and less credit business would be a blessing to rich and poor alike. Panic is directly traceable to the fact that too many people get in debt and get in too deep; for it is self-evident that if no person in this country owed a single dollar there never could be money panics, such as we have had upon us with frightful regularity from time to time; so that the less people are in debt the less danger we are in from panics and their ever-present shadows of disaster, ruin, and bankruptcy.

To get this money out and to keep it out is not a difficult problem. Say that we determine that we will keep not less than fifty millions nor more than sixty millions of the money intended for circulation in the Treasury as a surplus, exclusive of bullion and coin kept there to redeem the gold and silver certificates. Then provide by law for the loan of money direct to the people, taking promissory notes therefor, secured by mortgage on broad acres of improved lands. These notes should bear interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent. per annum, payable annually, and should run for long periods of time, but to become due, principal and interest, immediately on default of the payment of any one year's interest or any one year's taxes. I will not attempt to go into details, but such a system has many advantages over the elasticity aimed at by the calling and payment of bonds. Hundreds of thousands of people scattered all over the country have improved lands, and the money thus put out would go to all parts of the nation instead of to the money centers.

On the other hand, but few people have bonds, and nearly all who have either live or do business in the great cities. When they draw their money for their bonds what do they do? Why, sir, they go to Wall street, loan it out on call loans, and when they get more people in debt they give the crank another turn, call in their loans, and thus add their mite toward increasing the business and financial distress which the calling in of their bonds was intended to relieve; and having by this process of squeezing and repression destroyed as far as possible the price of property, they take it for themselves, and at once begin to sing the same old tune of returning prosperity and restored confidence, and keep it up until prices once more reach their zenith, when they sell the property thus acquired and soon thereafter begin to discover in the distance a financial cloud no bigger than a man's hand, to which they assiduously direct attention, and declare that it is growing larger and most rapidly approaching.

They are now preparing for another call of bonds and for a repetition of the same financial processes I have just described. Such, sir, are some of the beauties of our present elastic currency; and I leave them to the fond gaze of those who admire them. I do not.

Mr. President, the kind of money I advocate can all be put upon an actual hard-money basis within twenty years by the coinage alone of all the gold and silver produced in this country in the way I will mention. Let the Government take and retain the exclusive power of issuing money and controlling the amount of circulation. Let no person or corporation interfere with that part of its sovereignty. Remove the standing menace to business and prosperity, which will exist so long as banks of issue are permitted to exist with power to expand or contract the amount of the circulation.

This danger was recognized by the Senate of the United States when it passed at its last session the McPherson bill, which in effect said to the national banks: "Please, sirs, do not destroy the country by retiring your circulation." What a commentary upon a great government! Sir, this tinkering and trimming should stop. We should reform our financial and monetary policy and legislation from alpha to omega.

We should recognize the greatness and the unlimited natural resources of our own country, and we should legislate for it, and leave other countries to do the same for themselves. If we stood in the respects just mentioned on an equality only with each and every other nation we could afford a different policy, but we are untrue to ourselves if we waive our own advantages over so many of the others.

Let us plant ourselves on the solid monetary basis which I have endeavored to explain, and then let us, over and above all things, see to it that the balance of trade remains continually in our favor, even if we have to double our present rates of tariff and do all else necessary, remembering at the same time that no nation on earth will buy a single dollar's worth of our cotton, wheat, corn, meat, or other of our products because they love us, but will be governed in their purchases by their own desires and necessities. If necessary to maintain the balance of trade in our favor, shut out absolutely all foreign luxuries.

With this balance of trade certainly and permanently in our favor gold will flow in upon us from abroad, which, with all the gold and silver produced in our own land, will in time be more than sufficient to retire every legal-tender note we may have found it necessary to emit, and leave us with a currency consisting solely of gold and silver certificates, each dollar of which will represent a dollar of gold or silver lying in the Treasury of the United States as a sacred trust with which to redeem these certificates on demand.

Let the fiat go forth to all the world in language too plain to be misunderstood that this country legislates for its own people, and protects them in all their efforts, industries, and enterprises, excluding no branch, whatever it may be or wherever located within our borders. Let them also as distinctly know that silver is one of our important industries, and that this nation has planted itself firmly, unconditionally, and everlastingly upon the platform of bimetallism, and will neither get off nor be knocked off. Show them that this nation will be the leader in this regard in spite of them, and that all attempts on their part to further dictate to us will be stale and unprofitable.

The time has come in dealing with monetary problems when the law-making power of this Government must adopt a decisive and permanent rule of conduct. We must have an established coinage, and our metal values must be secured against commercial vicissitudes and trading fluctuations. We hear much about an "honest silver dollar," and we are reproached that the existing 412½-grain dollar is "dishonest." Who fixes the scale of metal values by which our standard dollar is rated "dishonest?" Is it the Congress of the United States? No. Who then?

Why, nobody but a coterie of bullion brokers in London, operating in Lombard street as buyers and sellers, bulls and bears; mere traffickers in a commodity, not vested with either sovereignty or responsibility, but simply bent on driving sharp bargains for themselves from day to day.

And yet the monstrous proposition is put forward here that our standard dollar ought to be made to contain whatever quantity of silver these London brokers might be willing to pay 100 cents for as bullion. That is all that any plain business man can make out of the proposition. Thus we arrive at the conclusion that our coinage laws, to be just and right, should be framed in Lombard street, London, by a coterie of bullion-brokers, instead of on Capitol Hill, Washington, by the representatives of the American people. Is not that the naked logic of the proposition?

If that is the real logic of the proposition, then the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Vermont should contain a proviso somewhat as follows: "Provided, that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to ascertain the market price of silver bullion in London every thirty days, and that he be authorized and directed to alter the amount of pure silver in the standard coin from time to time, so as to make its bullion value equal to its expressed value, according to the prevailing London quotations."

Such an amendment would of course be antagonized by me. But if the Senators on the other side of this question wish to be consistent, it would command their support. For one, I would like to test the sense of the Senate on such a proposition. It would, at least, have the one merit of being a candid presentation of the real theory which lies at the bottom of all this warfare against silver.

Sir, I most earnestly hope that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be defeated, and that the House bill may pass.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it is a trite saying, and one history has often recorded, that those things most material to the happiness and welfare of a people are at the moment least regarded, the least sensational, that they proclaim themselves with less of noise and violence than other matters infinitely inferior in their consequences.

Here to-day this Senate Chamber tells the same story. There are scarcely a score of Senators in their places, and yet the matter before the Senate is profoundly important to the welfare of every man, woman, and child in the United States. It touches the question, what shall be received as the equivalent for every day of labor, what shall be received for every exertion of human industry, what shall measure every contract, great and small, among more than fifty millions of people? For it is the money of the people, the money of the nation, that we are now considering; and yet there seem to be a very small minority who care to await the discussion.

The title of the bill relates to a disk of silver metal that by the authority of the Government came from under the machinery of the Mint transformed from bullion into coin. Of these coins, called "trade" dollars, some thirty-five millions were, from the day of their authorization in 1873 until they were prohibited in 1878, allowed to be coined at the mints of the United States for the benefit of the individuals who owned the bullion.

All of this silver always was, and now is, private property; it belonged to the private owners who had worked for it and brought it from the mines, and had sold it; and the laws of their country permitted them to take it to the Mint of the United States, and, by paying the actual expense of the change in its form, to put it in these disks of metal called "trade" dollars, and to have the certification, under the honor of the United States stamp, that each piece contained 420 grains of silver, nine-tenths fine.

When the silver miners who owned this property in 1873 wished to take it to the Mint, I remember well their application; I remember the condition of the country, for I was then a member of this body. The United States had suspended specie payments. The Government had embarked upon a system of paper currency, and there was no money afloat among the people of the country other than the paper promissory notes of the United States, and those of the national banks, issued by the Government through an intermediary system of banking associations and secured by a deposit of national bonds. The paper money of the United States was at a heavy discount. Its credit did not command a hundred cents on the dollar. The gold coin of the United States was worth more than its paper, perhaps eighteen dollars or more on the hundred.

By an act of Congress passed in 1873, and which is now represented by section 3520 of the Revised Statutes, it was provided that—

Any owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at any mint, to be formed into bars, or into dollars of the weight of 420 grains troy, designated in this title as trade-dollars, and no deposit of silver for other coinage shall be received. Silver bullion contained in gold deposits, and separated therefrom, may, however, be paid for in silver coin, at such valuation as may be, from time to time, established by the Director of the Mint.

Here was the authority for the owner of this species of property to take it to the Mint and have its fineness and weight ascertained and impressed upon it under the name of the trade-dollar, and the weight and fineness were by another section, in distinction from that of any coin of the United States, to be impressed upon it, "and no deposit of silver for other coinage" was to be allowed.

When that was done, there was a market value for this species of property. The owners of it, like all intelligent owners, were exercising their right of contract to obtain for it the highest market price. The relations between gold bullion and silver bullion of equal fineness were measured by the standard of gold valuation at the rate of 60 pence sterling per ounce for silver. To-day, or rather yesterday (I read from the New York Evening Post of February 4, 1885), the price for silver bullion is 49⅝ pence per ounce. Any man who has it can get so much for it and he can get no more if that quotation be correct, and I assume it to be. Thus, under the law which I have just read, if the silver contained in gold bullion deposits be separated therefrom in the process of assaying, it may be paid for, how? In "such valuation as from time to time may be established by the Director of the Mint."

I beg the attention therefore of Senators to this fact, that when the law gave the privilege to the holders of silver bullion to take their property to the Mint and have it transmuted into such shapes as their interest and their convenience might dictate—that is to say, they could have it transformed from bullion into bars, or, if they pleased, into disks of money called "trade-dollars" of 420 grains, upon which both the bar and the coin the weight and fineness stamped by the Mint should be certified—it was their private property, and never belonged to the Government, never was received or paid out by the Government, but for the sole use of the private owner, at his sole volition, was coined for convenient trading with the silver-using countries of the East.

Mr. HARRIS. Is not that done with gold now?

Mr. BAYARD. It is done with gold now.

Mr. HARRIS. Precisely the same thing.

Mr. BAYARD. It is done with gold now, but my friend must remember that something more is done with gold now and was then done with it.

When gold bullion was deposited in the Mint for coinage and the silver it contained separated, that silver was by law to be paid for "at such rates as from time to time was to be fixed by the Director of the Mint;" but the price of gold was never "from time to time to be fixed by the Director."

The act of 1873 prohibited the deposit of silver for any other coinage than "trade-dollars;" but the gold coinage could be into any denominated gold coin.

The "trade-dollars" minted under the act of February, 1873, were then worth in the paper legal-tender currency of the United States a premium of 11 to 17 per cent. The metal of which they were composed had then a market value of 60 pence sterling per ounce. Yesterday it was worth and sold for less than 50 pence per ounce. And now Congress is asked, for one reason or another, to pay out standard silver dollars of full legal-tender power, nominally 100 cents, for a disk of metal worth perhaps 85 cents, or to pay in its standard and measure of value, 60 pence per ounce for silver bullion whose market value is less than 50 pence, say 15 or 16 per cent. above the market or intrinsic value. That is, about $5,600,000 over and above the bullion value of the silver minted into "trade-dollars," upon the application of the owners and for their convenience in trade with Oriental silver-using nations.

Mr. President, if it were ten times 16 per cent. and I believed there was an honorable obligation upon the part of the American people to pay this increased price for silver bullion or coin, I would advise them to do it, for I would say there is no gain so costly as that which is the price of departure from good faith and honorable obligation. It is not therefore this 16 per cent. upon $35,000,000, although that is a very important sum; if it were that alone I do not think that I should have cared to detain the Senate; but it is the principle that lies underneath this proposed payment which brings us face to face with profound results, to which I ask the attention of the Senate for a short time.

There has been, I submit respectfully, a confusion of terms and meaning in speaking of the redemption of the trade-dollars. When before was any standard coin not diminished in its weight by fraud or natural attrition—when before was such a coin said to be "redeemed?" Why, sir, what is the meaning of coined money, and its object? To produce under the sovereign authority that which not only should be a standard and a measure of value, but in addition value itself; for if it was not it was false and not real money. Therefore it is a mistake in terms, and it will not do to be mistaken in terms on such a subject as this, to talk of "redeeming" the standard coins of the United States. They need no redemption, for the lawful holder has value itself in his possession. They do not constitute a promise, but by their possession property and value, as on their face is expressed, is fulfilled. When such coins shall be that which upon their face and by law they profess to be, so much silver or so much gold of a certain weight and fineness, there in my judgment the great and important function of the Government commenced, and there it ended, to provide for its people a standard of value and to let the standard and the measure be combined with value itself in the form of the coin authorized.

Mr. President, since 1878, the Government of the United States has assumed a new relation, a new function and duty in respect to its coinage. Before that time, except for the manufacture of its subsidiary coins which are debased below the standard coins, the Government of the United States never owned an ounce of either metal that came into its mints for coinage; all that came was private property. This token coinage the Government was bound to redeem when defaced and too illegible for use. Why? Because they were adulterated and debased, and were issued by the Government only for the convenience of the people, and were not a standard of value—that is, not the principal standard of value, but never for more than $5, to accommodate the minor transactions of the citizens, the daily retail transactions.

Now, if I may pause here for one moment to give my reasons why there is no especial claim on the United States to exchange these coins, before I come to what I think is the great principle which we are face to face with to-day, I will say this, that having shown that the trade-dollars were in the same category precisely as silver bars, both minted and stamped for the convenience of the owner, a number were so coined, and, as I personally remember, upon the application of the representatives of the silver-bearing States, members of this body, and who came personally before the committee to seek the privilege of having their silver bullion turned into this convenient shape for the purpose of dealing with the Chinese particularly. The first of these coins was issued in July, 1873, and I read from page 130 of the report of the Director of the Mint, Mr. Burchard, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879. The figures are all here given of the bullion value, the currency value, the commercial value, the gold value of the trade-dollar, the amount of these coins and their export. In 1873, and down to July, 1874, the bullion value of the trade-dollar ran from 2½ per cent. to six-tenths of 1 per cent. premium. The currency value ran from July, 1873, to May, 1876, at a premium of 18.6 per cent. down to a premium of 3 per cent. So it was in the legal-tender currency at a heavy premium, and its commercial value was also even greater than was its currency value, for that I find ranged from 119 per cent. to 103.6 per cent. during the same period.

But now comes the question of coinage. From the 12th of February, 1873, to the 22d of July, 1876, there were coined 15,631,000 trade-dollars, and there were exported during the same time 12,270,000, although that is necessarily but an imperfect estimate. For instance, in 1876, when trade-dollars were dropped from the list of coins, and were no longer authorized at the mints, except for the purpose of foreign demand expressly, there were coined in July, 1876, 213,000; but there were exported in the same month 269,108, showing that there were 56,108 more exported in that month than there were coined in the same month.

I shall presently show to the Senate that trade-dollars in July, 1876, were at a premium in currency of 2.6 per cent., and that for that reason they would not be put in circulation, and were not—that obvious proposition, known historically as the Gresham law and known long before the name of Gresham was ever heard, that a currency nominally overvalued and really of less value will always drive out the better and really more valuable money.

Our own experience is sufficiently instructive upon that point. Our first coinage act as a government was in 1793, and then we attempted to fix a ratio of fifteen times the weight of silver to one of gold in our coinage. In 1834 we changed this ratio a little over 2 and a little less than 3 per cent. by lowering the amount of gold in the standard gold unit. From 1793 until 1834 the result was that, standard silver coins being relatively cheaper, we were on a silver basis.

Then we stepped from the ratio of 15 to nearly 16. I may say parenthetically here that during that very time the ratio between silver and gold as established by the European states now composing what is known as the Latin Union was 15½ to 1. We increased the amount of silver in our ratio so that it became almost 16 to 1, and what was the consequence? That silver being thus comparatively undervalued here, gold became necessarily the principal standard and measure of value; and so from 1834 to 1878 the standard of value of the American people in their foreign and domestic commerce, and in their payments at the custom-house was United States standard gold coin. Why? Because there was the comparatively small discrepancy of 2 or 3 per cent. between the ratio of these metals as fixed by our laws of coinage and the ratio of other commercial nations; and left free and undisturbed by statute (for at that time coinage was equally free to both metals) the natural laws of commercial valuation controlled, and people of course dealt in the cheapest money they could find, for they gave in exchange for commodities naturally as little as possible, and to that end availed themselves of the standard of regulations of the relative value of the two metals by the United States, and as a consequence silver coin ceased to be used here, and went abroad or into the melting-pot, and gold alone went to the Mint.

Now, I wish to ask: When the mints were open for those forty years, very nearly, if we saw that the owners of silver did not care to turn their bullion into coin because its ratio was fixed too low, and it was cheaper for them to procure gold dollars than silver dollars, because gold was relatively undervalued to silver and this difference of 2 or, at the utmost, 3 per cent. would control, would not the same fact necessarily prevail from 1873 to 1876, and when you find the commercial value and the currency value very much farther apart would not the same results accrue? Obviously; and not being at specie payments the difference between the two metals and paper was far greater than between the two metals in their commercial value, of which I have spoken, and the valuation at which silver bullion could be turned into coin. This being so, in 1876, in the month of July, Congress dropped out from their list of coins the trade-dollar entirely. It never had a legal-tender power of more than $5 in one payment; but after that date it ceased to have any legal-tender value or power for $5 or any other sum, and it became just what it was—a piece of precious metal, weighing so many grains and of such fineness as was declared by the stamp of the Mint upon its face.

It is therefore absolutely in the face of reason, it is in the face of history, it is in denial of actual experience to allege that while the trade-dollar was, under the statutes of the United States, nominated as a coin of the United States, or while it had legal-tender power even to the extent of $5, to allege that it was in circulation as money. It is a fact, proved by the figures I have stated, that these coins never were in circulation during the years that they had been authorized under the laws of the United States, for be it remembered that after July, 1876, there was no such coin in our laws as the trade-dollar, and before that its intrinsic value prevented it from passing as an ordinary dollar. It was worth too much to go into circulation—for it was held at a premium of from 18 per cent. to 3 per cent., and was only used for export and foreign trade.

Then in 1874, for reasons which I shall not stop here to examine——

Mr. BECK. Is not the Senator mistaken in saying the trade-dollar was no longer a coin after 1876?

Mr. BAYARD. No; I am not mistaken, for the Senator will find that in 1876——

Mr. BECK. The legal-tender quality was taken from it.

Mr. BAYARD. Not that alone.

Mr. BECK. What else?

Mr. BAYARD. On the 22d of July, 1876, it was resolved:

That the trade-dollar shall not hereafter be a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to limit, from time to time, the coinage thereof to such an amount as he may deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same.

Therefore it was a clear notification that they could not be coined except for export, and that placed them distinctly in the category of other merchandise.

Mr. BECK. They were coined by us.

Mr. BAYARD. But they were only to be coined for the use of the owners of the bullion and for export, and they were to be coined as "trade-dollars," and have their weight stamped upon them, which was never done by any standard coin of this Government.

In 1878, by a Treasury order, the coinage of trade-dollars was discontinued altogether, and from that day to this none have been permitted to be coined. Now comes the demand that the Congress of the United States shall redeem, as it is called, or, to speak more accurately, that they shall exchange a coin of the same fineness of silver weighing 412½ grains, authorized by the act of 1878, and styled a standard dollar, in equal numbers for the holders of these trade-dollars weighing 420 grains. Here is a paradox—citizens asking in the name of honor and justice to receive less for more of precisely the same commodity, and we are told that the honor of this country and its duty are to be satisfied by the performance of this strange transaction.

The very statement shows the condition of thought and false reasoning into which we have come by forsaking the landmarks of constitutional government and the footsteps of its founders, passing away from the real and the tested and embarking upon the unreal and the imaginary. Sir, if my countrymen can only learn at the cost of these six millions of money the simple truths that lie at the bottom of this question the lesson will be cheap. For the great question to be asked of every man, and to be answered by every man according to his reason and conscience, is simply this: Can the Congress of the United States create values? "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?" Which of you and what majority of you by passing laws from now till doomsday can create a value? It seems to me there is an irreverence in the very proposition, not to say an absolute absurdity.

How can you pretend to create value? If it can be answered in the affirmative I will take my seat and listen with amazement not unmingled with awe when such a proposition shall be established that this power exists in man, whether in a collective assembly or whether he stands alone exercising his faculties under the limitations of his creation. If the Congress of the United States can increase the value of this coin 15 or 16 cents, if you admit the principle that we can by calling a thing by a special name change its nature and its value—I am speaking now of its actual value—giving it a value that we certify it possesses, and which, according to the phrase now, we are bound to redeem, why, then, Senators, we shall have repealed the great primeval law which first met the ear of man after Paradise had been lost, that by the sweat of his face should he gain his bread. If Congress can create values, then we may sit down here, let the loom and the plow and all other implements and agencies of human industry stand idle, and legislate ourselves into riches and property; for that is precisely the proposition contained in the declaration that the intrinsic value of the precious metals can be controlled by the act of a government.

That is about all I wanted to say. I wanted to clear my mind and my conscience on this subject. Here is the proposition, that we are bound in honor, as it is stated, to the holders of these 35,000,000 trade-dollars, each weighing 420 grains of silver, nine-tenths fine, to satisfy their just demands by giving them other coins weighing each 412½ grains of silver of the same fineness.

Let me ask, if there is an obligation in honor upon us to redeem the greater value by the smaller, a fortiori are we not bound to redeem again the lighter and less valuable dollar by one of still less value? Are we to pursue a system that has ended in such a reductio ad absurdum? That is illustrated in the most remarkable manner by the proposition before us that it is a duty, an honorable obligation of the Government, to redeem that which is greater with that which is confessedly less in weight and actual value, and to do that by the exercise of the compulsory power of legal tender. It is a Congressional fiat. Let value be and value shall be, say these apostles of the higher power of Congress.

Mr. President, it can not be. Not to go higher into a realm of discussion where I will not venture, however humbly, to tread, to touch that part of this question which relates to our moral and to our religious beliefs, come back to the plain matter of practical fact. The Congress of the United States, with 2,000,000 men under arms, issued the notes of the United States, and said they should be legal-tender, but all of those men, brave, able, and mighty in their strength, were unable to maintain those promises at one-half the value of their face. Oh, no; it can not be. If there be an obligation in honor upon us to redeem the silver coins of 420 grains, there is an obligation on us to issue no more of those weighing 412½ grains, certainly not to issue more of a less value which a fortiori we ought to redeem if this pledge and honorable obligation rests upon us.

But I shall leave it to the good sense and the conscience of my countrymen, when they shall come to see the simple truth, that in the choice of these two precious metals to serve as equivalents in human contracts and dealing, as mere instruments of exchange there are natural laws controlling their relative intrinsic value which they can not safely contravene.

I do not mean to say that between the two metals of silver and gold there may not be by arrangement of commercial nations from time to time such an equivalency established, such a mutuality of ratio as shall secure to the great volume of the world's money of both metals the presence and full use of both. I never have been able to contemplate the restriction of the volume of the metallic currency of this world to a single metal. I never have believed it would be wise, and I should stand in the face of such a proposition awed and reverent before the great truths of history as to the use, and the necessary and beneficial use, of both these metals for the purposes of commerce and exchange. But because I do seek for that, I should be equally false to my convictions, and lacking in that courage to express them that I earnestly long to possess, if when I see a course of legislation that inevitably is to drive one of these metals out of use and circulation to demonetize it, I did not beg my countrymen to pause before they either continued laws which would produce such results or enacted others which would have the same effect.

This is not a thing that partisan feeling should array itself about. Truth is truth. It must make itself apparent. Here is the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the current year. I read from the thirty-second page of the report:

After giving the subject careful consideration—

Says Mr. McCulloch—

I have been forced to the conclusion that unless both the coinage of silver dollars and the issue of silver certificates are suspended there is danger that silver, and not gold, may become our metallic standard. This danger may not be imminent, but it is of so serious a character that there ought not to be delay in providing against it. Not only would the national credit be seriously impaired if the Government should be under the necessity of using silver dollars or certificates in payment of gold obligations, but business of all kinds would be greatly disturbed; not only so, but gold would at once cease to be a circulating medium, and severe contraction would be the result.

With great respect for that officer, I think he has stated scarcely one-half of the result; for if there must follow obviously from converting gold from currency into merchandise where it would be hoarded, if the volume of gold is, because of its superior value as compared to the other metal, to be subtracted from the volume of our currency, undoubtedly contraction, and a most severe contraction, is to follow, convulsing all business. But something else remains. What will measure prices when gold has gone? In what will be the estimates of the cost of living for those for whom I am sure our hearts are anxious to-day? Sir, the measure of prices will be in silver, and silver being of lesser value, those prices must be nominally increased to make up for the deficiency of real value. The scale will be higher, without regard to real values. And upon whom do such changes mainly fall? Who is it, Senators? Who are the first to feel the shock and the last to feel the benefit of such a change? It is the laboring class. It is the man without the capital to bide his time and wait or to foresee. It is to him whose eyes open upon labor in the morning and close upon it at night, who has no time, no thought, perhaps no capacity, to reason out these financial problems; but it is so. The wages of labor are the last to advance, and labor is the first upon which the suffering falls.

Therefore I not only class the question of the contraction which is to lower values, in one sense measuring values by a smaller volume, depreciating collateral securities, convulsing and disturbing contracts, but equally with that I measure as a maleficent result, the increase of prices for all the necessaries of life as measured in the cheaper and less valuable money. When is that to come? Who shall say when it shall come? Mr. McCulloch says, and of course it is with him but the opinion of an intelligent and experienced man, that it may not be imminent. I do not know what the information of my associates in this Chamber is upon the subject, and I pretend to little personal knowledge, for the duties of my life have not led me into that knowledge which entitles my opinion to weight upon the daily fluctuations in the values of stocks or bonds or other securities in the great markets of the world; but this I believe, that the controlling cause in prices is apprehension on the one hand or confidence on the other, a season of panic or oversanguine expectation.

Now, I believe that rightly or wrongly, wisely or otherwise, that apprehension does exist. I receive evidence of it in correspondence from gentlemen, some known and others not known to me, from the money centers. They all say there is great apprehension that the evils depicted by Mr. McCulloch of the contraction to follow our embarkation upon the monometallic basis of silver will convulse business, and the other evil that the prices for what is needed by the laboring classes necessarily will be increased by the measurement in the less valuable metal, for, whatever may be the power ascribed to the legal-tender authority given by our law, no man believes that outside the jurisdiction of the United States such laws amount to the snap of a finger.

A legal-tender law can only affect past contracts. It may enable the present debtor to discharge his present debt, but it will not go far toward enabling him to establish a fresh credit or to have a new debt created. That can and will be guarded against. Perhaps it may already be guarded against by special contracts, fixing the metal of the money as well as its denomination in which debts are to be paid. The men who do that are the wise and the skilled, the rich, the provident. They may perhaps have protected themselves against this danger, but when I think of the others, the great mass of toilers, who are to be affected by it, I confess I feel a sinking of the heart.

Yes, Senators, I not only feel for those who may have but little property, but I think there may well be a suggestion here and now, that the safety of the rich rests mainly upon the content of the poor. If men will follow no law but that of gain, and have no limit but that which their rapacity may set, they will be taught that there are laws of humanity which can not with safety be disregarded. Therefore, in dealing with this great and delicate subject of the currency and the money of the people, no rash and ignorant experiments should be tried, but just and admitted laws shall be regarded and insisted upon, and the chimeras of debtors, of speculators, of irreverent aspirants to power that never can be given to a government, should not be suffered to come in and create a state of affairs that brings a tidal wave of human wretchedness, and with it insecurity to property in all its forms.

So, sir, I speak to-day in the interest of every earner of daily wages, man, woman, and child, in the United States. I speak for every provident and self-denying saver of wages whose little store against the rainy day has been laid by. To the savings-bank depositor, to the capitalist, whether small or great, these truths apply, and sooner or later, and soon rather than late, they must control. Therefore it is that I am anxious for the passage of the very feature that is proposed to be stricken from this bill, and that is the contemplated suspension of the silver coinage under the act of 1878. Indeed, sir, my own view would be in favor of a more prompt suspension. But to secure the fact of a certainty in the future of this suspension would be an advantage so practicable and so valuable that, knowing the infinite variety of human opinion and the necessity of the abatement of individual judgments, I shall vote for that because I can not move more promptly.

As I have said in a very unprepared way, and perhaps I should have made more careful preparation, I do not believe that there is either a legal or a moral or an honorable—if you can distinguish morality from honor—obligation upon the Government of the United States to do what is called redeem the trade-dollars, nor to exchange them for others; much less do I consider that if there was such an obligation it is satisfied by the action now proposed, because we are simply continuing and intensifying in our proposed remedy the very evil which the remedy is imagined to prevent. That is to say, we are issuing millions upon millions of coin of confessedly inferior value to that which we are told now we ought to redeem. Shall we not hereafter be called on, with equal justice, to redeem these standard dollars, whose intrinsic value is less than trade-dollars?

Senators, does it not after all come down to this hinge: Can the Government of the United States create value by statute? I do not think any man will say they can. They can impair the obligations of contracts. Unquestionably and according to the Supreme Court of the United States in their last decision they may impair or wholly destroy the value of every pecuniary obligation that is expressed in lawful money of the United States. I do not wish, at this time, to comment upon that startling decision; but there is one thing the United States Supreme Court, and the Congress of the United States, and all the armies that can be raised to enforce the edicts either of court or of Congress can not do, and that is to create a value, to maintain a value against the opinion and belief of the person to whom it is tendered. Every such attempt has had "a most lame and impotent conclusion." Thus, on June 17, 1864, under the lead of Thaddeus Stevens, of Pennsylvania, a law was enacted prohibiting under heavy penalties, both of fine and imprisonment, future contracts in gold, the object being to abate the premium on gold, and consequently to assist the value and receivability of paper currency. The passage of the law was followed by an immediate advance in the premium upon gold, which rose from 196½ per cent. to 250 per cent. in less than two weeks, and led to the hasty repeal of the act on July 2, 1864, after a futile existence of fifteen days.

Men may be cheated out of the entire result of their life's labor, and a piece of worthless paper may answer for one-half century of honest toil. That may be according to the decision of the court; but when we look to the future, and when we look to contracts, and when we look to the performance of obligations outside of this country, we shall find such propositions utterly impotent; not only impotent, but discredited and discreditable. They will be as the idle wind that passes men by and they respect not.

I voted to take up this bill, and I shall vote for its passage. I shall vote for its passage to secure what these petitioners demand. No man need yield up his dollar of 420 grains, nine-tenths fine, for a dollar weighing 412½ grains. There is nothing compulsory in that. As I have said before, I do not believe there is a legal obligation to take up the trade-dollar, and certainly, if there be to redeem, do not let us so trifle with reason and truth as to say it is redemption to pay that which has greater value with that which has less, unless this wonderful and magical power does reside in the Congress of the United States to create value by statute. It is legislative juggling with the truth, and sooner or later the people of the United States will find it out.

If Congress has not the power to create values the continuance of the pretense of its exercise can only lead and must lead to confusion and distress, and the practical fact remains that we are or ought to use every endeavor to maintain by some arrangement with the leading commercial nations the full use of the two precious metals co-ordinately to make up the great volume of money for the world's business. That is what I desire to see. I believe that for this, co-operation among commercial nations is necessary. I believe that all the currency necessary for the present hour is here now; and should future experience dictate to us the necessity and the wisdom of passing to the basis of a single metal as our principal standard of value, when that time comes we shall discuss it; but in the mean time I wish my steps and my votes to be guided by the unmistakable light of experience. I must remain true to my convictions until some light shall be given that shall cause those convictions to be changed.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States can not by statute create values, and the attempt to continue to do so will only lead to further embarrassment, distress, and loss.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 5, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

TEMPORARY POLICE FORCE FOR INAUGURATION.

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report. I am directed by the committee of conference to submit the report which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

That the House recede from its disagreements to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN F. FOLLETT,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
JOHN J. INGALLS,
AUSTIN F. PIKE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The committee of conference submit the following statement, under the rule:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8121) to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order during the ceremonies of the inauguration of the President, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended by the conference committee:

If the action recommended in the conference report is ratified by the two Houses the bill will appropriate $8,000, payable in equal amounts from the United States Treasury and the revenues of the District of Columbia, and will prescribe a fine not exceeding $25, in the police court, for violation of rules and regulations that may be prescribed by the commissioners to maintain public order during the period of the inauguration and from February 20 to March 6, 1885.

JOHN F. FOLLETT,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. FOLLETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONGO CONFERENCE AT BERLIN.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back the resolution which I send to the desk and recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to cause the originals or copies of all communications which have been received respecting the Congo conference, and especially copies of the text of the commissions or powers sent by the Government to each of the three American plenipotentiaries or agents, to be immediately transmitted to this House.

Mr. BELMONT. I ask the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from New York why this resolution requests the President of the United States to send the original documents here? Why not request that copies be furnished?

Mr. BELMONT. The resolution specifies either originals or copies, and the text of the resolution recognizes the discretion which always rests with the Department of State in complying with such requests. This resolution I may say, Mr. Speaker, is unanimously recommended by the committee. It is merely to re-enforce a previous demand already made in reference to this subject.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not object to the resolution, except I think it is very unusual and perhaps without precedent to call upon the President for original papers. I would suggest to the gentleman that it be modified in that respect.

Mr. BELMONT. It always remains, of course, within the discretion of the Executive to refuse compliance with a resolution of the House, and the resolution clearly states, "if not incompatible with the public interests" that such a communication as is specified shall be made.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it is unusual, entirely so. Perhaps there is no case like it where the House has called upon the Executive of the United States for original papers.

I move to strike out the words "original or" in the resolution, and if the resolution can be again reported it will be seen that this applies it exclusively to copies.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. I should like to ask if this is a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] presents this report by direction, as he states, of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BELMONT. It is unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that it be modified by striking out that part of the resolution calling upon the President to furnish original papers.

Mr. BELMONT. I have no objection to such a modification.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again reported.

Mr. KEIFER. I now move to strike out the words "original or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York what difference exists between this resolution of inquiry and the former resolution, which I infer the gentleman from New York on the Committee on Foreign Affairs deems insufficient.

Mr. BELMONT. That report was a preliminary report made by the Secretary of State, and it is understood that another report is soon to follow. The House has asked for the text of the credentials to all our representatives at the conference. The answer was not made to that extent. This resolution asks for copies of the powers granted to all our representatives engaged in the Berlin conference, and therefore was adopted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to re-enforce the previous demand. I move the previous question on the resolution as amended.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. BELMONT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF SPECIAL RULE.

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to make a privileged report. I submit from the Committee on Rules the report which I send to the desk, and upon which I ask the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the special rule adopted on the 3d instant as follows: That before asking for objections to the bill or resolution indicated it shall be in order for the debate provided for to be had, and thereafter there shall be no further debate. The Committee on Rules further recommend that the language of the rule inconsistent therewith be changed accordingly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the rule will be read as it is proposed to be amended.

Mr. SPRINGER. We all understand it. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a single change. The report changes the place of the objections by ten members from immediately after the reading of the bill or resolution until after the ten-minute debate; and if any one wants to have the report accompanying the bill read it can be read as part of the affirmative or negative of the debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. How does the amendment affect the right to amend?

Mr. RANDALL. There is no right to amend and there was not in the original rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there ought to have been.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that one difficulty that will arise in applying the rule as proposed to be amended will be the fact that some of the reports will take longer time for their reading than is provided for debate; and in that event we will be cut off in the midst of the report by the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the previous question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I would like to say that I have had no part in this amendment or in the original proposition.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That speaks well both for the amendment and for the original proposition.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Tennessee——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been moved.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] yield to me for a moment? I concurred in this report this morning, and wish to say——

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] was willing to yield to me for a minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would gladly indulge the gentleman from Ohio, but the previous question is demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on his report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (putting the question). The question is on the adoption of the report.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I claim the right of debate under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine has his right of debate, but not during the time that the House is engaged in voting on the report.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I rose in my place in time to claim the right of debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair had proceeded to put the question to a vote and the time for debate had passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state that it has no option; and it does not desire to question the statement of the gentleman from Maine, that he had risen and claimed in time his right to debate under the rule.

Mr. RANDALL. That is under the clause allowing fifteen minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to lose my right to the floor.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I know the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], in the remark he was kind enough to make a few moments ago, intended only an impertinence. That was his sole object. But I do not intend to reply to him in that vein, because there are serious questions involved in the method of conducting the business of this House, questions to which the gentleman from Tennessee would address himself provided he was capable of comprehending their importance. I desire, however, to spend no further time on him.

The method by which we shall conduct the business of this House lies at the very foundation of the public business. Unless we have a right and proper method of conducting the public business we are wasting the public time; and this rule which was presented on the 3d instant by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is only one of a series which I have witnessed in procession since the present system of rules of the House was adopted.

We go on for a period covering nearly the entire session of Congress under a system which obstructs and prevents transaction of the public business, and then when we find ourselves within four weeks of the close of the session—a four weeks which are also mortgaged by the appropriation bills—we then undertake to establish some such hybrid affair as the present rule for the purpose of stopping the clamor of members of this House. We try to crowd in the four weeks which are already predestined to be occupied by the appropriation bills the business of this House which should have been spread over the entire period of two years. We undertake to run Niagara through a quill. That is the effort that is made Congress after Congress since this infamous system of rules was adopted, and the result is always the same. A few men are selected. Those men are allowed to put through a few bills which are of no consequence, because not even ten men can be found to object to them.

Now, that is a substitute for government in this country by the majority, and against that system I uttered my protest and wished to be personally kept clear from the responsibility of it, and to that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] was kind enough to say that my action was an approval of these transactions to his mind. What that says for his mind I leave the House to consider.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate again that this system is entitled to the approval of no legislator. It is false in its principle; it is bad in its results; it only conduces to a congestion of the public business instead of a transaction of it, and for my part I want the responsibility of this whole system, with its outhouses and all, put upon the men who started it originally and who are now undertaking to patch it. And I rise for the purpose of again calling the attention of the House to this system in order that men may understand it, in order that when an opportunity comes again in the next Congress to vote it down men may consider the principle, or lack of principle, upon which it is founded, and not find themselves at the end of the second session of that Congress as hopeless and helpless as they are to-day.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has ten minutes remaining, and is recognized as controlling the time on his side.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, in response to the charge of the distinguished Representative from Maine [Mr. REED] concerning the pertinence or impertinence of my remark to him, I have this to say: that this House will bear me witness that among all of its three hundred and twenty-five members there is not one who has less cause to criticise impertinence on the part of others than the Representative from Maine [Mr. REED]. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Who ever raised a debate here that his remarks were not in it, in season and out of season? As to the magnificence of his intellect, why, probably it would be rashness for any man to compare himself with what that gentleman thinks he is. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] Thad. Stevens was once asked on this floor who was the greatest man here. He responded, giving the name of a Representative whom I will not name.

The gentleman who had made the inquiry said, "Ah, is that so? I had not thought it." "Well," said Mr. Stevens, "if you do not believe it go and ask him; he himself will tell you so." [Laughter.] Tested by that rule, I know no man who would stand higher than the gentleman from Maine, and probably he would stand a few stories higher tested in that way than he would if tested by any other rule.

Now, Mr. Speaker, concerning the disposition of the gentleman from Maine as to these rules, or as to other matters here, some have thought that his peculiarity was attributable to a perverse nature. Others have concluded that art and long practice had much to do with it; but those who know him best give him credit for being the result of such a combination of art and nature as has not resulted in the production of any prototype of him and is not likely to result in any successor. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I am willing for the House to judge what my action has been in the past and what the merits of my standing are upon this floor, and I do not hesitate to say that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has on more occasions spoken here in a way that was critical of others than he has spoken anywhere else, and probably more frequently than he would speak anywhere else where the protection of the rules did not surround him. [Cries of "Oh!" "Oh!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I think that in that last sentence the gentleman from Tennessee struck his natural level. [Applause on the Republican side.] The other heights to which he ascended I perceive now were furnished to him by the gentlemen who surrounded him and with whom he was busily consulting during the few observations which I had the honor to make. It is a great pity for his own reputation that he did not adhere to his borrowed utterances instead of dropping to his natural situation as in the last sentence. [Laugther on the Republican side.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] can improve his utterances by borrowing, I would suggest the borrowing process. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. I wish to inquire whether it is now in order for us to proceed to the transaction of public business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have heard so often the views of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] as to the present rules of the House, that I do not think it is necessary to waste the public time further in connection with that subject, except to say that the other members of the Committee on Rules will cheerfully give him a certificate that he has had nothing to do with the preparation of this amendment.

One word more. I am free to say to this House that these rules in almost their entire volume come to us from a period beyond our own generation; and these rules, as they exist, are in the main those which were adopted by the Committee on Rules without political bias and by a unanimous vote.

So far as my action in connection with the rules is concerned, I have always kept in view the object of preventing what I conceived to be unwarranted expenditures from the Treasury of the United States, and I shall long continue, I trust, to occupy that position.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands gentlemen on both sides as having reserved whatever time they did not occupy. The gentleman from Maine has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say one word in reference to this trouble about the rules, from the fact that having served in this House for several terms I find myself able to state only one thing conclusively, and that is that it is utterly impossible under our present rules for any one in this House to do anything that is really important or to pass any measure that will surely benefit the country. I do not know the remedy. I do know that at the opening of the last two sessions of Congress an effort has been made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and others to annul these rules, so that the majority of this House might do some business. I do know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has fought that effort persistently, and has prevented it from being successful, until to-day we stand here with our hands tied, and we can do no legislation at all.

We met here last night for the purpose of considering one of the most important bills before the House. We were blocked instantly and successfully by the persistency of the gentleman from Kentucky, who angered me at the time exceedingly, as I thought his opposition was foolish and unreasonable. I said more to him privately than that; but to-day I wish to apologize to him, for after I reached home and thought over what he had done I found I had been blaming him for precisely the same thing that the leaders on this floor do repeatedly. It was only Monday last when the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself held us here all day and away into the night simply because he feared the passage of some legislation that did not exactly suit him. He himself blocked the whole proceedings of this House, and I am not the man who should put on airs about this matter. I fear I have done the same thing whenever a measure came up that did not suit me. [Laughter.] But I say that a rule which permits one or two men to block the entire business of this House is destructive of legislation, and prevents the majority of the people's Representatives from securing the transaction of any business here at all.

This new rule which we are about to adopt can not relieve us. We witnessed the proceedings here yesterday morning, when bill after bill without any consideration was objected to and laid aside.

A MEMBER. Not voted on at all.

Mr. HORR. Not voted upon—not allowed to come before the House. The difficulty is, our rules are so framed that a few men in a minority can prevent the passage of any bill that they see fit to oppose. It is too late now in this session for any remedy. We have more work before us than we can do. We shall do well if we succeed in passing the appropriation bills. The rule now under consideration, with the amendment proposed, will prove of little use. You can possibly get through under it four bills in a morning. Under the amendment the speaking will go on for ten minutes before objection is called for; and the rotatory motions which will take place here at intervals will allow possibly from one to three bills to be acted upon—with the best of luck not to exceed five—and many of them will be thrown out by the objections of ten members. I sat here and witnessed the operation of the Pound rule, when I saw this same thing tried; and I never saw a bill passed under that rule.

A MEMBER. Oh, yes.

Mr. HORR. Hardly one; there may have been one or two unimportant bills; certainly no bill that was of general interest.

The difficulty is, when you prevent the majority from doing the business of this House it makes little difference then whether you limit the power of obstruction to one, five, or ten men.

We can get no remedy during this session. I do not think you gentlemen on the other side want any remedy. I believe I am not doing my friend from Pennsylvania any injustice when I say to this House that I think we are doing fully as much business as he desires to see done—just as much as he intends to have done—just as much as a few gentlemen over there have determined to have done. And I am not sure you gentlemen are not right. Many of the bills passed in this House during this session do not recommend themselves to me as of such a nature that I care to have them repeated many times.

Mr. Speaker, we are beyond help in this Congress. All we can hope to do is to pass the appropriation bills, and we have a good deal to do if we do that.

Mr. WELLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HORR. Yes, sir.

Mr. WELLER. Has not the whole difficulty been owing to the superior statesmanship of our leaders? [Laughter.]

Mr. HORR. As the gentleman himself is one of the main leaders on that side of the House I will say that is probably the real trouble. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. WELLER. I am exceedingly glad to have such high encomium from the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time has the gentleman from Maine?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine has three minutes.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I yielded but four minutes, and I have four minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair states the facts. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Maine put any limitation on the gentleman from Michigan, and all the time of the gentleman from Maine has been used but three minutes.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But I yielded only four minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask by unanimous consent, as it was the Chair's fault and not that of the gentleman from Maine, that the extra minute be granted to him.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. KEIFER. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to give me five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I can not, but I will give you three.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I favored the amendment of the special rule when the subject was brought to my attention. I did it not with any great hope we were going under this special rule to redeem the present House from its difficult situation. With all the bills reported and on the Calendar and on the Speaker's table that are important we are likely to do but very little.

I wish to say I was opposed originally to the adoption of the present system of rules. I have in every Congress since their adoption favored some method by which the majority of the House of Representatives could transact the business that was properly brought before it through committees or otherwise. I agreed to co-operate with the gentleman from Maine in the Forty-seventh Congress in attempting to so amend the rules as would make them at all practical in legislation. I favored in this Congress the same amendment, but it has turned out that a majority of this House is opposed to amending these rules.

Notwithstanding the fact the House had it within its power to have adopted the amendments reported by the gentleman from Maine, I am willing we should resort to any scheme or device, or whatever you choose to call it, to give gentlemen here the right to legislate for the remainder. I do not expect we will accomplish much under it, but if we can adopt the amendment it will accomplish that little, at least, toward effecting the legislation which the Congress of the United States is charged with.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I think it fair and proper I should take my four minutes now; and I desire to take them to make reply to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. That gentleman has stated to this House that the present system of rules has come down to us from former generations. I stand here in my place and say that he is mistaken in that statement.

Mr. RANDALL. I said in the main.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I say to him it is true that a majority of these rules are the same as they were before he took hold of them in the Forty-sixth Congress, but I say at the same time the whole system of transacting business has been changed and uprooted. We are not now living on the system of our ancestors, unless the gentlemen from Pennsylvania and Indiana are our ancestors. [Laughter.] I say we have been "cabined, cribbed, confined," by this present system of rules; so we find ourselves to-day in this position.

The Forty-sixth Congress did no business because we discussed the rules, the Forty-seventh Congress did no business because we had the rules except when we changed the rules, and the Forty-eighth Congress has done no business because the rules have put it in the power of a few men to stop all business of the House.

Now, I have said these things once or twice before [laughter], and I am glad to repeat them, for virtue in this world gets on not merely by sound statement but by reiteration of sound statement. It gets on by means of men having the idea driven into them that something is wrong. Everybody in this House knows from the condition of public business that something is wrong. Everybody knows it is a senseless proceeding for a body of three hundred and twenty-five men to sit here for two years and be chained as this body of men has been. I challenge again the gentleman from Pennsylvania to justify such action.

If he says on his part he does not want certain bills to be passed, allow me to say to him, without meaning any personal offense, it is not his measure which is to govern the affairs of the United States; that every Representative on this floor is his equal, is the equal of every other member, and that no one of them ought to exercise the veto power. And yet under this system of rules the veto power is in large measure given to every single member. It is not only the gentleman from Pennsylvania who exercises it, but the gentleman from Iowa, as my friend from Michigan has well said, has won distinction as a leader in this very line of thought and proceeding. [Laughter.] It is just because every single member is allowed a veto power, which the Constitution only allows to a majority, that I have protested and renew my protest.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine has endeavored to controvert my statement in reference to the fact that these rules had come down from former generations of legislators. The whole framework, the very principles upon which the rules themselves rest and in large degree their policy, have come down to us as I stated; and when the gentleman seeks to arouse prejudice in this House against a single member because he stands here and objects under the rule, I say that that member, no matter who he is, would be controlled by the rules, and is himself utterly powerless if he stood alone and without that constitutional power which is given to one-fifth of this House to call the yeas and nays to be entered upon the journals. And I say further, sir, that this furore which is attempted to be raised against individual members who are arraigned because as alleged they seek to obstruct legislation is unjust and unfounded, because a member would be utterly powerless if he had not one-fifth of the House associated with him and acting in unison with him to accomplish his object. This for a moment can not be gainsaid.

I do not want to sweep aside with the little facetiousness the gentleman from Maine is so much at home with the rules as they stand to-day; for I say now that the deliberate purpose of the rules as adopted by the House, and which came from the Committee on Rules with its unanimous voice and with no political suspicion as to any of them, was to protect the people of this country against unjust inroads into the Treasury; and that is the reason why I feel firm and determined in standing against any encroachments which would allow the public Treasury to be unduly entered by measures for which there is no constitutional warrant. The rules in that respect are a protection. I admit, because we are all but human. I feel it every day. We are coaxed, we are pursued, we are talked to, we are got at in every conceivable honorable manner to induce us to vote money out of the Treasury of the United States; and it is well that I and others have this power embraced within the rules to protect ourselves from temptation and to save the Treasury of the United States from the unwarranted expenditure of public money. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate has expired. The question is upon agreeing to the report made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HORR. Let it be again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the report will be again read.

There was no objection, and the report was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. BELFORD. Can we not have that again reported? It was impossible to hear it here.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 151, noes 16.

So the report was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask that the rule, as modified, may be printed in full in the RECORD of this day's proceedings.

There was no objection.

The rule, as amended, is as follows:

Resolved, That each morning during the remainder of this session, immediately after the approval of the Journal, there shall be set apart one hour for motions to take up and consider such bills or resolutions on any of the Calendars of the House, or on the Speaker's table, or bills favorably reported from the Calendars undisposed of, as the member making the motion may designate. And the bills or resolutions so designated shall be immediately considered, unless objected to by at least ten members. That before asking for the objections to the bill or resolution indicated, it shall be in order for the debate provided for to be had and thereafter there be no further debate. If the yeas and nays shall be ordered on any such bill or resolution, or any proposed amendment thereto, and the call of the roll shall be commenced before the expiration of the said one hour, the same shall be completed before the regular order of business is entered upon: Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before that the Chair will ask the consent of the House to lay before it certain executive communications.

There was no objection.

REPORT OF LIEUTENANT RAY—POINT BARROW EXPEDITION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the publication of 2,000 additional copies of Lieutenant Ray's report of the international polar expedition to Point Barrow, Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF POCOMOKE RIVER, MARYLAND.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of a survey of the Pocomoke River, in Maryland; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHARLESTON, W. VA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate for an additional appropriation to complete the public building at Charleston, W. Va.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection this will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I should think that ought to go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the purport of the communication?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, asking an additional appropriation to complete a public building.

Mr. RANDALL. If it is in pursuance of existing law it would go to the Committee on Appropriations, if otherwise, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under the rule this should go to the Committee on Appropriations, but will examine the paper more carefully. It is, however, perfectly competent for the House to make any reference of the communication it may deem fit. Does the gentleman from Illinois make any motion?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not.

Mr. RANDALL. If the proposition relates to an appropriation within the limit of existing law it ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations; but if it relates to a proposition for the enlargement in the limit of the appropriation, it should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause the Clerk to read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows:

* * * * * * *

20. to the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States, other than appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now ask the Clerk to read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which is short.

Mr. SNYDER. If in order, I desire to make a motion to refer this communication to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Is there a public building at that point?

Mr. SNYDER. There is one in course of erection. This is to increase the appropriation.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I think this should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and move that reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman when the Clerk has read the letter of the Secretary.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 3, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to state that there will be required for the completion of post-office and court-house at Charleston, W. Va., and for the payment of certain outstanding obligations on account thereof, the sum of $1,153.30; which amount I respectfully recommend be included in the sundry civil bill now under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations.

Respectfully,

CHAS. E. COON, Acting Secretary.

To the SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I withdraw the motion to refer the communication to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I desire to make a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to submit the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, which related to the question of adjustment of salaries of the disbursing and stationery clerks of the House.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER (interrupting the reading). Is that in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks this is not a privileged report. It will be returned to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

DEPUTY MARSHALS AND SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. I am instructed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice to report back the House resolution submitted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] on the 2d instant, and to recommend that it be adopted. The report is a privileged one. I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the House of Representatives what has been the total amount of expenses incurred under the law providing for the appointment of deputy marshals, chief supervisors, and supervisors of elections, and in what States the money has been expended; showing the separate amounts expended in each State, and also the accounts for such services which remain unadjusted.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. EATON. I desire to make a report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it a privileged report?

Mr. EATON. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report what ought to be a privileged question. I am not sufficiently familiar with the rules to know whether it is or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send it to the Clerk's desk, and the Chair will pass on its character. [After examining the report.] The gentleman from Connecticut submits a privileged report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. BUDD February 2, calling for information relative to the construction given by the Secretary of the Treasury to the act of July 5, 1884, relative to Chinese immigration, has considered the same, and believing the information sought to be of great importance, reports the resolution to the House with the recommendation that the second paragraph of the preamble be stricken out, and, as so amended, it be adopted.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of January 14, 1884, issued, as a circular to the collectors of customs, the following regulations and instructions, among others:

"5. Chinese subjects, not laborers, desiring to come to the United States from countries other than China, may do so on production of a certificate corresponding to that required by section 6 of the act of July 5, 1884, to be issued by a Chinese diplomatic or consular officer, if there be one at the port of departure, countersigned by a United States consular officer, or, if there be no such Chinese officer stationed at such port, on a like certificate to be issued by a United States consular officer.

"6. Section 6 of the act of 1884 does not apply to Chinese persons other than laborers lawfully in the United States. Such persons are by treaty entitled 'to come and go of their own free will and accord,' and when they leave the United States are entitled to re-enter on any evidence satisfactory to the collector that they are not Chinese laborers.

"For the convenience of such persons and of the customs officers and others, such persons who may desire to depart from, and return to, the United States, may enter the United States on production of a certificate corresponding to that required by section 6 of the act of July 5, 1884, to be issued by the collector of customs of the port of departure, which certificate may be prima facie evidence of a right to enter the United States.

* * * * * * * *

"8. Chinese persons who may be compelled to touch at the ports of the United States in transit to foreign countries may be permitted to land under the regulations of January 23, 1883 (section 5544), so far as may be applicable, such persons to take passage by the next vessel leaving for their destination or the voyage of which may form part of the route necessary to carry them to their destination."

And whereas, if issued, such instructions and regulations are in violation of the act of July 5, 1884, relating to Chinese immigration, and are therefore a practical nullification of an act of Congress by one of the Executive Departments of this Government; and

Whereas Congress by the act of July 5, 1884, intended to, and did, by express terms prohibit all Chinese, whether laborers or merchants, former residents or new arrivals, from entering the United States of America without the certificate required by such act and issued by the officers and in the manner therein provided: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to this House, at the earliest possible date, what, if any, regulations and instructions relating to the rights of Chinese to enter the United States of America have been issued by the Treasury Department since July 5, 1884; under what law for the regulation or prohibition of the coming of Chinese to this country such regulations have been issued; and if any instruction has been issued that a United States consular officer might issue the certificate required by the act of July 5, 1884, to be issued by a foreign government, or if any other instructions or regulations such as above set forth have been issued, to specify under what section and clause of any law relating to the rights of the Chinese to enter the United States the same are authorized.

Mr. EATON. This resolution was unanimously adopted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It is simply to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to give information to this House as to the orders of that Department. I think there will be no objection to it. I move the previous question.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Is that a privileged report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is a privileged report. It is a resolution of inquiry, and the reporting of it back under the rule is privileged.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. EATON moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the second paragraph of the preamble, as follows:

"And whereas, if issued, such instructions and regulations are in violation of the act of July 5, 1884, relating to Chinese immigration, and are therefore a practical nullification of an act of Congress by one of the Executive Departments of this Government; and

"Whereas Congress by the act of July 5, 1884, intended to, and did, by express terms prohibit all Chinese, whether laborers or merchants, former residents or new arrivals, from entering the United States of America without the certificate required by such act, and issued by the officers, and in the manner therein provided."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. EATON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF EDUCATION REPORT.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York. I rise to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with an amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 320) authorizing the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1883 and 1884.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1883 and 1884 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 2799) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.; and

A bill (H. R. 5461) to regulate interstate commerce.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (H. Res. 323) for the printing of certain eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late William A. Duncan.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors wishes, through me, to call attention to some remarks made in yesterday's debate by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

I send a copy of the RECORD to the desk with certain passages marked which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. REED, of Maine. All of these other gentlemen have been making similar statements, and that is just what I complain of. Last year I took a stand against the Mississippi River appropriation and I did it upon an indication that I saw here in the House. A proposition was made, a sensible business proposition, that we should content ourselves with the prosecution of the work on the two reaches of the river then under process of construction, to see if the plan contemplated in that work was to be a success. If it was a success, then we could go on; if it was not a success, we could suspend operations.

But that business proposition was rejected by an overwhelming crowd of votes. That satisfied me that there were a great many gentlemen who were more interested in the expenditure of money than they were in the navigation of the Mississippi River. Now the gentleman from Arkansas comes before the House and re-enforces by facts the suspicion which the conduct of these gentlemen at that time engendered in the minds of thinking men.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HISCOCK. * * * I ask the Committee on Rivers and Harbors if they have investigated the question of the amount of money that has been expended for repairs on works that have been done under this plan within the last two years?

Why have you not informed the House on that subject? I assert that of the $8,000,000 which have been appropriated and expended in this work nearly $2,000,000 have been expended in repairs on these mattresses and this revetment work; and yet that fact has been kept from the House, and kept from the country. This committee, with full power to investigate, with full power to ascertain all the facts upon this question, have brought in this bill and attempted to change the manner of doing this work, claiming we must call this Captain Eads to the helm, and that he has some new plan, some new method, that will give success to this great scheme of public plunder.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, in the remarks read by the Clerk the deliberate charge is made that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has practiced concealment of important information from the House, in order to put through a job, "a scheme of public plunder." The deliberate charge is made, with reference to legislation which meets the approval and has met the indorsement of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that gentlemen sustaining that legislation were far more interested in securing the expenditure of the public money than they were in carrying out the solemn pledges and purposes expressed in the bill. Now, sir, I intended last night—indeed, I desired immediately when these remarks were uttered—to get the floor, but I did not succeed in doing so. I intended to call the attention of the House to these gross and unwarranted reflections upon the proceedings of the House and of the committee to which I have the honor to belong. This morning, at a meeting of our committee convened for other purposes, I called the attention of its members to this matter, and for that reason I, instead of the chairman of our committee (who had not heard the remarks when they were made, and who had not read them in the RECORD), was requested by the committee to report to the House its proceedings in the premises and to express its sentiments.

At a full meeting, attended by every member of the committee, Republican and Democratic, that is in the city, except one, my friend General BAYNE, from Pennsylvania, it was unanimously and warmly agreed that these remarks should be denounced upon the floor of the House as——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, is this a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is very little disposed to rule that it is not a question of privilege when a committee of the House by its own action seeks to bring a matter of this nature to the attention of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, we have been anxious upon this side of the House to have time for discussion. I hope that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] may be allowed to continue his remarks and that we may then have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I simply desire, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to the point, because I do not want this proceeding to go on and then when it is finished be cut off from reply.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will have no occasion to complain of any want of fair dealing on the part of the Chair.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I should insist upon the gentlemen having ample time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Well, Mr. Speaker, I make the point directly that this is not a question of privilege, and I ask the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Clerk to read the rule which applies.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE IX.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, &c.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think the point of order well taken. The Chair thinks that this is a question of privilege under the rule just read. The point of order is therefore overruled. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will proceed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors wish this House to know that they unanimously denounce the imputation upon their action contained in the remarks that have been read as utterly base and groundless——

Mr. HUNT (sotto voce). Baseless and groundless.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE (continuing). Baseless and groundless. I would let the word "base" stand if it were parliamentary, for a thing that is groundless is base when it impeaches the character of honorable men.

Mr. Speaker, as for the language of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], I do not wish to dwell upon it or characterize it with anything like passion, though it would require terms somewhat passionate to express the indignation that I feel at charges of this character so unwarrantably uttered. The committee has not a single essential fact but what I and others have stated or what are contained in the public records of the country, which are open to the gentleman, and from which he has drawn the statements of fact that he has presented. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors brought forward their conclusions, based upon these serious facts, and they have been called too radical; yet the gentleman complains of our not dealing with them. Those conclusions were predicated upon the very matters which he complains of as having been concealed from Congress. It is not customary to bring into the House all the details of any case or to read in full the thousands of pages of evidence; but, speaking as a member of the committee, I have myself brought out here what I conceive to be the most startling and striking statistics connected with this subject. Therefore the gentleman, being himself supplied not only with these statements, but with the public printed records giving all the information that the committee has, can find no justification for making the charge of concealment for "plunder" that he does make against the committee.

Sir, I believe it is a just and proper maxim that a good construction should be put upon the actions of men unless a bad construction is unavoidable. These gentlemen seem to reason about the actions of their associates from a low plane of suspicion. Even when those actions are indorsed by their own associates and by overwhelming majorities in this House, such as are cited by the gentleman from Maine as having been the vote upon these previous questions in connection with this matter, they are unwilling to adopt a good construction if it is possible to adopt a bad one. It is only fair to say (and they can take it to their own reflection) that the majority of their associates have perhaps as little confidence in them individually as they have in the great body of their associates in Congress.

Sir, we have no desire to have these insulting and unwarranted remarks taken from the RECORD. We are willing for them to stand as evidence of the kind of criticism these gentlemen indulge in about the action of Congress and the action of a committee of this House. We are willing to stand upon our record, allowing that and the criticisms upon it to go down together for examination and analysis on the part of any who take an interest in this matter.

I want to say for the committee that I have been associated with it day after day, our labors beginning generally before the meeting of this House and continuing in solid session until after its adjournment, this labor having run through a number of months in the last session of Congress, and in the present it has run through nearly every week from the beginning of the session down to this hour. I never met a body of men whom I considered purer, more patriotic, or more worthy of confidence in all the motives and purposes directing their action than this body has shown itself to be. Therefore, sir, in its name, and as a member of this Congress, and as a gentleman, I resent the insults and slanders that these gentlemen seek to heap upon their associates.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pained to think that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should not feel that they have already a sufficient affair on their hands, without undertaking to indict their fellow-members for words spoken in debate. I had myself felt it was enough that those gentlemen sat with closed doors upon this bill, that they absorbed all the opportunity for discussion upon it, without giving to themselves in addition a supervisory power over the utterances of gentlemen who have been obliged to condense into five minutes their views upon very important subjects.

I also desire to express my personal sorrow that a gentleman of the standing of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], whom until to-day I have always felt to be in character and ability worthy of the distinguished name that he bears, should in himself exemplify in his attack upon me precisely the objectionable things which he thinks he finds in what I said, but which neither he nor any other member of this House can find there.

I hold it to be above all things low and groveling for a member of this House to stand up in his place and insinuate dishonest personal motives as having characterized the action of any other member of this House; and I am the last man to do it; for my experience in this House has satisfied me that if I were to undertake to name every member of whom I had any suspicion of impropriety, I should have exhausted the list long before I had covered the fingers of one hand. I am a believer in the honesty of purpose of the members of the House of Representatives. I take no part or stock in any of the flings made against them anywhere, either on the floor of this House or elsewhere.

Mr. HUNT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. REED, of Maine. No, sir; I am now discussing this matter for myself, and I beg leave to be allowed to conclude without interruption.

Mr. HUNT again rose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I insist that I shall not be interrupted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the right of the gentleman from Maine to proceed without interruption.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE rose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I decline to be interrupted, except by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I wish to say that the remarks which the gentleman has just uttered are of a most generous and considerate nature; but I think he will admit——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Now, the gentleman must permit me to finish.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. One moment, if the gentleman pleases.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Very well.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think the gentleman must admit that his remarks of yesterday, whether rightly expressing his intent or not, are not open to any other construction than that he did reflect upon the purposes and motives of gentlemen engaged in legislation in this House. I can not conceive it to be honorable for gentlemen to meditate a raid on the Treasury under the guise and expressed purpose of legitimate ends. The disclaimer the gentleman now makes is entirely satisfactory to the committee as well as myself.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I understand the gentleman's point, and I must be allowed now to go on.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. This shall not come out of the gentleman's time if I have any voice in the matter. I only wish to add that if the language just used by the gentleman expresses his sentiment in regard to the honorable purposes of the great majority of this House whom he undertook yesterday to criticise, then it is all that should be required between gentlemen, and I cheerfully withdraw all that applies to him.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Now I wish to go on further, in order that I may be distinctly understood by the House.

Mr. HUNT. That is why I wished to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will allow the gentleman to ask his question after I have finished.

Mr. HUNT. Let me do it now.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman is destroying the continuity of my discourse.

Mr. HUNT. I do not mean to do that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to say further, I hold it is the right of every member of this House to criticise the motives of other members, provided that criticism is of public motives. If I see a man on the floor of this House apparently going for one object and I think he is going for another, and I think if this House understands that to be the effect it will change their views and opinions, I hold it to be right and proper for me in the course of debate to express my views on that subject.

Now, in the remarks which are complained of I have connected no man with any charge of dishonest conduct whatever. I have simply said, in substance, that raised in my mind the belief gentlemen were more interested in the expenditure of money in their section than they were in true measures for the navigation of the Mississippi River. And I stand before this House upon that statement as a statement proper to be made by an honorable man to gentlemen of this House. I believe no man here can gainsay it. I believe that the language which I used is susceptible of no other interpretation than a fair and honest criticism of the public action of public men taken for public motives; and that I had a right to do. And for the Committee of Rivers and Harbors to undertake to hold a session and sit in judgment upon gentlemen whom they have forced to crowd into five minutes a great discussion it seems to me to pass the bounds of all reasonable human endurance. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNT. The gentleman from Maine will now allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Assuredly I will.

Mr. HUNT. What do you mean when you say (and that is what I wanted to ask the gentleman so as to give him an opportunity to explain)—what do you mean when you say that Representatives are more influenced by a desire to secure the expenditure of money than for the improvement——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Of the navigation of the Mississippi River.

Mr. HUNT. Yes; for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River. Now, in the connection in which you say it, what does that mean?

Mr. REED, of Maine. You can judge for yourself. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNT. The gentleman says I can judge for myself. I say that it is improper, incorrect, and absolutely untrue as shown by the record—that it is an untrue statement made in an improper and uncharitable spirit.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Well, I will simply allow the gentleman——

Mr. HUNT. I wish you to explain it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I simply allow the remark of the gentleman from Louisiana to pass in conjunction with his manner of saying it.

Mr. HUNT. It will pass, and so will you. [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, some members of the House—I do not say how many—in previous sessions when this subject of the improvement of the Mississippi River has been up have asserted upon the floor that the great object of that work was to improve the alluvial land on the banks of the Mississippi River. They have asserted that this great river could not be chained by these engineers. They have asserted that this plan of improvement which was sent to Congress, and which Congress has repeatedly indorsed, would be a failure. Sir, I happened to be one of that number. I never had any confidence in the scheme—never had confidence in the project. But I will withdraw the word "scheme" lest it may be deemed objectionable.

A committee of this House, of which the Speaker of this House was one, and he and the other members of that committee, who were at least honorable gentlemen, brought in a report, after full investigation, substantially agreeing with the views of those members who had opposed these appropriations or this plan of expenditure. They were substantially laughed down when that report was presented. The appropriations went on, but finally time has vindicated them. We waited until yesterday for the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas, in his place on this floor, to advertise to the country, upon his responsibility as a member of the House, that all this work had been a failure and nothing had been accomplished by it.

And, Mr. Speaker, in this connection I will read the language used by the honorable gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]:

> Therefore I have agreed with those who have urged that this incubus of mediocrity of untrained engineering talent in this line be taken off that river, or in some way subordinated, and it be put back to the original plan adopted by Congress which Captain Eads formulated.

This language of his follows the language I will now quote:

> And their calculations are, in round numbers, that the system will cost $150,000 a mile, and there are nearly a thousand miles of the Mississippi River in this condition, and it has two sides to it, and one side is always caving in where the other is forming a bar; you have, I say, a thousand miles at $150,000 a mile, making an aggregate of $150,000,000; and yet they can not point us to any experiment in this departure from the original plan and from reason showing that it will stand twelve months after a single rise.

Now, sir, I know, and every gentleman will know if he will take the pains to examine the record, that there has never been any change in the original plan. Up to the spring of 1884 or the fall of 1883, Capt. J. B. Eads, in his sworn testimony, has indorsed the work of the Mississippi River Commission. Up to that period of time it had his full approval.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a point of order. I desire this discussion shall be confined to the question of privilege, while the gentleman from New York is now discussing the merits of the question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am coming to the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is perfectly familiar with the requirements of the rule in that regard, and the Chair hopes he will observe them.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am coming more directly to the point made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], but it seemed to be necessary I should state this history and these facts preceding what I am about to say in reply to the strictures of the gentleman from Arkansas.

We have now before us the recommendations of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I understand it, interpreted by the language of the gentleman from Arkansas, proposes an entire change in the plan for the improvement of the Mississippi River (the bill does not clearly point it out), and they come in here with this recommendation, and they have not told us wherein the old plan, if there was an old plan which has been departed from—they have not told us wherein there was a failure, but they compel us to grope in the dark for the facts the gentleman from Arkansas has asserted, insidiously, I am almost justified in saying; they have formulated a new plan, and he admits he had and withheld this information as to the destruction of the works on the Mississippi River.

I do not stand here, sir, to make any charge of impropriety against the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House. I will throw over them the mantle of charity, and I believe that only charity can cover their omission in this respect. If that is unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw it.

But when they come in here with a bill, and when a member of that committee charges that this commission which is now conducting the work is an incubus upon the public service, when I know and he must know if he has examined the record that all that has been done has been done with the concurrence of this model engineer who is paraded before Congress and the country to take charge of the public works—I say when the bill comes in and he brings these charges it seems to me it was the duty of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors not only to tell us wherein there had been a departure from the original plans, but to tell us also where and what are the amount of the works that had given way, and what amount of money had been required for the repair of these works.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is now nearly 2 o'clock; we have taken up a considerable part of an hour or more with this question of privilege. I make the point now that it is delaying measures of public legislation, and that the gentleman from New York is not confining himself to any question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks the gentleman from New York is confining himself within the strict limits of the rule to a question of privilege.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have been arraigned by the gentleman from Arkansas by the direction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for having made a charge against his committee which was unwarrantable. I certainly did not intend to impugn the honor of any individual member of that committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is sufficient; let us go on now with the public business.

Mr. HISCOCK. I did not intend to impugn the honor of the committee acting in its capacity as a committee. I can only defend myself from the charge the gentleman has brought against me by going into the history of this Mississippi River improvement to some extent, and by calling the attention of the House to the fact that the foundation upon which they propose to change this plan, and the facts upon which they propose to put Captain Eads at the helm, have been kept out of the House and from the country, and that we have no information upon that point. He says everything is spread on the records. Are we, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to grope through a report to find a letter here or an expression there that may possibly point our way in making an investigation of a vexed question of this kind? When a great radical change is made or sought to be made, and when the purpose and object of that change is withheld from the House, it is the right and duty of every member to criticise it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I must raise the question of order. I submit to the gentleman from New York himself that the whole question that has been sprung has been entirely covered by the remarks already made.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman himself ought to be the best judge of that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already intimated that it was hardly of opinion that the gentleman from New York was speaking to the question of privilege. The Chair thinks that now, however, the gentleman is referring to the question that has been raised, and will proceed in order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Why is it that the gentleman from Arkansas has arraigned me and the distinguished gentleman from Maine on this subject, and the chairman of his committee now seeks to hush us down? Is that unparliamentary? May I be called to account for that expression? Then I withdraw it and apologize. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, they invited this discussion. It has been brought in here as a question of privilege, because I made the assertion on yesterday that Captain Eads, as the pet of this committee—is that objectionable?—the pet of this committee is sought to be placed over all the internal improvements of this great country.

Now, sir, I have but little more to say on this question. I had hoped that this subject might be fully ventilated. I had hoped that I might have time when the bill was under general debate to say some things that I have been compelled to say briefly to-day. I say to this committee who have brought in this proposition that opened the discussion of this question that I shall make no charge against it but what I may establish by the proofs and the record; and if from these proofs and facts I am justified in drawing the inference that it has suppressed a part of the facts bearing upon this question, or I will not say suppressed them, but that your committee has not fully advertised to the House all of the facts in its possession and all of the facts in the possession of the gentleman from Arkansas, I shall continue to assault the committee, I shall continue to make the same expressions that I have heretofore made, and I shall let the House and the country draw its own inferences whether it has dealt fairly with this subject or not. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Now would it be in order to demand the regular order?

Mr. BAYNE. I want to say one word. I shall not occupy much time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] was involved in this question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAMMOND). This is the regular order. A question of privilege is under debate.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe I have some time, and I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] if he united in the direction to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that the gentleman from Maine and myself should be arraigned on this floor for the statement we made?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman knows very well I stated the gentleman from Pennsylvania was absent.

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh! he was absent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I stated that, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, I will supplement the gentleman's remark by saying this: I ought to have known it, because I know very well that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would never have lent himself to any such scheme or any such project.

Mr. BAYNE. I have but a word to say. I am a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I beg to say the action of that committee so far as I know and believe has been in every sense honorable and upright. I do not believe any member of that committee through any personal motive or any motive outside of the public interest has done anything to influence the actions and deliberations of that committee. We have radically differed in the committee as to appropriations for certain streams, and we have differed here on the floor.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] ably criticised, as he always does, various propositions in this bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] ably criticised them; and other gentlemen on this floor have done so. And it was their right to do so. I am one of those who believe in giving the hardest knocks that lie within the power of the human intellect in debate on any matter that comes before Congress for consideration. I have no dread of the criticisms of any gentleman; and if the criticisms of any gentleman point out to me that the measure or proposition is wrong, I am willing to acquiesce in the suggestions he may make. I think that is the only way of arriving at the truth and securing the best possible legislation.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that nothing that has been said here has been in the nature of a personal affront or imputation on the honor of any gentleman in the House. I did not so regard it. Although a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and although much criticism has been made on the action of that committee, I took nothing to myself as imputing to me personal dishonor or any motives other than those which should control my action as a member of the House. I for one believe in the frankest, fullest, freest criticism of all the propositions that may come before Congress; and I shall not feel offended by anything that any gentleman may say respecting any one of these propositions either in the river and harbor bill or any other bill.

There is one thing at least that can be said and should be said in favor of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It has been repeatedly said here that the doors of that committee were closed against members of the House. That is true. But why were they closed? Simply because it was absolutely necessary that they should be, if a river and harbor bill should be prepared for the consideration of this Congress. If the members of the House and if delegations from the various States had been admitted to that committee to make their statements no bill could have been matured by the committee in time to present it to the House. The committee sat from 11 o'clock in the forenoon until about 5 in the afternoon every day except Sundays since the recess of Congress, and a good deal of the time before that. They occupied that time most industriously in preparing this bill, preparing it with such care and deliberation and thought as they could give to it. You have the result of that deliberation and that thought. There are propositions in that bill to which I never can consent. Yet what we did we were compelled to do under the circumstances, if you were to obtain a river and harbor bill at all. The fault does not lie with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for excluding delegations from different States and for excluding members of Congress from coming before them and making their statements, but it is attributable to the short time we had, and to no other cause. Therefore I say, although this criticism is perhaps unfair, it is a criticism I do not object to having been made, because it simply indicates and enforces the argument that gentlemen on the floor of the House should be given as much opportunity as can be given to them to discuss this bill when they could not have a hearing before the committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, if there be no objection, will lay before the House some requests affecting the personal convenience of members.

Mr. SPRINGER. If that will not take up time or require a roll-call I shall make no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CRAIG, for the day, on account of sickness; and

To Mr. JOHN S. WISE, for one week from to-morrow.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WAIT, by unanimous consent leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Amos Clift, there being no adverse report thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. YOUNG. Before the hour is called, I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 2799) in order to move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2799) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall be compelled to object. A bridge across the Mississippi River is so important a matter that we ought not to pass that bill without seeing the amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to make the objection, but now that some one else has made it, I desire to ask whether the operation of the new rule does not prevent the Chair from entertaining requests for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that it does. The Chair will have the proviso in the rule read which states that for purposes of reference unanimous consent may be given.

Mr. GIBSON. Let us hear the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first have the proviso in the rule read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than as herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer such bills or resolutions to committees, or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was the ground upon which the Chair held that the request might be entertained.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call is renewed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE]. Under the rule, the hour will begin at a quarter past 2 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The hour set apart for this purpose is very clearly designated in the rule, which provides that each morning during the remainder of this session immediately after the approval of the Journal an hour shall be devoted to a particular branch of business. The proviso does not modify that at all, except as follows:

That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than is herein provided, but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

Now, sir, I submit that the hour immediately after the approval of the Journal being set apart for the consideration of a certain class of measures which are pointed out, no other hour can be consumed in that business unless that hour, or a portion of it, shall have been consumed in conformity with the provisions contained in the proviso to the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the gentleman's point of order is not well taken. The Chair——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is now endeavoring to answer the gentleman from Indiana upon the point of order which he has made.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is on the point of order that I wish to be heard a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On that point of order?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. On that point of order. I desire to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman with great pleasure.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I simply wish to add a word to what has been said by the gentleman from Indiana. The hour set apart by the rule is a distinct portion of time, to wit, the hour following the approval of the Journal, and is not an hour floating around in the House and following any other business; and my point is that no other portion of time except that specific portion named in the special order can be appropriated to this business under the rule. It is not at all like the morning hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think it necessary to hear further discussion upon the point of order. The Chair very frankly avows that its opinion is taken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was going to second the opinion of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not at all surprised to find the gentleman from Illinois concurring in its opinion. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. We have the morning hour fixed at a certain time, and yet in practice we have sometimes had it at about 12 o'clock at night; and I think that if the morning hour can vary its place in that way this hour may do likewise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was going to suggest, in reply to the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], that under the rule the morning hour comes at a stated time in the day, yet frequently it comes twenty-four hours after the time when it would be due by the clock. This new rule declares that immediately after the approval of the Journal an hour shall be set apart for the calling up of bills and resolutions subject to consideration under the rule. But a rule of the House, which is imperative, declares that questions of personal privilege, or privileged reports, or privileged questions shall take precedence of all other questions, and that their consideration, and the time consumed therein, shall not be taken account of by the Chair or by the House. The Chair has no arbitrary power to deny the right of the House to state and to be heard upon its privileged reports, its questions of privilege, and its privileged questions. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and holds that nothing has occurred since the reading of the Journal but the acceptance and entertaining of a privileged report, or the consideration of a question of privilege, or a privileged question. The hour, therefore, begins at twenty-two minutes past 2 o'clock, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

PUBLIC BUILDING, TYLER, TEX.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. I move to call up the bill (H. R. 5674) for the erection of a public building in the city of Tyler, in the State of Texas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and internal-revenue and other Government offices, at the city of Tyler, in the State of Texas. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $50,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Texas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule as modified by the action of the House this morning the report may be read and debate had before objections are called for. The gentleman from Texas is recognized to discuss this bill for five minutes.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in March, 1851, thirty-four years ago, Tyler, in the State of Texas, was designated as one of the places at which the Federal courts should meet. Since that time the district and circuit courts have met there annually, except for two or three years during the "unpleasantness." Several thousand cases have been considered in those courts. Some of the largest cases, involving perhaps more property than has been involved in suits from any other court, have come up from those courts to the Supreme Court of the United States, leaving there great piles of records which are valuable as muniments of title to thousands of acres of land. Citizens of nearly every State in the Union are interested in the preservation of those records.

Tyler is a little city, but is growing in population rapidly. Not only is it the place of meeting of the Federal courts, but it is one of the places where, under the law, the courts of last resort in Texas meet. It has one of the best libraries in the Southwest. There are three railroads running to and from it, making it very accessible. There are two large machine-shops there, employing hundreds of hands.

Tyler is the geographical center of East Texas, and is the center of the wealth and enterprise of that portion of the State. In the courts held there the business of seventeen or eighteen counties is transacted. The post-office there will soon be made a second-class office. This postal business has to be provided for.

We ask for an appropriation of only $50,000 for a court-house and post-office building. If any objection can be made to this bill it is in the fact that we ask for so little. But in reply to an objection of that sort I would state that building material of the very best quality—stone, brick, and timber—is convenient and cheap. We are only ambitious to secure the erection of a convenient and safe public building, not to build a large and imposing edifice.

Mr. WEAVER. Can the gentleman state precisely the amount of business at the post-office there?

Mr. JONES, of Texas. I can not; but it is very large. The office will shortly be made a second-class office. I think the pay of the postmaster is about $1,900.

Mr. WELLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. If this bill passes is he willing the appropriation should be made in standard silver dollars?

Mr. JONES, of Texas. Oh, yes; perfectly willing. That is the sort of money we like. It is legal tender with us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has expired. Under the rule five minutes are now allowed for debate in opposition to the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire only to ask the gentleman from Texas a question or two. What is the value of the best business building—I mean for private business—in the town or city of Tyler?

Mr. JONES, of Texas. The value of the county court-house, I suppose, would be $60,000. There is a hotel there that has cost fifty or sixty thousand dollars. The best public buildings in the State are located there.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What is the population?

Mr. JONES, of Texas. It is about 9,000 and is rapidly increasing. Three hundred public and private buildings have been erected there during the last year, I am informed. As I have already stated, there are two large machine-shops there; and the place has large railroad facilities.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think the report had better be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio, who has been recognized by the Chair as controlling the time in opposition to the bill, demands the reading of the report. It will be read in his time.

The report (by Mr. YOUNG) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1568) providing for the erection of a public building at Tyler, Tex., to be used by the United States Government as a court-house and for a post-office and other Government offices, submit the following report:

The committee find that the city of Tyler contains a population of 7,000 inhabitants and is rapidly increasing in population. It is near the geographical center of Eastern Texas and the center of the populous counties of Eastern Texas. It is very accessible, having three railroads passing through it, running in different directions through the State and the counties whose business is transacted in the United States courts at Tyler, making the district compact and every part of it easily reached by the officers of the courts with the least possible expenses to litigants, and assuring the greatest celerity in the dispatch of business.

In February, 1857, Tyler was designated by act of Congress as one of the places in Texas for the sittings of United States circuit and district courts, and said courts have been held there ever since.

A statement of the business in the United States courts held at Tyler shows a total number of causes filed from January 1, 1866, to date to be 4,536.

The business transactions in the post-office for the year 1883 were as follows:

Value of stamps and stamped envelopes sold	$5,558 74
Amount collected for box-rent	827 05
	6,385 79
Number of money-orders issued	5,003
Amount received for money-orders issued	$70,996 64
Number of money-orders paid	2,108
Amount money-orders paid	$45,689 91
Number of postal notes issued September 3 to December 31, 1883	438

There is no building at Tyler owned by the United States. The United States circuit and district courts are held regularly there, but in unsafe and unsuitable rooms, as they are liable to be burned, together with the records, and the rooms are not conveniently arranged, for the use of which the United States pays annually about $1,000.

The post-office is kept in an unsuitable building, which affords no protection from loss in case of fire. The annual rent paid for post-office is $100.

The courts of last resort of the State of Texas meet at Tyler, and have met there annually since 1851, which are supplied with an extensive and valuable library by the State.

Tyler is healthy, not subject to epidemics, with a pure atmosphere, and good, pure free-stone water.

The principal machine-shops of the Texas and Saint Louis Railroad are located there, and the machine-shops of the Kansas and Gulf Shore Line Railroad are also located there.

There is an abundance of the best building material, both of stone, brick, and lumber, convenient to Tyler.

The commercial and manufacturing interests of Tyler are flourishing and improving.

Your committee therefore consider favorably the proposition for the erection of a public building for the use of the United States courts and post-office at Tyler, Tex., but, in lieu of the bill referred to them, recommend for passage a substitute [H. R. 5674], which more clearly sets forth, in their opinion, the terms and conditions on which the appropriation should be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate on this bill has expired. Is there objection to its consideration? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the House.

Mr. WELLER. I move to amend by adding to the bill the following:

This appropriation shall be made and paid in standard silver dollars only.

The amendment was not agreed to, there being 1 vote in the affirmative—noes not counted.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JONES, of Texas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING, TROY, N. Y.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I call up for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. 1013) for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office, internal-revenue offices, United States courts, and other Government offices, at the city of Troy, N. Y. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $250,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of New York shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Speaker, I wish this bill to pass simply on its merits, for I consider it in every sense a meritorious measure. Troy is one of the largest and most important business points in Northern New York. The report of the committee will be found to cover the whole ground, and I do not desire to take the time of the House in any further presentation of the facts and arguments in the case, and sincerely hope it may receive favorable consideration. I ask the report of the committee be read.

The report (by Mr. WEMPLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1013) providing for the erection of a public building in the city of Troy, N. Y., make the following report:

The committee have had the same under careful and mature consideration.

The city of Troy is one of the oldest and most flourishing manufacturing cities in the State of New York. It is at the head of steamboat navigation on the Hudson River, and is one hundred and sixty miles from the city of New York. Its population receiving mail at the Troy post-office is 73,500; and an order has just been issued extending the free-delivery system of Troy to West Troy, which will make an additional population of 12,500: total, 86,000.

The rent paid for the post-office in Troy, with very poor accommodations, per annum, is $2,875; the rent paid for the collector's office in Troy is $550; the rent paid for the United States district attorney's office is $237—a total of $3,662.

The number of persons employed in the Troy post-office is thirty-five, not including those apportioned for the West Troy delivery. Lansingburg, Green Island, and Stow's Hill are all stations of the Troy post-office.

The United States internal-revenue office, fifteenth district, is in Troy. This district consists of the territory embraced in the counties of Clinton, Essex, Warren, Washington, Rensselaer, Columbia, Dutchess, Putnam, and Westchester. The collections for the current year will exceed $1,000,000. The number of employés is eighteen.

The office of the United States district attorney is located at Troy.

The number of offices occupying Government buildings in the United States is seventy-one. Of this number there are but twenty-five whose gross receipts annually are as large as the gross receipts of the Troy office. Of this number also there are eight whose aggregate receipts annually are not equal to the annual receipts of the Troy office.

Of the whole number of Government post-office buildings New York has but six.

The leading industries of the city of Troy are as follows:

IRON INDUSTRY.

Number of persons employed	4,000
Amount of wages paid annually	$2,000,000
Amount of annual sales	$8,000,000
Tons of coal used annually	300,000

STOVE INDUSTRY.

Number of men employed	3,000
Amount of wages paid annually	$1,300,000
Amount of annual sales	$4,000,000

SHIRT AND COLLAR BUSINESS.

Number of persons employed	11,000
Amount of wages paid annually	$2,000,000
Amount of sales annually	$8,000,000

In addition to the foregoing industries, Troy has one of the largest and most perfectly equipped mathematical-instrument manufactories in the United States; also large and extensive paper-manufacturing establishments, leather-belting and boiler-making establishments, ale and lager breweries, and a multitude of other manufacturing industries.

In view of the foregoing facts your committee respectfully recommend the passage of the bill, having amended the same by striking out the word "and," at the end of line 11, also the word "fifty," at the beginning of line 12; so that it shall read: "The site and building complete, the sum of $200,000," &c.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate in favor of the bill has expired.

Mr. KING. I ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to go on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not under the rule entertain a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to one thing in connection with these public buildings bills. This bill contains the same provision which nearly all the bills for public buildings which have passed the House for a number of years have contained. The provision to which I refer is as follows:

The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $200,000.

Now I call attention to the decisions of the Solicitor of the Treasury on this provision. Having exceeded that limit in a number of buildings, or having gone on under plans and specifications and expended all the money appropriated in the bill under this limitation, the Architect then submits the question to the Solicitor of the Treasury whether he could go on and expend other money, notwithstanding the limit contained in the act providing for the building. He inquires also whether he can make such plans and specifications as in his judgment the exigency of the service may require. The Solicitor replies as follows:

In the act of May 25, 1882, Congress said to the Secretary of the Treasury, proceed and purchase a site and erect a public building thereon, but you shall not expend more than $200,000 for that purpose. In the act of July 7, 1884, Congress again said in effect: It is true we limited you to $200,000, and we are now of opinion that sum is not sufficient for the purpose intended, and therefore we authorize you to expend $45,000 more. Can there be any doubt as to the intention of Congress? Then it follows that so far as the last acts are repugnant to or inconsistent with the first they substantially repeal the first. In other words, the first law is to be read as authorizing an expenditure of $245,000.

The other question submitted by the Architect is this:

If, however, in the case of any one or all of the buildings named, it should be my judgment that the public officers and the public business to be properly done would require a building whose cost would exceed the present aggregate appropriations, I desire to ask instructions as to whether I may not prepare the plans for buildings at these points in accordance with the manifest demands of public business and without any reference to any limit of cost as fixed by statute.

The Architect here asks in substance if he is bound to consider the limitation as anything more than so much at first appropriated.

He asks if he can not make plans and specifications, notwithstanding they will involve further appropriations, anticipating that Congress would go on and appropriate more. Now I call the attention of the House to this fact, that those bills passed under the supposition that the limitation on the cost of the building is definite and final and that the appropriation can not be exceeded, do not determine the final cost of buildings.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER rose.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me proceed to show in how many cases this limit has been exceeded.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. That is only by subsequent act of Congress.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Oh, yes; by subsequent acts of Congress, but that is expected.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Over which the Committee on Appropriations have control.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This Congress, notwithstanding this limitation, have passed bills for further appropriation of money for buildings on which the cost was limited. Out of the seventy-two bills now before the House there are a considerable number asking for larger appropriations, because these limitations have not been adhered to by the Architect.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I think you are right about that.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. All of the authorities responsible for these public buildings——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time in opposition to the bill has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand there is an amendment pending to the bill reducing the appropriation from $250,000 to $200,000.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Yes, there is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those objecting to the consideration of this bill will rise and stand until counted. Five members only have risen, not a sufficient number, and the bill is before the House for consideration. The Clerk will report the amendment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 11 and 12, strike out "50;" so it will read "200,000" instead of "250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to put in under the limitations the words "and the approaches."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURLEIGH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF ADDITIONAL GROUNDS FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 674) to authorize the purchase of additional grounds for the United States court-house and post-office building at Springfield, Ill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase the ground adjoining the United States court-house and post-office building in the city of Springfield, in the State of Illinois, bounded on the north by Monroe street, on the east by Seventh street, on the west by Sixth street, and on the south by the alley in the middle of the block: Provided, That said additional ground can be purchased, and a good and valid title secured to the United States, for not exceeding $26,000. And there is hereby appropriated for this purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $26,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. The Secretary is authorized to cause the buildings now on said ground to be removed, and the lot inclosed and improved; and for this purpose he may use the proceeds derived from the sale of the buildings, and in addition the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, this bill, I will say in brief, has received the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House and has unanimously passed the Senate. I hold in my hand a report of the committee, which may be read if any gentleman desires it to be read. I wish to say, however, before that, that this property must be purchased before the close of this session, or else the Government can never obtain possession of it at all. The owner of the property has recently died and it is now in the hands of the executor, who is required to close up the estate, which will necessitate the sale of this property to the highest bidder, and immediately upon its sale it will be completely filled up by private buildings, thereby surrounding the Government property at that point. I may say in this connection that there is necessity for increasing the building already there; but, owing to the necessity of appropriations of this character this year I have not insisted upon that. I deem it to be the greatest economy on the part of the Government to secure this land when it can be done so cheaply as the amount stated here—$26,000. If gentlemen wish to see a plat of the property I can show it to them, and it is the opinion of gentlemen well acquainted with the value of property in that vicinity that the price fixed upon this is exceedingly low, and that the Government should avail itself of the opportunity now of getting control.

Mr. CUTCHEON. May I ask the gentleman if this has unanimously passed the Senate?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; and has been unanimously recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, not only of this but of the last House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I opposed the adoption of this rule because from the little experience I have had with such rules I anticipated just the condition of affairs that has already become manifest. I am not one of those who believe that this country has suffered in its past history because the quantity of legislation has been insufficient. It may have suffered from unwise legislation, from hasty legislation, or from ill-considered legislation, but not because the quantity has not been as great as it should be. I am myself more concerned about the quality than I am about the quantity of legislation. The natural effect of this rule is to link interests together and to place one member under obligations to another. There is probably not a member here but has some measure he is anxious to get through.

I do not mean to insinuate, for I do not, that any member will be directly controlled in his action by what he may wish to bring before the House; but I say that the natural tendency of the rule is to place members under a feeling of obligation to one another. This feeling is necessarily engendered by this rule, for when one has refrained from objecting to bills it is rather expected that others will not object to his, and in that way bills are permitted to pass which ought not to pass. Legislation through mutual obligation or by mutual courtesy is not safe legislation. And I think we will not have proceeded very far under this new rule, Mr. Speaker, before we will find that this is exactly the result of this sort of legislation by turns to accommodate members. The whole seventy-two public buildings bills might go through in this way, perhaps. I ask if the country will be benefited by this kind of legislation?

Is this such legislation as should be allowed to crowd out public business, as appropriation bills or the river and harbor bill or other business which requires and should have full discussion and consideration? This is legislation without discussion, except for five or ten minutes, and that really amounts to nothing but to consume so much time. I am, therefore, opposed not only to this rule but to the execution of it. I am opposed to proceeding a step under such a rule.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate on this proposition has expired. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call for objections under the rule.

Four members only objecting, the consideration of the bill was ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. WELLER. I move the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois was recognized as in possession of the floor. If the previous question which he demands is voted down it will then be competent for gentlemen to offer amendments.

Mr. RANDALL and others. Let the amendment be read for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been demanded.

Mr. STORM. There will be some objection here if the House is going to shut off amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table and read by its title a first and second time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs upon the third reading of the Senate bill.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 119, noes 8.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WELLER and Mr. SPRINGER were appointed tellers.

The House again divided, but before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. WELLER, one of the tellers, said: I withdraw the point that no quorum has voted.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF NEW YORK INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. PERKINS. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 2047) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, which was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and is now on the House Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That those persons, being heads of families or single persons over 21 years of age, who have made settlement and improvement upon, and are bona fide claimants and occupants of, either in person or by tenant, the lands in Kansas which were allotted to certain New York Indians, and for which certificates of allotment, dated the 14th day of September, 1860, for three hundred and twenty acres of land each, were issued to thirty-two of said Indians, shall be, and hereby are, authorized and permitted to enter and purchase at the proper land office, at any time within one year from the passage of this act, said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, according to the Government surveys, at not less than $3 per acre, payment to be made in three annual installments, one-third at date of entry, one-third at the end of one year from date of entry, and the balance in two years from date of entry, with interest on said amounts, respectively, from date of entry at 6 per cent. per annum; and the moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States in trust for, and to be paid to, said Indians, respectively, to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within five years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the proceeds of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of one year from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale, in the usual manner, at not less than $3 per acre, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold, together with such tracts as have heretofore been, or may hereafter be, entered, and wherein default has been made in the payment of any portion of the purchase-money, or the interest thereon, as herein or heretofore provided, shall be thereafter subject to private entry at the appraised value of said tracts.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 16 to 20 strike out "in three annual installments, one-third at date of entry, one-third at the end of one year from date of entry, and the balance in two years from date of entry, with interest on said amounts, respectively, from date of entry at 6 per cent. per annum," and insert "in cash at time of purchase."

In section 2, lines 6 to 10, strike out these words:

"Together with such tracts as have heretofore been, or may hereafter be, entered, and wherein default has been made in the payment of any portion of the purchase-money, or the interest thereon, as herein or heretofore provided."

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to say this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, they having given to it careful consideration. I also desire to say that the same bill was reported to the Forty-seventh Congress from that committee. There are only thirty-two tracts remaining of this land. It was a part of what were the New York Indian lands in our State, embracing 1,824,000 acres. All the balance has been sold to settlers at $1.25 per acre. This bill provides these thirty-two pieces of land, of three hundred and twenty acres each, shall be sold at $3 per acre in cash.

The Indians to whom the land was allotted are making no objections to the bill. They were here some years ago proposing through their attorney to accept $2.50; but the committee, in view of the circumstances, thought it right to make the amount $3 per acre and to provide the payment should be at once in cash. The Indians who will be benefited by this legislation are not only, as I have said, interposing no objection, but are wanting it.

The land has been occupied by settlers more than twenty years, during which time they have been cultivating and improving it but have not been in condition to get title to it. It is in consequence of that state of things that this legislation is necessary. All the balance of that great reservation of 1,824,000 acres was disposed of by the act of the President of the United States in 1860, by his executive order and proclamation, at $1.25 per acre. But this was allotted to these Indians who are now seeking to be put in a condition that they may get something from it. This bill proposes to give them $3 in cash, which would be $1.25 from the date of settlement with 6 per cent. interest to this time.

These settlers who are on this land think they should get it at $1.25. But our committee is of opinion that they should pay the $1.25 paid for the balance and 6 per cent. interest; it amounts substantially, though not quite, to the sum mentioned in the bill.

Mr. LONG. What is the land worth an acre now?

Mr. PERKINS. The land with improvements on it is worth probably $15 to $20 or $25 an acre.

Mr. HISCOCK. Have the settlers paid any rent?

Mr. PERKINS. No, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Louisiana rise to oppose the bill?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do. I dislike very much to oppose my friend from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] when he calls up this bill for the consideration of the House. I happened, however, to have been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Forty-seventh Congress, and it was allotted to me while serving on that committee to make an investigation in this matter. I did so, and I reported to the committee that the price of $3 per acre, as proposed in the bill of that session and likewise in the bill which my friend from Kansas has just presented, was not the actual value of that land. And I furthermore reported that the Secretary of the Interior in a former year, Mr. Carl Schurz, had reported against this very proposition which is embodied in this bill. I hold his report in my hand. I furthermore reported to the committee and state to this House that under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior a commission was appointed to go out there and examine into the value of these lands; and I hold in my hand the report of that commission relative to the value of those lands.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that the price fixed in this bill is $3 an acre; whereas when this report was made several years ago—five, six, or seven years ago—the least value of any acre of that land was $3.75, the highest valuation being $10 an acre. Under this report which I hold in my hand the average price of the land would be four or five dollars an acre.

Mr. FUNSTON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have but five minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND. I ask the gentleman to allow me a question. Were you one of the minority of the committee that made the dissenting report?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I was.

Mr. HAMMOND. Who joined you in making that report?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Charles E. Hooker, of Mississippi, and Mr. JAMES K. JONES, of Arkansass. This land belongs to these Indians.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PERKINS. Did you ever know one of those Indians to interpose an objection to this legislation?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It was not my province to hunt up these Indians or their attorneys. I am stating the facts, and I say the price of $3.50 an acre for these lands which belong to these Indians is far below the actual value of those lands.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. HAMMOND. My point is that the hour allotted for the consideration of these bills has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will venture the assertion, Mr. Speaker, that there is not an acre of these lands to-day that is not worth from $10 to $15.

Mr. PERKINS. Is not that the consequence of improvements put upon them by the settlers?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I mean without the improvements. Years ago, when these lands were not improved, or without regard to the improvements existing, the lowest figure at which they were valued per acre was $3.75 and the highest $10.

Now, sir, I say that we should deal fairly by these Indians. If these lands are worth more than $3 an acre, the settlers ought to be required to pay their value to the Indians, and with a view to providing for that object I will offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman that the bill is not now before the House and therefore an amendment is not in order. When the bill comes before the House the Chair will recognize the gentleman to offer his amendment. The time for debate has been exhausted. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BENNETT. I object, and call for the reading of the report.

The bill was laid aside, the requisite number of members having objected to its consideration.

KATHERINE C. B. MERRILL.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is in the execution of the regular order, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] is recognized.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask the present consideration of the bill (S. 2168) for the relief of the executrix of Ayers P. Merrill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of Katherine C. B. Merrill, executrix of the last will and testament of Ayers P. Merrill, deceased, and late of the State of Mississippi, for quartermaster and commissary stores and supplies alleged to have been taken and used by the United States Army, during the rebellion, from the plantations of said Merrill, in the vicinity of Natchez, Miss., be referred to the Quartermaster-General, who shall investigate the justice and legality of said claim and report the amount and value of said stores and supplies taken and used by the Army of the United States, and also what amount has been paid on the same; and that he report all the facts and evidence for the consideration of Congress.

Mr. KING. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. My point of order is that the hour for the consideration of these bills began at twenty minutes past 2, and has now expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour began at twenty-two minutes past 2, and will end at twenty-two minutes past 3.

Mr. WELLER. Twenty minutes past 2, I distinctly understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not responsible for the gentleman's understanding.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then the indicator in front of the Clerk's desk ought to be changed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is taking the report as to the time made to him by the Clerk.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] in charge of this bill how many other relief bills have been passed for the same party to whom this bill applies.

Mr. KING. None.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report of the committee upon the pending bill.

Pending the reading of the report,

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. My point is that the Chair announced at the commencement that this hour began at twenty minutes past 2.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair stated, as he was informed by the Clerk at the Speaker's desk, that the hour began at twenty-two minutes past 2. The hour has now expired.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and refer to the Committee on Claims the bill (S. 10) for the relief of Harry I. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit a report.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WILLIS. As there was a call of committees yesterday, I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to resume the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the river and harbor appropriation bill. The pending question when the committee rose yesterday was on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the harbor of Burlington, Vt., from twenty to twenty-one thousand dollars.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to further amend that paragraph by making the appropriation for the harbor of Burlington, Vt., $80,000. I invite attention to the report of the Chief of Engineers, which will be found in volume 2, part 3, page 2157, in which it is stated that the estimated cost of repairs of the 1,100 linear feet of breakwater recently injured by the storms is $35,000, and that the cost of repairs of the additional 1,000 linear feet of the superstructure, which should be repaired next season, will be about $20,000. Now, sir, the committee proposes to make for that harbor altogether an appropriation of only $20,000. I think that some explanation ought to be made to the House, to the committee, and to the country, as well as to the engineers having this work in charge, of the reasons why the committee propose to appropriate so small a sum. There can be but one reason for it, and it is that we are afraid to pass a bill commensurate with the needs of commerce, we are afraid to pass a bill in accordance with the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers.

The chairman of the committee tells us that the committee has rejected one hundred and forty of the rivers recommended in the Engineer report; but in this bill, which carries $12,000,000, they propose to appropriate something varying from $1,000 each for one hundred and forty-one rivers, so that they have rejected about one-half of those recommended.

I desire to repeat again in the hearing of this Committee of the Whole that it is a waste of money to make niggardly appropriations in the prosecution of these public works. The machinery is there; the plant is there; the annual expenses of employés above the grade of laborers go on; the salaries of the civil engineers as well as the regular engineers continue. All these expenses must go on whether the appropriation is $20,000 or $80,000. If you appropriate $20,000, a larger percentage of the appropriation will go for the pay of officers, the keeping up of machinery, and everything else in the way of equipage, than if you appropriate $80,000.

But, sir, the committee tell us that on the 1st of July, 1884, there was available for this work $383. Last year we made an appropriation of $50,000. The amount required for the completion of this project, which was begun away back in 1836, is $203,000. The amount that can be profitably expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, is $80,000. Yet the committee proposes to have this branch of the Engineer Corps undertake to do this work for $20,000. Does not every business man know that the expenses of the plant and the officers must come out of this sum of $20,000, and that a very small portion of it will be left for making repairs? And it is estimated that for repairs alone $55,000 will be required—$20,000 for the repair of one stretch and $35,000 for the repair of the other stretch.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the best and indeed the only reply necessary to be made to the remarks of my colleague on this subject is that the harbor of Burlington is represented on this floor by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. STEWART], who is now present, and entirely acquiesces in the action of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I ask a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, as modified, to make the appropriation $80,000, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Boston, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $50,000.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to have the opportunity to discuss this bill during the progress of the general debate; but I labored under the same misfortune as many other members in not being able to participate in any of the time, which was controlled entirely by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I shall accordingly be compelled to take such advantage as I can of the five-minute debate to interject, in as condensed form as I may, what remarks I have to make concerning this river and harbor appropriation bill.

As much as any member on the floor I regret the manner in which this bill was prepared and the course pursued by the committee in limiting general debate, and thus preventing a more general consideration of its provisions. I neither approve of the peculiar privacy in which the bill was framed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors nor of the results, necessarily proceeding from such a course, so evident upon the face of their work. It is this state of facts which necessitated the criticisms which have been made concerning many of the appropriations proposed by this bill, and compels me, at this otherwise perhaps unseasonable time, to present certain facts and suggestions for consideration which might have been more pertinent in the general debate, but which the course adopted by the committee, against the protests of many of us, then afforded me no opportunity to submit.

I favor, and I represent a constituency which strongly favors, reasonably liberal appropriations for the improvement of all such rivers and harbors as are legitimate objects of national bounty, and to provide all proper safeguards for navigation and for the protection of our great commercial interests; but I do protest against the provisions of a bill which discriminates, as this bill does, against the important interests of my own locality and State, and against the interests of large sections of this country and in favor of other sections.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, according to their report, have included in this bill appropriations amounting, in the aggregate, to $12,323,700, embracing some very doubtful and some unworthy objects of appropriation, as I believe a careful inspection of the items will show, being more than 35 per cent. of the total estimates submitted by the engineers; yet the flexible theory, or lack of theory, upon which this bill was constructed, while rejecting entirely one hundred and forty of the appropriations called for in the Book of Estimates—one of those rejected being for the completion of the important harbor of refuge at Block Island, in my own State—reduces many appropriations far below the amounts required for the proper prosecution of meritorious works now in progress, and far below 35 per cent. of the estimates and recommendations of the engineers, but appropriates great sums for numerous less deserving projects, and frequently 50 per cent., and sometimes 100 per cent. of the estimates; gives $750,000 for the harbor of Galveston without any estimate at all, and casts millions of dollars into the turbid waters of the Mississippi with but a possibility of any resulting improvement to that wayward stream.

The bill opens modestly, I admit, with the apparent purpose of appropriating 25 per cent. of the amounts recommended by the engineers; and that rule appears to have been very rigidly applied in the appropriations conceded to my locality.

The bill ignores large Government interests and the necessities of a great line of water travel and transportation at Newport, R. I., by a strict application of the 25 per cent. limitation. The work in progress in Providence River and Narragansett Bay, demanded in the interest of a large existing and increasing commerce and a work of national importance, receives but 25 per cent. of the appropriation recommended therefor, that is to say, but $25,000. The same rule is very generally and persistently applied, with but rare exceptions, I believe, to the entire Northern Atlantic coast.

But the liberality of the committee has wonderfully expanded and their conscience has become singularly elastic as they reach those States represented upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and those sections of the country most largely represented upon that committee.

Savannah, Charleston, and Mobile are given appropriations ranging from $85,000 to $150,000 each for works of far less national importance than those in progress in my own State, and for the benefit of a commerce far inferior to that of the city of Providence. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars are appropriated for the harbor of Mobile—50 per cent. of the amount recommended; $175,000 for the Great Kanawha River, $48,900 for the Monongahela, $40,000 for the Coosa, $112,500 for the Cumberland, and $350,000 for the Tennessee, the latter being more than 63 per cent. of the amount recommended; but each of these projects is located in a State represented on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and when we come to the State represented by the chairman of that committee we find an appropriation for the Kentucky River of $200,000, nearly one-half the amount recommended, and an appropriation of $125,000 for the Falls of the Ohio at Louisville!

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to oppose the amendment, and ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SPOONER, it was not agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the word next to the last.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman does not intend to "insinuate" anything.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw any "insinuation." [Laughter].

I insinuate nothing and intend to impute no unworthy motive to any member. I simply intend to call attention to the monstrous inequalities presented by this bill—the necessary result of the privacy in which the bill was framed and the consequent lack of information in the committee concerning the comparative merits and necessity of the various projects under consideration.

Gentlemen who have preceded me in their criticisms of this bill have been accused of raising a sectional issue here; but that issue was raised by the committee itself, when it brought in a bill which invites and justifies these comparisons. The natural and necessary criticisms upon this bill are only such as the bill itself presents to the House. Now, I believe the fact to be, and I can only so reconcile the protestations and statements of the committee with the evidently unjust discriminations made, that the committee were utterly uninformed or misinformed concerning many matters and statistics most pertinent and essential to the consideration of river and harbor appropriations, and to their fair, reasonable, and equitable apportionment.

It is no sufficient or fit answer to these criticisms for the committee to tell us that no sectional issue was raised or mooted in their deliberations, and that they had no intention of extending liberal appropriations to one portion of the country at the expense of another portion. The fact still remains that such discrimination exists and is readily traced, as has been already indicated, and stares at us from almost every page of the bill.

The gentleman from Texas the other day saw fit to refer slightingly to the little State I have the honor to represent upon this floor, illustrating, I think, the need of that same information on his part concerning the comparative magnitude of Rhode Island interests, the want of which by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has resulted in this very unequal, unjust, and imperfect bill. It is this ignorance and its necessary results of which I complain.

It might seem preposterous for me Mr. Chairman, to attempt comparison of the little State of Rhode Island, at which the gentleman almost sneered, with the great empire State of Texas. But if the committee will permit the opportunity, and I will try to seek it, I will make such comparison here and now.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose the gentleman does not want to do me injustice. I made no sneer at Rhode Island, and the gentleman is entirely too sensitive, as there is no earthly ground for it.

Mr. SPOONER. It appeared so in the printed remarks of the gentleman, and my attention has been called to it by several members in private upon the floor.

Texas, Mr. Chairman, embraces a territory more than two hundred and forty-one times larger than that of the State of Rhode Island, and I shall not attempt to moot the question of whether Texas is not larger in area than my own little State. The population of Texas is more than five times that of Rhode Island. Yet all that broad expanse of territory, comprising an area of 262,290 square miles, with its buildings and improvements, constituting the real estate of that immense State, is of an assessed value but little exceeding that of the 1,085 square miles of Rhode Island.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The Committee of the Whole here rose informally, and Mr. FINDLAY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve all points of order.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope we will have a vote now.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to yield my time to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. PAYNE. Give him five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark it again that there has been no disposition to cut off debate in any form, but the rule requires five minutes debate on either side, and when another gentleman rises to take the floor the Chair treats it as an objection and varying from the rule. Therefore the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope, Mr. Chairman, we will get on with the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. The gentleman from Rhode Island stated that a rule had been adopted by the committee appropriating 25 per cent. of amount estimated by the engineers, and that in some localities this rule was enforced very rigidly, while in others an elastic arrangement had been adopted. To show how unfounded this imputation is I will refer to some appropriations as arranged in this bill and give the facts.

The town of New London, Conn., is not, I believe, very distant from where the gentleman resides. The amount appropriated for that town in this bill is $4,000. Now, if the gentleman will refer to the report of the engineers for the amount estimated for that place, he will find it is $6,200; $4,000 on that amounts to 66 per cent. That is rather elastic for a 25 per cent. rule.

He says, moreover, that when we come to other parts of the country, to Alabama, for instance, that 25 per cent. was not adhered to. I ask him to look at the amount appropriated for the Cahawba River, namely, $10,000, and then consult the Engineers' recommendation for that river of $100,000. Only 10 per cent. was appropriated by the committee for that river on the amount which the engineers report could be profitably expended. Is that elastic?

I call the gentleman's attention also to the Alabama River. The engineers recommended an appropriation there of $50,000. The committee have given $10,000—only 20 per cent. Is that elastic? Now look to the Detroit River, in Michigan, and you will find that the committee give the full amount of the appropriation asked for, 100 per cent., being $27,700. Look also at the Ohio River; there the committee have given over 50 per cent. of the recommendation of the engineers.

But the gentleman alluded to Mobile as getting $120,000 in this bill. Now, the rule adopted by the committee was not adhered to when a small amount as compared with the total cost of an improvement would complete the work. That was the case on the Detroit River, and hence the committee gave the full amount. In the case of the Tennessee River, referred to by the gentleman from Rhode Island, the $350,000 completes that important national improvement. Why, sir, $4,000,000, or thereabout, have been expended by the General Government and the State of Alabama on that improvement. And it should be remembered that this is not like the appropriations for many other rivers. Other rivers are navigable and can be utilized while the work progresses, but navigation on this river is wholly obstructed by the Muscle Shoals, and appropriations heretofore made are of no use to commerce, and will not be until the work is completed. By making an appropriation of $350,000 we complete this improvement, and they get the benefit of all the money that has been heretofore expended upon it, and open up the river to a navigable length of 1,000 miles from Virginia through Tennessee, Alabama, and Kentucky to the Ohio River. That consideration influenced the committee in appropriating the whole amount. In the case of Mobile, $240,000 will complete the project. which was estimated in 1878 to cost $800,000, and the committee was influenced in appropriating 50 per cent. of the $240,000, so that in the next annual appropriation an appropriation of another $120,000 will complete the project.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. I call for a vote.

Mr. SPOONER. Unfortunately none of the illustrations referred to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES] who has just occupied the floor help the interests in my own district and other localities, where the inflexible rule of 25 per cent. only of the amount recommended by the engineers has been applied by this bill, and where one meritorious object of appropriation, the harbor and breakwater at Block Island, a very necessary work of national importance which $15,000 would complete, has been omitted entirely from the bill.

But I will proceed, sir, with my comparison concerning the State of Texas. The assessed value of the real estate in Texas is $205,508,924——

Mr. REAGAN. What date does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. SPOONER. Eighteen hundred and eighty. All of these figures are taken from the census of that year.

That is an average value of only about $783 per square mile.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose the gentleman knows that there has been a very great, a very material, change since the date of that report.

Mr. SPOONER. While the assessed value of real estate in the little State of Rhode Island is $188,234,459; an average value of over $173,478 per square mile.

Mr. MILLS. The taxable property in the State of Texas has increased over $100,000,000 in one year—the year before last.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; and we have been increasing up our way a little, too.

Mr. MILLS. Nothing to compare with that.

Mr. SPOONER. We have been marching in that direction all through the past; and the enterprise of our people is certainly equal, and that can be demonstrated, to that of the people of any other portion of the country, to say the least; and I see no reason to doubt that, if the statistics were available, a present comparison would present substantially the same results indicated by those of the census of 1880.

Texas being regarded as a great agricultural State, gentlemen may be inclined to smile at an attempt to compare her agricultural interests with those of Rhode Island; yet I would like to submit a few facts even in that direction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

During the delivery of Mr. SPOONER'S remarks the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER].

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the fifth last word.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate on this section.

Mr. HART. Is it understood that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] proposes to limit debate on the entire section.

Mr. WILLIS. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to amend by striking out the fourth word before the last.

Mr. BELFORD. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BELFORD. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SPOONER. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. BELFORD. I do not want to occupy the gentleman's time. I want him to get in all he can. But it seems to me an extraordinary proceeding to allow a gentleman to move to strike out the last word of a section; then, when he has consumed five minutes, to move to strike out the next last word, and so on continuously. If that is permitted, the gentleman may stand there discussing this bill through the whole time of this session of Congress. I say that such a thing was never heard of in this House before, at least during the eight years I have been a member of it. The speech of the gentleman from Rhode Island is very profitable and absolutely improving to our minds; but I protest against the right of a member to rise in his place and move first to strike out the last word, then to move to strike out the second last word, and so on, and to speak to each motion. I say it is in the face of the rule which directs that a member shall not speak but once on a bill or motion until every other member of the House is heard. I want to know whether the Chair rules you can get up and move to strike out the last word, and when your five minutes have expired that you can then move to strike out the second last word, and when a second five minutes have expired that you can then move to strike out the last three words, and so on? I want to know that, because I wish to get in remarks on this bill myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state on the point raised by the gentleman from Colorado that all this is a very extraordinary proceeding; but there is no rule known to the Chair that prevents gentlemen making successive motions of this kind unless the committee chooses to rise and limit the debate. The gentleman from Rhode Island will proceed.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope now, Mr. Chairman, that we will have a vote.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the motion that I made, and move to strike out the fourth word.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Rhode Island will not insist upon a general discussion in this manner.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not insist upon his objection when it is remembered that the committee have controlled all the time for general debate.

Mr. WILLIS. I submit in good faith to the gentleman whether he thinks the river and harbor appropriations are being advanced by this discussion?

Mr. SPOONER. I do, sir. The provisions of this bill demand consideration such as I believe I am assisting to secure.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman must know that he is not in order in this manner, and I appeal to him in view of the condition of the public business to let us go on with this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. The chairman of the committee thought it perfectly right and proper that the members of the committee should have all the time in general debate. He thought it proper that each member of the committee who favored the bill should occupy an hour in general debate; and no gentleman not a member of the committee was permitted to say a word without their consent. I think we have good reason to be dissatisfied with the manner in which the bill has been prepared and reasonable general debate upon it refused. I seek the opportunity, therefore, by the indulgence of the House, to occupy such time as I can secure in presenting these comparative statistics. They illustrate the suggestions I have made concerning the misapprehension which exists as to the relative importance of different localities and the magnitude of various interests; and I consider them entirely germane to the consideration of this bill.

AGRICULTURE.

It may, perhaps, seem preposterous to compare the agricultural interests of Rhode Island with those of Texas; for Rhode Island is not only small in area, but her agricultural interests, which are of minor importance, are overshadowed by the magnitude of her other industries. And yet what do the statistics show us? Persons engaged in agriculture in Texas, 359,317; in Rhode Island, 10,945; number of farms in Texas, 174,184—more than twenty-eight times as many as in Rhode Island, where there are 6,216.

The total number of acres of land in the farms of Texas is 36,292,219 acres; in Rhode Island farms 514,813 acres; Texas having in her farms more than seventy acres of land for each acre in Rhode Island farms. The farms in Texas average two hundred and eight acres to each farm; those in Rhode Island average eighty-two acres to each farm. The value of all the farms in Texas is $170,468,886. The value of all the farms in Rhode Island is $25,882,079. The average values of the farms in the respective States are—in Texas $979 per farm; in Rhode Island $4,162 per farm. Yet, notwithstanding the very much larger average area of Texas farms—the average number of acres in each Texas farm being more than two and a half times the average number of acres in each Rhode Island farm, and the improved land in each Texas farm averaging nearly double that in each Rhode Island farm—each Texas farm produces, on the average, less than two-thirds in value of what is produced by each Rhode Island farm.

Texas is the great cattle State, and the value of all the live-stock on all the farms in Texas is $60,307,987.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I renew it and yield my time to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, and yield my time to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. WILLIS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair directs the Clerk to read Clause 6 of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House unless he be the mover or introducer of the matter pending, in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not till every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

Mr. JOHN S. WISE. I move to strike out the first word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The pending motion is that submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE], to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPOONER. If I may be permitted to say a word I would remark if the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would be a little more liberal I think we would get along faster. I have no wish to delay the committee in getting along with the bill.

Mr. GIBSON. If the gentleman from Rhode Island does not wish to delay the committee in getting along with the bill, why does he delay it with this quarrel between two States as to which has most population or wealth or business? What has that to do with this bill?

Mr. SPOONER. I was trying to illustrate what I believe to be the fact, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was not properly informed or was misinformed as to the condition of different sections of the country.

Several members called for the regular order.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, it was not agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word, and yield my time to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER].

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair is of opinion this can not be done except by unanimous consent. The Chair has had the rule read and it is to be executed in its spirit.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I will occupy the floor in my time.

Mr. BELFORD. That is a greater infliction than the other.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It is very evident, Mr. Chairman, the clause under consideration proposes a small part of what is recommended by the Engineer Department. The committee recommends $5,000. I call attention to the report of the engineers on page 522, in which it is stated that the amount that can be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, is $16,000. It is estimated that it will require $85,000 to complete this project. Now, sir, at the rate of $5,000 a year it must be clear to this committee and to the country as well that you will keep the Engineer Corps there, you will require the machinery to remain there seventeen years to complete that project, when by the appropriation recommended by the Chief of Engineers it can be completed in five years, and your corps of engineers then can be withdrawn and put on some other work and this expenditure stopped.

It is no economy to dribble out these expenditures in this manner. It is only worthy of the Democratic party, which for seventy years said that appropriations for internal improvements are unconstitutional, and then went to Chicago in 1884 and declared in their platform that they were in favor of appropriations for improving the Mississippi and the other great water ways. If this is not a great water way, strike it out and do not appropriate a dollar. But if it is a great water way, then appropriate enough to keep the work going on rapidly with a view to its early completion. It will cost $85,000 to complete this work, and at the rate of $5,000 a year, as recommended by the committee, it will take seventeen years to complete it; but if the engineers are correct in their estimates that $16,000 can be used wisely, economically, profitably in the next fiscal year, then, I say, it is niggardly in us to refuse to appropriate the money. I therefore hope that the amount will be increased to that which is recommended by the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] really intends to oppose the amendment I shall object to his taking the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I hope this interruption will not come out of my time.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to oppose the amendment in good faith. If the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] rises with the same purpose he is entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman from Rhode Island stated that he desired to oppose the amendment, and therefore he was recognized; otherwise he would not have been recognized. If he says now that he does not intend to oppose the amendment, the Chair will be compelled to recognize some other gentleman.

Mr. SPOONER. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman says that he rises in good faith to oppose the amendment, I have nothing to say.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not think that any question ought to be raised here as to the good faith of a member, except by a full committee. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph of the bill, as follows:

Improving harbor at Nantucket, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

Mr. SPOONER. As I was remarking, the value of all the live-stock on the farms in Texas is $60,307,987, being less than twenty-seven times the value of the live-stock on Rhode Island farms, although Texas is more than two hundred and forty-one times larger than Rhode Island, the value of the live-stock on all the farms in Rhode Island amounting to $2,254,142. Or, to state it in another manner, the average value of live-stock on each Rhode Island farm is just about two and a half times greater than the average value of live-stock on each Texas farm.

But let us refer to those interests which come a little nearer the subject-matter of this bill. The total exports of cattle, sheep, and swine, from all the customs districts of Texas, in 1880, amounted in value to $418,552. And yet the great lines of steamers which ply back and forth from the city of Providence carry loads of merchandise daily greater in value than that total annual export from Texas.

Mr. OCHILTREE. Will the gentleman from Rhode Island allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. OCHILTREE. Do you claim the exports from all the customs districts in Texas amount to only the sum you have named?

Mr. SPOONER. I speak now of the exports of cattle, sheep, and swine only, which represent the great industry of Texas.

FISHERIES.

In the fisheries in Texas 601 persons were employed; in Rhode Island, 2,310. The value of the annual product in Texas was $128,300; in Rhode Island, $880,915; that is to say, with her great line of seacoast as compared with that of the State of Rhode Island, the total value of the product of the fisheries in Texas was only about one-seventh the value of those in Rhode Island, and the value of the same per capita to the persons employed less than four-sevenths in Texas of what it was in Rhode Island.

MANUFACTURES.

I now come to those industries in my own State, to which I may refer with just pride. From an unwilling soil the prudent and industrious farmers of Rhode Island have wrung such favorable results as I have indicated as the fruits of intelligent, thrifty agriculture; from her inland waters and the stormy Atlantic her hardy, venturesome fishermen have gathered comfortable support, competence, or fortune; her commerce has sailed on every sea and to every clime; her sons have achieved success and attained prosperity in every direction where intelligence, enterprise, and indomitable perseverance could carry them, and despite unpropitious circumstances have erected within her narrow boundaries a State great in the magnitude of her varied interests and diversified industries. In manufactures Rhode Island stands pre-eminent. Although, by the census of 1880, Texas appears to have had 2,996 manufacturing establishments and Rhode Island only 2,205, the total capital invested therein in Texas was less than one-eighth of the capital so invested in Rhode Island, and the value of the total annual products thereof less than one-fifth in Texas of the value of the same in Rhode Island, while the wages paid in all such establishments in Texas amounted to less than one-sixth of such wages in Rhode Island.

COTTON MANUFACTURES.

Rhode Island is the second cotton-manufacturing State in the Union—second only to Massachusetts—with an invested capital therein, in 1880, of upward of $28,000,000, being more than three times the amount of the total capital of all the manufacturing establishments of Texas; paying annual wages therein of nearly five and a half millions of dollars; with an annual product of the value of nearly $23,000,000, and of greater value than the entire products of all the manufactures of Texas; employing more than one and three-quarter million spindles and consuming more than 81,000,000 pounds of cotton annually.

SHIPPING.

Rhode Island, in 1880, had a larger number of sail vessels than Texas, with a tonnage more than double that of Texas; she had twice the number of steamers that Texas had, with a total tonnage nearly five times greater; and her commerce and commercial interests far exceeded those not only of Texas, but of many of the States which receive very much larger consideration in this bill.

I am not seeking to make any invidious comparisons, and I regret the necessity which has compelled me to draw attention to these statistical facts, so suggestive in their proper application. They illustrate the merits of the respective claims for just and reasonable appropriations by this bill, based, as all such claims should be, upon the material business and commercial interests in whose behalf alone they can properly be demanded.

I do the committee the justice to believe that if they had known and appreciated these facts, which, with their proper deductions, I am attempting to impress upon them, as thoroughly as they understood the requirements in their own States, they would not have brought in this incongruous bill, nor recommended such grossly disproportionate appropriations as it contains. I have no design to draw any comparison unfavorable to the State of Texas; my attention was specially directed to that State by reason of the reference of the gentleman [Mr. REAGAN] to Rhode Island, and on account of the enormous appropriation proposed by this bill for the harbor of Galveston, so disproportionate to the existing commerce of that port. I might have illustrated the same argument by reference to other equally suggestive statistics.

The last official report shows that of all the States in the Union but sixteen had a larger number of vessels, June 30, 1884, than Rhode Island; and that even among those sixteen there were three States each of which, although credited with a larger number of vessels than Rhode Island, was her inferior in total tonnage; and, which may seem more surprising, that of the fourteen States represented on the committee which reported this bill there are six neither of which had half as many vessels nor half the amount of total tonnage which Rhode Island possessed, and two of the six States last referred to appear to have had no vessels whatsoever.

The foreign commerce of Providence is not large; it is very small in comparison with her domestic commerce. Yet I find that in the last fiscal year the duties collected on imports at Galveston amounted to only four-fifths of the amount collected at Providence; at Savannah and Mobile, respectively, less than one-third as much as at Providence, and at Charleston but one-fifth as much. Indeed, in only two customs districts or ports south of Baltimore, namely, at New Orleans and Key West, was so large an amount of such duties collected as at Providence. I fear that many of you gentlemen from other States but little appreciate the magnitude of our varied interests, of which our commerce forms no insignificant part.

Not only my own State, but all Central New England, is largely dependent upon that great channel of commerce, through Narraganset Bay and Providence River to the harbor of Providence for the convenient and economical receipt of those vast supplies which their people and their manufacturing industries consume and for exporting their immense manufactured products. By reference to the latest available statistics I find that during the year 1883 the number of vessels arriving at and sailing from the port of Providence was 17,104, with a total tonnage of 4,522,768 tons, and transporting 1,539,554 tons of freight and 549,711 passengers, including in the freight brought during that year to said port 952,747 tons of coal, 1,314,565 bushels of grain, 4,676 barrels of flour, 38,860 bales of wool, and 221,897 bales of cotton—more than three times as much cotton as was shipped from Mobile by vessels during the year 1884.

Regular lines of steamers run between Providence and New York, Philadelphia, Norfolk, and Baltimore, transporting great quantities of freight, and a portion of them conveying many thousands of passengers annually through that great artery of commerce and of inland intercommunication extending from Providence to the ocean. The project for the improvement of that great water way is of national importance; and its progress and completion, to secure safe and sufficient facilities for the commerce which seeks that route, demand the earnest and considerate attention of Congress.

I trust that this and the other important river and harbor improvements in Rhode Island, as well as throughout the country, may receive just recognition; that, by proper amendments, the monstrous inequalities of this bill may be corrected, and that we may be able to finally complete and pass a river and harbor appropriation bill which will commend itself to our own good judgment and to the intelligent judgment of the country.

I will print in the RECORD a few statistics, presenting in a comprehensive form some of the facts and figures to which I have referred, and illustrative of the suggestions I have attempted to impress upon the committee and the House:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Rhode Island has the floor. Am I correct in that?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman from Rhode Island rose to speak to an amendment which he had proposed, and the Chair decided that he must confine his remarks to the subject-matter before the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. Then, as I understand it, all the Chair can say to the gentleman from Rhode Island under the rule is that he shall proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As to whether the gentleman's remarks are apt and proper, the Chair of course can not rule on that question.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair has decided that the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] must confine himself to the subject under consideration.

Mr. CANNON. That is, that he must proceed in order; but I suppose the gentleman from Rhode Island is to judge whether his remarks are in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair must decide whether the gentleman is in order or not. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] will proceed in order.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, what I have said by way of comparison between my own State and the State of Texas, and of the appropriations made for each, is what might be said of almost all appropriations proposed to be made by this bill for improvements in the New England States, as compared with those for other sections of the country represented largely upon this floor by the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Let me give, in illustration of this, some commercial statistics.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman is not conforming to the rule—not discussing the question before the committee. That question is in reference to the improvement of the harbor of Nantucket, and the Chair is willing to hear the gentleman from Rhode Island on his amendment. But, as the point of order has been made, the Chair must insist that the gentleman shall proceed in order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. If I understand the ruling of the Chair, no member can proceed in discussion of a motion here unless his line of discussion conforms to the judgment of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). What is the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] makes?

Mr. CANNON. I am trying to find out whether I understand the ruling of the Chair. I understand the Chair to hold that he is to judge of whether a gentleman is proceeding in order and confining himself to the amendment before the House.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). Does the gentleman from Illinois rise to a parliamentary inquiry or to a question of order? If he rises to a parliamentary inquiry, he will please state it.

Mr. CANNON. I want to find out the scope of the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair is of opinion that a point of order must be submitted in the first instance to the decision of the Chair; but it is in the power of the Committee of the Whole, upon an appeal, to reverse that decision. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman occupying the floor must speak to the clause now before the committee, and unless he does so he is out of order.

Mr. SPOONER. Do I understand the Chair to rule that I am not permitted by way of illustration to draw a comparison as between certain ports, or certain sections of this country, or certain States, in order to point the significance of my remarks?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair will say to the gentleman from Rhode Island that if he will, in good faith, state to the committee that he intends this line of discussion for the purpose of illustrating his remarks in regard to this clause he will be in order, and the Chair will hear him to that extent.

Mr. SPOONER. Why should I alone be required to allege good faith?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object to the ruling of the Chair that the gentleman from Rhode Island must make a declaration of his good faith.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman from Maine has not the floor unless he rises to a question of order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. My point is that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole has not the right to require a gentleman on this floor to make a statement in regard to his good faith. That is presumed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). If the gentleman does not desire to make the statement the Chair will not insist upon it. The Chair believes the Committee of the Whole will certainly bear him out in holding that the gentleman from Rhode Island is not proceeding in order. If the Committee of the Whole were compelled to be subject to proceedings of this kind, all possibility of ever terminating business in Committee of the Whole would be at an end. Therefore the Chair thinks the gentleman ought to confine himself to the subject under consideration; and in asking him to do so the Chair believes he is discharging his duty as chairman of the Committee of the Whole. If the gentleman from Rhode Island desires to proceed in order the Chair will hear him.

During the delivery of Mr. SPOONER'S remarks, the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The point is this: This paragraph provides for an improvement which is located in the State of Massachusetts, while the gentleman from Rhode Island is giving us a dissertation on the State of Rhode Island. He is not speaking to the proposition before the House, and therefore is not in order.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee will get through sooner by permitting the gentleman from Rhode Island to proceed.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall endeavor to be heard before we get through with the bill, whether at this stage or at some other. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair will ask the Clerk to read clause 5 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that under that rule the gentleman from Rhode Island must either confine himself to the discussion of the amendment in relation to this Nantucket improvement or else yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman must be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment that he may offer, but that to be in order under the rule his remarks should be directed to the paragraph under consideration. The Chair is aware that discussions have been frequently allowed on motions to strike out the last word, but such discussions, to be in order, must be upon the subject-matter before the committee at the time. The gentleman from Rhode Island is proceeding to discuss matters which are not before the committee at this time, and the Chair therefore thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall not object to the ruling, Mr. Chairman, if it is applied with the same force to other members. So far it has not been.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SPOONER, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Newburyport, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $50,000.

Mr. LONG. I move to amend by inserting after the clause just read the following:

Improving harbor at Hingham, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $6,000.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that this amendment, being a substantial one, will not be considered out of order. At the last session Congress ordered a survey of Hingham Harbor with reference to the continuation of the improvements there. The report of the engineers was made as promptly as possible, but did not reach this House until the day on which the bill now pending was reported. The improvements necessary in the channel are a continuation of the removal of shingle and gravel, a continuation of certain dredging, and a continuation of the removal of certain ledges, at an estimated cost of some $18,000, with the effect of relieving a transportation which involves the carriage of hundreds of thousands of passengers and large quantities of freight.

The engineer reports that the further improvement will be of great benefit and will require a comparatively small expenditure, and that in his opinion the harbor is worthy of improvement. I take it that if this report had come to the committee before this bill had been reported there would have been no hesitation whatever in reporting a certain portion of the amount recommended by the engineers. This is not a question which I propose to argue. It is not a case in which I propose to solicit anything from the committee. I simply submit this to the House as a perfectly proper case for the amendment of the bill, and I do not believe the committee will oppose the proposition. This amendment contemplates an appropriation of one-third of the sum recommended by the engineers.

Mr. WILLIS. This amendment is for a harbor upon which at the time the committee was not in session and there was no report. Therefore that committee have never considered this improvement. We have not condemned it, nor do I know they have approved it. It is like one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty other improvements for which surveys have been asked and reports made, but except in the case of one or two they have not been brought before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

In my State of Kentucky I may say there were three or four reports, but the committee determined in view of the shortness of time they would not consider them, although, unlike this, they were before the committee. The committee expect at its next session to take up all these reports, when they will have time to consider the facts upon which they are based.

I ask the gentleman to consider that these reports have not been before the committee, and to wait until they can come up in their order, when the committee will have full time to act upon them.

Mr. LONG. I recognize the position in which the committee are placed as stated by the chairman. If this were a personal matter I would not hesitate to withdraw my request, but this is a matter affecting the interests of the constituency I represent. To them it is a question of having an improvement made now, as it ought to be, or waiting a year and a half. It is not their fault that the report of the engineer was not in sooner. It is not their fault that this provision was not in the bill when originally reported. I should not do my duty to them if I did not ask the House on the recommendation of the engineer who was charged to make the survey and report and who has reported favorably, to embody his report in legislation.

I appreciate the fact the committee has not had time to consider this matter, but yet this report has been before the House and committee since the 20th of January last. If the committee are unable to determine a little petty matter of this kind, certainly the House are able.

As I said before, I do not propose to argue the matter or tease the committee or House, but simply to present the matter to the consideration of the House.

Mr. WILLIS. Just one word. In the last river and harbor bill all surveys were submitted to the Chief of Engineers to state as to whether they were worthy of improvement, and consequently whether they were of public necessity. Now, this report has not been before our committee at all. There are one hundred and forty others which are in the same position, and upon the hasty examination I have made at this moment I find the condition upon which appropriations were to be made are not fulfilled in this case. The engineer, Major Raymond, in his report—it is a part of Boston Harbor—says there is a channel which is used by quite a number of vessels. It has been much improved by the United States. The further improvement desired will probably be a great benefit and require but comparatively a small expenditure. I am of opinion the harbor is worthy of improvement. But he does not say that it is of public necessity. Those two conditions were required of all these surveys.

So this is a matter which has not only not been before the committee, but had it been before the committee it would not have come up to the measure prescribed by the House for all similar improvements, that they should not only be worthy of improvement, but they should be a public necessity. It only illustrates the necessity of having time to look into all these matters.

Mr. LONG I leave it to the House.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 61.

So the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving national harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. OATES. I move to strike that out.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman will withhold his motion until the report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors can be made.

Mr. OATES. I will withhold my motion, then, for that purpose, but with the understanding I shall make it again if I need it.

Mr. STONE. I offer the following substitute for the paragraph which has been read, and I do it by instruction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving national harbor of refuge of first class at Sandy Bay, Cape Ann, Massachusetts, $100,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation or any previous appropriation shall be expended until a new board of three engineers, one of whom shall be a resident engineer of the district, to be detailed immediately by the Secretary of War, shall decide that this point is the best location on the coast for such a harbor that shall serve all the uses for which it may be needed

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAMMOND). The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. But I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I have watched the reading of this bill with a view to offering an amendment when Plymouth Harbor was reached, but I think it must have been overlooked, for I certainly did not hear the reading by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Clerk read the lines in which Plymouth occurs, and no point was made by any one, after which the next lines were read by the Clerk until he reached line 36, when the gentleman from Alabama moved to strike out lines 33, 34, and 35, and yielded to have read this proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and the gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is wholly unnecessary. I am in favor of liberal and reasonable appropriations to improve the water ways of this country, but I am not in favor of Congress embarking in the expenditure of money for any improvement which has been condemned by a board of engineers.
